To My Bird "Rye."

O birdie Rye, what makes you try
So sweet a song to sing?
Do you not sigh through all the sky
To sweep with dashing wing?

I wonder how across your throat
The vocal-cords are strung;
For such a note man never wrote,
Nor woman ever sung.

What are the fancies of your brain?
What the emotions strong,
That try in vain escape to gain
And shape themselves in song?

How is it that on darkest days
No grief your soul annoys,
To quench those lays of thrilling praise
That speak of matchless joys?

Since thou such ravishment canst fling
Through gloomy prison bars,
How wouldst thou sing on airy wing,
Bound only by the stars?

To call you homely were too bold,
It might your feelings hurt,
To now be told that lacking gold,
They tinged your back with dirt.

But, Rye, a bodily defect
Renders the song more sweet;
Milton was blind, you recollect,
And Byron had club-feet.

A cleanly cage, a cup of seed,
And water from the spring,
Are all you need to be indeed
As happy as a king.

Teach me thy cheerfulness of heart,
Thy purity of soul,
And thus impart the blessed art
Ill nature to control.

O, teach my prisoned soul to sing
The songs that angels share,
That when its cage dissolves with age
It may be welcome there. B.

MISS DOROTHY'S MATCH-MAKING.

"I declare to goodness, Robert," Miss Dorothy said, rubbing her nose in a way peculiar to her, "I don't know what you will do unless you get married yourself!"

Robert Ackerman looked at his sister in mild remonstrance as he said, gently, "Marry! I! You forget, Dorothy."

Dorothy's face softened. Under the daisies in the village cemetery slept a little blue-eyed girl, who had been betrothed to her brother eighteen long years before, and died one week before the wedding-day.

"It is so long ago!" she said, apologetically.

"Yes," her brother said, sighing; "and I am too old to begin a new life. Forty-three in December, Dorothy!"

"Well," said Miss Dorothy, tartly, "I am five years older, and I intend to marry John Sanderson in three months. Now, Robert," —this very coaxingly—"there is Martha Gaines."

"Don't trouble yourself to pick out my wife," her brother said. "I have no intention of marrying, and certainly no desire to marry Martha Gaines."

He left the breakfast-table abruptly as he spoke, and went to his study. Miss Dorothy rubbed her nose vigorously.

"Men are so unreasonable," she thought. "Robert must have some one to keep house for him when I go. And Martha Gaines is the best housekeeper in Meadowville."

The idea of Martha Gaines presiding over the china closet and linen chests that had been her life's delight, until Cupid came to win away the old maid's attention, became more and more agreeable to Miss Dorothy as the morning wore away.

"I'll just give Martha a hint," she finally concluded. "Anybody can twist Robert round a finger if they only half try."

It was a speech founded on long experience, for Miss Dorothy had ruled with undisputed sway over her brother and his belongings for many long years. They were people of position in Meadowville. Their house was large, well-furnished in old-fashioned style. With good servants well trained under her own severe discipline, ample means, and a brother who never found fault, Miss Dorothy's housekeeping had certainly had few thorns.

But when she consented to become the wife of the curate of Meadowville, the transfer of her power and privileges became a weighty burden. But one solution seemed possible. Her brother must marry some steady, middle-aged spinster, who would keep up the prim neatness and the hundred fussy details of Miss Dorothy's domain.

Miss Martha Gaines, a vinegar-faced, sharp-voiced woman, of limited income, and unlimited energy and temper, proved to be smilingly willing to take Miss Dorothy's hints in good part. Indeed, one word leading to another, they arranged trousseau, wedding, and bridal tour, before they separated.

It had been a very satisfactory afternoon to Miss Dorothy, and she came home to tea in a placid frame of mind.

Her brother, after lunch, had found himself unequal to his usual afternoon's reading, and strolled down a shady lane in the direction of the church. Was it his sister's suggestion that had so brought back to his memory the sweet baby face of his young betrothed that he sought her grave? for of late years he had not been very often to the secluded corner where Susan Desmond slept, in the shade of a great oak tree.

He walked slowly, musingly, his eyes on the ground, till he was close to the grave. Then he looked up, and reeled back as if he would fall. Close to the grave, one little hand resting on the marble head-stone, was a girl of seventeen or eighteen, dressed in white, with a wide straw hat that shaded Susie's great blue eyes, Susie's long, fair curls.

Robert Ackerman felt as if he had lost his reason. His voice was hoarse and strained as he said: "Who are you, child?"

"I am Susan Desmond," said a low, sweet voice. "It is the name on the stone here. That Susan Desmond was my aunt, who died when I was a baby. Papa thinks I look like her."

The explanation was given with childlike frankness and simplicity, and gradually the suffocating throbs of Robert's heart became quiet, and his voice was natural, and had its habitual gentleness, as he said, "I knew your father well before he left Meadowville, and I knew your aunt. You may have heard of Robert Ackerman?"

"Who was to have married Aunt Susan?"

"Yes, dear child. You are like her—very much like her. Are you staying at Meadowville?"

"Yes. I have been ill. Not very, very ill; but"—and she gave a gleeful laugh—"the doctor says I must go to the country, and not study so hard. So I am living with papa's cousin, Miss Martha Gaines."

"Ah, yes. Well, you must let me come to see you sometimes for your father's sake."

"I shall be very glad to see you," said Susan, frankly, thinking this was the dearest old gentleman she had ever seen.

He chatted with her a little longer, and then walked with her to the gate of her cousin's cottage, but would not then go in.

"I will come soon to see you," he promised as he left her.

But he said nothing to Dorothy of this encounter, feeling that a sacred chord of memory had been touched, and shrinking from commonplace remarks upon it. The next day Miss Dorothy went to the city to attend to her wedding purchases, and to visit a relative. She left most minute directions with her servants for Robert's comfort, and his heart was moved with a guilty disloyalty.

He was a man of sensitive refinement, a gentleman in the truest sense of the word; while his sister, without being vulgar, was what the Meadowvillians called a "stirring woman," full of life and bustle, of overflowing energy, and an incessant talker.

Miss Dorothy had been in the city but a few days when a letter from Meadowville filled her heart with elation. It was signed "Martha Gaines," and that maiden wrote:

"Your brother comes over nearly every day. I suppose he's a little lonesome while you are away, and he usually stays to tea. I've got a lodger this summer, a daughter of a cousin of mine in the city. She's only a little girl, but she plays and sings, and your brother likes to hear her. He's very attentive; sends flowers and fruit, and brings books, though, between you and me, Dorothy, I'm no hand for books, nor never was. Still, Philip's little girl seems to like to read, and it keeps her out of mischief. Girls are always in mischief."

Every week there came a long, exulting letter from Miss Gaines to her dear friend, Dorothy, until the time was drawing near for the elderly spinster's wedding. All her wedding garments were made, marked, and neatly packed, when she received a letter from her brother:

"Wait until Wednesday and I will be your escort to Meadowville."

This curt epistle had been written after a day of great moment to Robert Ackerman. He had gone quite early in the morning to the post-office, and returning, passed the cottage of Miss Gaines. He had sometimes loitered a little at that hour to chat with the ladies, as they trimmed the garden flowers, but on that day he paused and caught his breath, as an excited voice rang out upon the air—the voice of Martha Gaines—saying, "You are an impudent little brat, and I'll send you home. How dare you set up to teach me how to treat my husband?"

A low, sweet voice answered, "You need not be so angry, Cousin Martha. I only said I thought Robert Ackerman deserved a wife who loved him."

"Fiddle-faddle—love! You sentimental school-girls talk such arrant nonsense. Robert Ackerman is a mooning old bachelor who wants a wife to manage him and keep his house."

The sweet voice rang out more clearly.

"Robert Ackerman is a noble, true gentleman, a man of honor—a man to love! And if he marries, he wants a wife to love him, to make his life glad and bright."

"My good gracious!" gasped the astonished old maid.

"You think more this minute," continued Susan, "of his house, his money, his carriage and his table-linen than you do of him?"

"Well, suppose I do. Perhaps you would like to marry him yourself?"

"He would never think of such a thing; I am only an insignificant school girl, to whom he is kind. But if I did marry him it would be for love, and not for his money!"

Here the sweet but excited voice broke in a sob, and Susan fled from the battle-field.

Robert Ackerman walked home very slowly. For many weeks, ever since that meeting in the cemetery, he had felt as if his lost love, the hope of his young manhood, had been restored to him. Every hour's intercourse with Susan brought back the long-buried dream of happiness more vividly. But he had crushed down all hope. Never could he link that bright, just dawning life with his sad, memory-freighted one. But this morning's experience gave him a new hope—a hope that made his breath come thickly, his heart throb suffocatingly. He could not bear such suspense long, and in the afternoon he wandered to a spot in the woods where Susan had often brought her needlework, and where Miss Martha's keen eyes had never fallen upon the two as they chatted by the hour of books, travel, and so forth. As he expected, he found Susan there, but she was pale and shy, had evidently been weeping, and shrank from him as she had never done before.

Very gently, very tenderly, he wooed the sweet, blue-eyed child, till her golden head rested on his breast, and she whispered, "I cannot imagine greater happiness than to be your wife."

Miss Dorothy Ackerman was all ready to return to Meadowville when her brother presented himself in the drawing room of the house where she was visiting. He surveyed the ancient garments in which she had arrayed herself for travel, with such manifest disgust that it wakened her in indignant surprise.

"What are you looking at me in that way for?" she asked, sharply. "This dress is good enough to spoil with dust. Come to look, you are wonderfully spruced up yourself. Why, your suit is new—new gloves, too!"

"I wish you to dress yourself handsomely, Dorothy," her brother said, quietly, "to attend my wedding."

"You can't be married till you get to Meadowville. Miss Martha surely never came here with you."

"I told you some time ago, Dorothy, that I had no intention of marrying Miss Gaines."

"Then who are you going to marry?"

"Susan Desmond!"

Miss Dorothy simply stared, with a creeping horror that her brother was going mad.

"She is Philip Desmond's daughter, my Susie's niece!"

"What are you talking about! Philip Desmond hasn't been married but——"

"Twenty years. Susan is eighteen, just the age of my dear, dead darling!"

Miss Dorothy had a soft spot in her heart, hard as she seemed, and she had loved her brother's betrothed in that long ago when they were all young. Her voice was very gentle as she asked, "Are you sure she loves you, Robert? She is very young!"

"But she loves me, Dorothy! Do not fear for my happiness, sister."

And Miss Dorothy meekly selected the richest costume from her trousseau to attend the wedding, stopping on her way to the church to buy a gift for her little sister-in-law, that proved both her good will and her generosity.

It was not until the party returned to Meadowville that Miss Martha Gaines realized how vain a castle in the air she had built upon Miss Dorothy's match-making.

AN INTERESTING ROMANCE.

A reporter of the Express learned from Mrs. James Holt, of Concho, the particulars of a history that properly handled would make the web and woof of as romantic a novel as was ever written. It is the story of a beautiful girl who voluntarily leaves all the luxuries and elegancies of a beautiful home in Philadelphia to follow a lover to the wilds of Texas. Blanche Thomas was the only daughter of parents who lavished upon her all that wealth could purchase. Her dresses from Worth, her equipages, her brown stone house on Chestnut Street, were the envy of many and the ambition of a few. Her father took her to Paris, where she soon became the rage in the American colony there. Many admirers had aspired to her hand—many wealthy noblemen had offered themselves in marriage, but all in vain.

When pressed by her father for an explanation of her conduct she reluctantly acknowledged she was in love, and had been since her childhood, with the son of the manager of her father's coal mines near Pittsburg. This so enraged her father that he forbade her even to mention the young man's name again, and unthinkingly told her she must select some eligible position within six months or cease to be his daughter. Thinking him to be in earnest, and knowing him to be a man of his word, the poor girl packed up a few clothes, and taking what money she had in her purse at the time, took passage on an outward bound steamer for New York. Arriving there she telegraphed to her lover in Pittsburg, who did not even stop to change his mining clothes so afraid was he that he would miss the fast express that was to carry him to the object of his affections.

There was a quiet little marriage at Grace church the next day, and the spoiled child of fortune was the wife of a brawny, muscular miner. After much thought and a great amount of planning it was decided to come to Texas, and here build for themselves a home. He pre-empted and purchased land and sheep in Taylor county, built a house of two small rooms, and while she cooked, washed and attended to the the humble avocations of household drudgery he looked after the sheep and cultivated a few acres of land. A year of quiet happiness passed by, when the husband broke his leg, and the work of watching the sheep devolved upon the wife. One afternoon, as she was walking toward the house in her simple country dress, a party of gentlemen rode up, and one of them was her father, who had been searching for his daughter since her departure from Paris. Calm reflection had taught him that hers had, after all, been the better choice, and he was only too glad to recognize in her husband a son-in-law. He persuaded them to give up their home in Texas for a time, and return with him to Philadelphia.—San Francisco Express.

DISAGREEABLE HABITS.

Nearly all the disagreeable habits which people take up come at first from mere accident or want of thought. They might easily be dropped, but they are persisted in until they become a second nature. Stop and think before you allow yourself to form them.

There are disagreeable habits of body, like scowling, winking, twisting the mouth, biting the nails, continually picking at something, twirling a key or fumbling at a chain, drumming with the fingers, screwing and twisting a chair, or whatever you lay your hands on. Don't do any of these things. Learn to sit quietly—like gentlemen, I was going to say; but I am afraid even girls fall into such tricks sometimes. There are much worse things than these, to be sure, but we are speaking only of these little things that are only annoying when they are persisted in.

There are habits of speech also, such as beginning every speech with "you see" or "you know," "now-a," "see here," "let me tell you," indistinct uttterance, sharp, nasal tones; avoid them all. Stop and think what you are going to say, and then let every word drop from your lips just as perfect as a new silver coin. Have a care about your way of sitting and standing and walking. Before you know it you will find that your habits will have hardened into a coat of mail that you cannot get rid of without a terrible effort.

THE PRESS AND THE TOWN.

One of the chief requisites of a town of any pretensions is that of a good local newspaper. Of all the things that constitute a town, give potency to its existence, wisdom, efficiency and progress to its movements, nothing can be spared less easily than the press. A large class of persons living together in one community, and governed by the same social and civic laws, require a public spokesman—one that predominates above the gossip that is carried from door to door; that will be heard to applaud the right and condemn the wrong, and that will be employed to foster the best interests of the people. Besides giving publicity to incidents of interest to those in its immediate neighborhood, and of making its readers cognizant of the doings of the outside world, a paper has the additional advantage of representing the town before the people at large. There is nothing that will better determine the prosperity of a place than the condition of its press. The latter is necessarily invalidated or vitalized by the support or rejection of its townsmen. No man is a good citizen who is indifferent to the interests of the town in which he lives, and who has no concern in the welfare of its press. The influence for good that a well-conducted newspaper has upon the lives of its patrons can never be properly estimated, and is seldom fully appreciated.

One of the east-bound trains coming into Detroit the other day was heavily loaded, and a passenger who got on at Ypsilanti walked through two cars and finally halted at a seat occupied by a small man and a grab-bag and inquired, "Is this seat occupied?" "Of course this seat is occupied," was the reply. "Are both halves of this seat occupied?" was the next query. "Of course both halves are occupied." "Well, my friend," said the new arrival, as he let go his satchel, "I want to bother you with one more query. Had you rather I would toss that grab-bag out of the window and sit down with you, or chuck you out and ride into Detroit with the grab-bag?" The grab-bag man got mad at that and wouldn't ride anywhere else except on the wood-box.—Free Press.

The New Year.

Yes: for the rich man's wealthy home
Ring, merry New Year's chimes.
The present and the past alike
Recall the good old times.

But winter for the poor man means
Dire want and misery,
Pale children starving in the cold,
Sickness and poverty.

O simple maiden, gentle sir,
Light heart and heavy purse
Can lighten by kind words and deeds
Our neighbors' heavy curse.

FROST BITES AND CHILBLAINS.

Probably no other forms of accident or injury come upon us so unexpectedly as those due to excessive cold. As a general thing we are not aware that a part is being frozen until the mischief is already done. This is due to the fact that one of the effects of severe cold is to destroy the sensitiveness of the parts exposed. Surgeons make use of this fact in small operations and cool the parts by artificial cold. The ears, the nose, sometimes the cheeks, and the hands and feet are the parts most liable to be frozen. One of the first effects of freezing is to stop the circulation of the blood, and any part in which the circulation is checked by other means is all the more likely to be frozen. The old-fashioned skates, held on by numerous tight straps across the feet, are dangerous on this account, as to keep them in place the straps are drawn so tightly as to impede the circulation in the feet, and frost-bitten feet are often the consequence. Though the operation of freezing is painless, a sudden thawing is attended with inflammation and great pain. The thawing should be very slow, in order that the circulation in the parts may be restored gradually. For this reason it is advised to rub the frozen parts with snow, or in the absence of that, with water made as cold as possible with ice. It is said that in Russia, when one observes that another's nose or face is being frozen, it is an act of common politeness to catch up a handful of snow and apply it to the face of the unfortunate, even if he is a perfect stranger. In cases of severe freezing, besides gradual thawing by the use of snow or ice, a physician should be called, as it may be that proper precautions are needed to prevent mortification of the parts. It is not necessary for the feet to be actually frozen to produce chilblains. The term frost-bitten is usually applied to such cases. Children suffer greatly from getting their feet very cold, and then going to the fire to warm them. The circulation is disturbed and the parts remain exceedingly sensitive to future changes of cold and heat. Chilblains vary from a slight inflammation, to severe cases in which the skin breaks and even ulcers are formed. Of course such cases require professional treatment. To allay the intense itching and pain of ordinary chilblains, a great number of applications have been used. An ounce of Sulphate of Zinc (White Vitriol), in a pint of water, or an ounce of Sal Ammoniac dissolved in half a pint each of Vinegar and Alcohol are among the washes often used. It is stated on good authority, though we have not had occasion to try it, that the application of ordinary kerosene oil is very efficacious in allaying the itching and pain.—Am. Agriculturist for January.

SHE TOOK NO RISKS.

"Have ye any gud piannies?" she asked, as she stepped into a piano wareroom on East Fourteenth street the other day, displaying a prosperous looking pocketbook. "I want wan fur me datter, who is comin' home from the semetery wid a finished eddication."

"What style of instrument do you prefer?" said the clerk, displaying an upright. "This piano is the the double-patent-quadruple-stringing-board-never-stay-in-tune and celluloid keys."

"Och! never a happoth do I care about the shtoile, so long as it's a strong case. Have ye any wid iron cases?"

"No, ma'am; but all our cases are made extra strong."

"How much'll you take for that piannie?"

"Four hundred dollars, ma'am."

"Do you sell on the slow-pay plan?"

"Yes, occasionally we sell to reliable purchasers on the installment plan. The installment on this piano would be $15 a month."

"Will ye throw in a cover and sthule?"

"Hardly fair to ask it, ma'am; but we'll throw in those articles this time."

"An' a bulk o' music?"

"Yes; we won't be mean about it."

"Now, if ye'll insure the piannie I'll take it."

"Well, really, ma'am, the purchaser usually insures the instrument; but, to close the bargain, we'll insure this piano and agree to take all risks."

"Ye see, betwane me an' you," said she, after she made her mark on the necessary papers and deposited the first installment receipt in her bosom, "I'm glad to feel aisy about the insurance, as I want to get the better of me ole man, who tuk an oath that if I brought a piannie into the house he'd smash it up wid an ax. An' faith, he's the bi to do it the nixt toime he gets dhrunk!"—Cincinnati Musical People.

The revision of the war treasure of the German empire will shortly be made. This treasure, which is said to amount to 120,000,000 marks in gold coin, is deposited in the Julius Tower of Spandau. The two commissioners, whose duty it is to verify the treasure, each possess a key of the chamber in which it is kept, and the door opens only when the keys are applied simultaneously. The treasure is divided into ten lots, and each lot is further sub-divided into twelve others of 1,000,000 marks each. This sum of 120,000,000 marks, or $30,000,000, earns no interest.

There is one charge which can never be truthfully made against the advocates of temperance. They have never been known to destroy any man's business without making a better, more honorable and more profitable one open up before him. The destruction of the business of every individual who sold or made liquor in Maine or Kansas, made a better business possible for four or five men in place of it. And any one of those new possibilities was open to the saloon keeper who wanted to reform and embrace an honorable means of livelihood.

A Dublin newspaper contained the following: "I hereby warn all persons from trusting my wife, Ellen Flanagan, on my account, as I am not married to her."

Silver dollars with holes in them are painfully numerous, but they're not half so painfully numerous as holes without any silver dollars around them.

THE DISMAL SWAMP.

The Dismal swamp is not a vast bog sunk low in the ground, in which the drainage of the surrounding country flows. On the contrary, it is above the level ground some fifteen or twenty feet, as was demonstrated by actual surveys. Instead of being a receptacle into which rivers and streams enter and flow, it is in reality an immense reservoir, which, in its vast, sponge-like bulk, gathers the waters that fall from the heavens and pours them into the five different rivers which flow onward to the sea. Any one would imagine that the "Dismal" was a veritable charnel house, that spreads its miasma throughout the country. On the contrary it is the healthiest place on the American continent. The swamp is formed entirely of green timber. There is absolutely no decomposed wood. One sees trees lying all around in the forest and swamps. The two principal woods that grow in the place are the juniper and cypress, which never rot. They fall prone on the ground like other trees; but instead of the wood decomposing it turns into peat, and lies indissoluble by air and water for ages, perfectly sound. There is nothing in the swamp to create miasma——no rising of the tides and decomposition of rank vegetables——no marshes exposed to the burning rays of the sun. All is fresh and pure, and the air is laden with as sweet odors as the fragrant woods in May, when the perfume of the flower mingles with the pungent scent of the dog-wood. In the ante bellum days all planters were anxious to hire their slaves to shingle-makers in the swamp, on account of its health. Mr. Reddick, a well known contractor, says he worked a gang of fifty hands for fifteen years in the "Dismal" getting shingles, and in all that time there was not a single case of ague and fever. There are numerous affidavits of overseers and agents who have lived in the swamp their whole lifetime, and they never knew a death caused by miasma, nor a solitary instance of ague and fever. The air is pure and sweet; and the water, tinged to a faint wine-hue by the juniper, is as potent a medical drink as the famous watering places of the Virginia "mountain spas." It is often used by naval vessels going on a long foreign cruise on account of its healthful properties, and also because it keeps fresh and clear for years. It is a strong and invigorating tonic, with a very pleasant taste.

AN UNHEALTHY WINTER.

There are all the indications of it. The weather will be uncertain, there will be no severe frost, but much damp, rainy weather, exceedingly fertile in creating miasma in the air and propagating malaria. Throat diseases are sure to prevail, perhaps more so than those of the chest, as the organs of the throat are quicker attacked by damp air. Nervous diseases will also prevail, as the low temperature will also lessen vitality still more in those who already possess little. Loss of appetite will trouble us, and digestion is not improved by damp soft air. Malarial fevers will attack crowded houses, and small-pox and all blood diseases will find a fertile soil to grow in. These damp, low winters, though perhaps easier to bear than the sharp, frosty, cold seasons, are generally fruitful in disease. It will require great care to keep out of it. What are our safeguards against disease? Thorough ventilation in houses, proper clothing for head, throat, and feet, good exercise, nutritious living and all avoidance of taking cold; and immediate remedial action when this has taken place. In such winters we should not allow colds to grow upon us, as they bring other troubles in their rear. One great preventive of taking cold is never to remain in wet clothes, and to wear outside wraps that will absorb wet or not allow it to penetrate. Above all, avoid wet feet; also keep the feet warm, and if a cold has been caught use mustard and hot water for the feet at once. The foot bath must not be taken higher than the ankles.—Food and Health.

In the classic shades of Deadwood the average native is not very choice in selecting the language used in advertising a runaway wife. The notices are usually written and posted in the post offices and saloons, where they will catch the eyes of a majority of the population. A recent one reads as follows: "My wife Sarah has Shook my ranche. When I didnent doo a darned thing Too her an' I want it distinctly Understood that any man That takes her In and keers fur hur On my account Wil git himself pumped so Full of lead that sum tender-foot will Locate him fur a Mineral clame. Iff she runs Hur face fur goods I won't Put up fur her, an' Ile lick the son-of-a-tor-nado that taiks her stand-off even for the drinx. a word To the wise is sufficient an' orter work on fools too."

While excavations for the foundations of a building at Scranton, Penn., were being made recently, a stratum of matter having the appearance of a thick black jelly was uncovered. Some of it was dried, when in appearance it could scarcely be distinguished from anthracite coal, although when it had been analyzed it was found to contain but twenty per cent of carbon. It burned at a red heat and left an ash like that of ordinary coal, of which many are of the opinion that it is the "mother."

The older I grow—and I now stand upon the brink of eternity—the more comes back to me the sentence in the Catechism which I learned when a child, and the fuller and deeper its meaning becomes: "What is the chief end of man? To glorify God, and enjoy Him forever."—Thomas Carlyle.

At the Museum: "Several years are supposed to elapse between this act and the first, are there not?" "Yes." "Well, that girl has got on the same pair of stockings she was wearing years ago. She ought to be ashamed of herself."—Boston Post.

It appears that bromide of potassium, which is so extensively used as an antidtoe for sleeplessness, is largely composed of lead, and those who employ it are exposing themselves to lead poisoning. This statement is made by a German chemist.

"Mary," he asked, "why am I like butter?" He expected her to say that it was because he was the genuine article, and he was completely crushed when she promptly replied:—"Why, I guess its because the hotter it gets the softer it is."

A pound of leaves when burned leaves a great deal more ash than an equal weight of wood.

Some mourn more the shame which sin brings, than the sin which brings the shame.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1882.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR is reported to have very decided views on the Mormon question, and it is intimated that he will do all he can to remove this curse from the country. He cannot begin to soon.

THE proposed $50,000 fund for the endowment of a Garfield professorship in Williams College has reached $35,000, and will doubtless be the first, as it is the best of the many memorial monuments, to be completed.

THE evidence in the Guiteau trial is all in, and the defense will begin their argument today. The case ought to go to the jury next week, and after the crushing evidence of the experts there seems no possible chance for any other verdict than guilty.

IT is now authoritatively stated that ex-President Hayes did contribute to the Garfield monument, putting down $250, and offering to double it if an equal sum was raised by others in his county. This sounds a good deal better than the first report did, and we are glad to make the correction.

GEN. GRANT has written a frank letter to the President acknowledging that for 19 years he has greatly wronged Gen. Fitz John Porter. After a careful review of the testimony he is convinced that Gen. Porter was a faithful and efficient officer, and asks that steps be taken to right the wrong done him.

THE New Year's reception at the White House on Monday was a brilliant affair, and was attended by dignitaries and citizens without end. President Arthur was assisted on the occasion by Mrs. Blaine and several other ladies, and the east room, red, blue and green parlors were all thrown open, each of them being elegantly adorned with flowers.

GOV. LONG will appoint Judge Morton to the chief justiceship of the supreme court, it is expected. Judge Putman of the superior court died on Wednesday, so that the Governor now has two judicial vacancies to fill. Gov. Long has had an unusual number of such appointments to make. He has done well so far, and will undoubtedly make judicious selections for the existing vacancies.

POSTMASTER GENERAL JAMES turned over his office to his successor on Wednesday. The new postmaster general told a reporter the other day that he knew nothing about the star route cases, and he didn't appear to care much about them. The fact that his son-in-law, Maj. Totten, with whom he will probably make his home, is one of the counsel for the defense in these cases, will not increase the confidence of the people in Mr. Howe's desire to bring the conspirators to justice. But he has his record to make, and should not be judged in advance.

JOHN KELLY is as happy as a clam at high water. Although still at the head of the Tammany Democracy in New York, he has been pushed relentlessly to the wall by the Tilden Democrats, and shorn of most of his power. But time brings its revenges, and now the Tammany men hold the balance of power in both branches of the New York Legislature, which could not organize this week, and has adjourned to next Tuesday, to give the Democrats time to come together in some way. Kelly will require a liberal allowance of the loaves and fishes before falling into line.

SMALL-POX has been prevailing to a greater or less extent in many places for some weeks, and has gradually spread itself until there are numerous cases in nearly all the principal cities of the country, while the scourge is also showing itself in many of the smaller places. The dreadful disease breaks out oftentimes when no reason for its appearance can be given, and it is likely to spread with still greater rapidity now that the weather has taken such a sharp cold turn. Exemption from its ravages can be certainly secured only by vaccination, and people should avail themselves of this safeguard in season.

The crusade at St. Albans, Vt., against the rumsellers is said to be virtually ended. Some who signed the paper pledging to support the crusade have refused to give financial aid, which was required, and drunkenness is said to be greater than formerly. Business men have signed a petition requesting the hotel proprietors to re-open their houses.

Investors in Douglas county (Dak.) bonds will not be likely to realize much from their investment. The county was organized illegally last winter, and has $200,000 in bonds on the New York market, but the county has not a single school house, and only about 40 voters, while its total taxable property will not exceed $15,000.

The insurance commissioner, in a supplement to his annual report to the Legislature, calls attention to the importance of legislation regulating the mutual aid and other beneficiary associations, and says that attempts have been made to bribe him to keep silence in regard to the dishonest transactions of certain of these concerns.

The Mountain of the Lord is a solid rock, 100 feet in height, rising above the street level at Manti, Utah. The Mormons are building on this eminence a temple of fine marble, 95 feet by 170 in area, and handsomely adorned.

A boarding house at Richburg, N. Y., was burned early Sunday morning. Three children were burned to death, and the mother will probably die from exposure to the cold.

The Northern Pacific railroad was completed to the Rosebud river, the scene of the Custer massacre, on Christmas day, and operations will now cease for the winter.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

The new Legislature assembled under the gilded dome on Wednesday, and organized quickly by electing all of the old officers, after which the members marched to King's chapel to listen to the election sermon by Rev. J. F. Lovering, of Worcester, who emphasized the duty of basing legislation upon religious principles.

Governor Long's message, delivered on Thursday, is somewhat shorter than last year, and abounds in suggestions and recommendations which show that the Governor is familiar with State affairs, and has positive opinions which he does not hesitate to express. The net debt of the State is now $18,113,682.36, a reduction during the year of $1,694,969.05. A State tax of $1,000,000 will be required if the appropriations do not exceed the estimates, and half a million more if they do. He recommends a tax of one-third of one per cent upon savings bank deposits, without any exemption, and that they be prohibited from investing more than one-fourth their deposits in national bank stock. The Governor urges the Legislature to provide a method by which the Troy & Greenfield Railroad may be enabled to redeem their property; and favors the sale of the State's interest in the New York & New England road. Considerable space is devoted to the subject of prisons and charities. He recommends that professional criminals be sentenced to police supervision when their terms of imprisonment expire. He believes that the difficulty with the Reform School for boys is in the system which makes it a house of correction. Criminals should be sent to the house of correction, and the Reform School should be a place for the education of boys who are not criminals. He would make the school a home, and have the boys dismissed when good places can be found for them elsewhere. This suggestion is both sensible and timely. He recommends that the school should be transferred from Westboro as a matter of economy, leaving the Westboro buildings for the accommodation of the insane. The criminal insane should be kept in a prison by themselves. Progressive suggestions are made in regard to educational matters. He recommends an experimental station for testing the application of advanced scientific methods to agriculture, and wants the sheep better protected from the ravages of dogs. He strongly urges the amendment of the law allowing private property to be taken for railroad purposes without the owner's consent, "unless you hold that there are no private rights left which a corporation are bound to respect." He recommends the formation of a heavy artillery regiment for coast defense. Observation convinces the Governor that the best interests of society demand the rooting out of dram shops, and is puzzled to know how to enforce the license law. He repeats his conviction of the right of women to vote; wants the council composed of the heads of departments; protests against capital punishment; wants something done to prevent errors in election returns; recommends more general and fewer special laws, and would like a special officer to edit the laws of each session and help the legislators in drafting statutes; recommends a law for the preservation and restoration of forests; and in conclusion urges the Legislature to be brief.

The Monday morning train from Boston, on the Boston and Maine Railroad, met with a dreadful accident at Cole's Corner, in Wells, Me. The train was crossing an iron bridge over the highway, when the bridge gave way, precipitating the four rear cars into the chasm, some 20 feet. The cars took fire at once and burned up. One man was killed outright, and about 75 passengers injured, some of them seriously. The accident is believed to have been caused by the breaking of a journal on the baggage car. This is said to be the first passenger accident the Boston and Maine road has had in its history of over forty years.

During the month of December rain fell on fifteen different days, the total precipitation amounting to 3.80 inches, the largest amount for that month, with three exceptions, in the past ten years. The highest temperature was 66°, the lowest 10°, and the mean 37°, the highest for the month of December during the past ten years. The nearest approach to these figures was in '77.

It is a singular fact that the three fires most destructive of human life during the last quarter of a century—those in Santiago, Brooklyn and Vienna—all occurred in the month of December; not only that, but the Santiago cathedral and the Ring theatre were burned on December 8 at the same hour, and the Brooklyn theatre was burned only three days earlier in the month.

An exodus is in progress among the negroes of South Carolina, some 7000 of whom are said to have agreed to go to Arkansas. Whole neighborhoods are being depopulated, and the people of the State are quite anxious over the matter.

The Allan steamship Moravian went ashore on Seal Island, about 23 miles from Yarmouth, N. S., last week Friday, in a fog, and will be a total loss. The passengers and crew were landed in safety, with the baggage.

The Riley County Bank of Manhattan, Kansas, a private institution, has suspended, and a number of New Hampshire people, especially in Peterboro' and vicinity, have lost heavily. The cashier has committed suicide.

During a festival at Shanesville, O., Saturday, the floor of the hall gave way, precipitating over two hundred persons below, killing two and wounding about one hundred men and women.

Valorous O. Cooley of Westfield, a young man who had been on a prolonged spree, died on Monday from an overdose of laudanum, which he had taken to quiet his nerves.

The number of business failures throughout the country in 1881 was 5582, involving liabilities of more than eighty-one millions, sixteen millions more than for 1880.

The schooner Sarah E. Blake collided with the steamer Newport, of the Fall River line, on the Sound, Sunday night, and was sunk. It is feared that all hands are lost.

A six-days' walking match in New York last week was won by Fitzgerald, who made 582 miles and 5 yards, the best score on record.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Snow, but no sleighing.

Farmers are not plowing as much as they were.

Snow shovels were out for a little exercise Monday morning.

How many times have you dated your letters "'81" this week?

It does not look quite as much like an ice famine as it has done.

The week of prayer has not been observed by any of the churches in this place.

Rev. Frank Palmer of Norwich preaches at the Congregational church to-morrow.

Rev. C. A. Conkling of Troy, N. Y., will occupy the pulpit at St. Paul's church to-morrow.

Apples are said to be rotting badly—but a good many people are so fortunate as not to have any to rot.

The Congregationalists had a pleasant social Thursday afternoon and evening with Mrs. J. B. Shaw.

J. M. Alden will soon remove to Springfield, to take a position in Joyce's cabinet shop. His family are already there.

The personal property of the late Samuel D. Shaw is to be sold at auction next Wednesday, at 10 a. m., at his late residence.

There has been some good skating this week, and the young folks have improved the opportunity to polish up their steels a little.

Have you noticed the increase in the length of the days? They have stretched out 10 minutes longer than they were a few days ago.

Conductor Warner, of the Ware River road, is back on his train again, after an absence of several months on account of sickness.

The corporators of the Palmer Savings Bank hold their annual meeting next Monday, at 2 p. m., for the election of officers for the ensuing year.

There is to be another hearing before the selectmen at Murdock's Hall, Thorndike, on the 24th inst., upon the location of the Massachusetts Central Railroad through this town.

During the past term, Julia Allen, Lillie Allen, Adella Barnes, Norman Chandler, Oliver Patrell, Michael Rooney and Charles Gardner were perfect in attendance at the grammar school.

Patterson's Common School Speller is being introduced in the town schools, in place of Worcester's speller, the publishers giving the new books in exchange for the old ones. It takes about 800 to go around.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Palmer National Bank will be held next Tuesday afternoon. The directors have chosen these judges of election: George Robinson, L. Dimock, J. F. Holbrook.

Four or five inches of snow fell Sunday night, but not enough to make sleighing. The indications yesterday pointed to more snow, and 'most everybody is hoping we shall have enough to bring out the sleighs.

We have had some winter weather this week, "sure pop." The mercury has been below zero two or three mornings, reaching 12 below Thursday morning, while on Wednesday it did not get higher than 12 above during the day.

It will not take many more days of such weather as we have had this week to make ice thick enough to cut, and the ice men are getting in readiness for their work. The ponds are already covered with ice six or seven inches thick.

The Doctor's club met with Dr. Stowe in this place Thursday afternoon, 11 members being present. Dr. Squiers of Springfield read an exhaustive essay on the Prevention and Cure of Consumption, and exhibited a specimen of koumiss as made by him.

The marriage of J. Addie Burleigh to C. H. Burleigh of Hampden was attended Wednesday evening by a party of 75 relatives and friends, at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. H. S. Burleigh, and the newly wedded couple were made the recipients of numerous presents.

Palmer Lodge No. 190, I. O. O. F., has elected the following officers: N. G., Frank A. Ruggles; V. G., Louis A. Conant; R. S., E. B. Goodell; F. S., Geo. H. Cobb; Treas., A. A. Converse. The officers will be installed next week Friday evening by D. D. M. Henry Denver of Springfield.

Messrs. Edgerton & Davis are putting a new 10-horse engine into their foundry, in place of their old 5-horse one, which is not equal to furnishing the power required for their increasing business. Both the machine shop and the molding department have been enlarged, and 12 men are now employed in the latter department, of which A. A. Converse is foreman. The firm are now running off 4000 pounds of castings per day, of which 2000 pounds are for the pump works at Warren, and are so driven that they are hardly able to keep up with their orders, more work being offered than they have capacity for turning out.

The receipts at the post office for the quarter ending Dec. 31 were as follows: For stamps, $645; newspaper, periodical and postage due stamps, $13.27; envelopes, $196.54; postal cards, $105; newspaper wrappers and waste paper, $5.46; box rents, $44; total, $1,009.27. During the year 1881 there were 1060 money orders issued from this office, amounting to $14,008.49, on which the fees were $132.05; amount paid for orders drawn on this office, $6645. The number of letters registered at this office during the year was 455; number of registered letters passing through the office in transit, 7780; total registered letters handled, 8235.

At the January session of the probate court in Springfield, Tuesday, administration was granted on the estates of—William A. Thompson of Wales, Charles M. Thompson administrator; Moses Davis of Wales, Charles Davis administrator; Julietta R. Gardner of Brimfield, Homer M. Gardner administrator; Samuel B. Sheldon of Ludlow, Chauncey L. Buell administrator; Mary B. Brown of Brimfield, Samuel H. Brown administrator. The will of Gordon Pinney of Ludlow was approved. Joshua Tracy of Monson was appointed guardian of Mary A. Smith of Springfield; and Justus Hitchcock of Mabel L., Edna and Ida A. Graves of Palmer. An inventory was filed on the estate of William A. Thompson of Wales, real $101, personal $1000.

The trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank last Saturday declared a dividend of 2 per cent, amounting to $9,991.95, besides carrying $1000 to the guarantee fund and the same amount to the reduction of the premium account. The condition of the bank at the close of the year is shown by the following statement: Liabilities—deposits, $538,302.40; guarantee fund, $5500; interest and undivided profits, $6,821.45; total, $550,623.85. Assets—loans on real estate, $252,501.98; on personal security, $181,335.72; on bank stock, $2350; to towns, $1550; bank stock owned, $28,300; public funds, $27,600; railroad bonds, $10,000; real estate, $23,000; premiums, $5000; taxes and expenses, $3347.54; deposit in National bank, $15,000; cash on hand, $638.61; total, $550,623.85. There are now about 2000 depositors, the number having increased some 300 during the year, while the amount of deposits is $71,000 larger than a year ago.

The new Palmer directory, got up by the New York Publishing Co., has been distributed through the town the past week. The book is printed and bound in good shape, making quite a neat volume, but here its value ends. In a "brief "Historical Sketch," the publishers speak of the "Belchertown & Amherst Railroad" as still alive, after its burial of many years. They say the Athol branch runs through the village of "Brookville," and inform the people that "the police department is superintended by Sheriff Palmer and his general deputy, Mr. H. A. Northrop." We are informed that they meant to say "genial" instead of "general" deputy, but the correctness of the information is not affected by the change. The directory proper is a mere copy of the assessors' list, no occupation being given, and no attempt made to arrange the names. Under the "S's", for instance, the Smiths are scattered around in fourteen different places, instead of being brought together. Many names which should appear are missing, while dead persons are brought to life in its pages. On the whole the directory cannot be called a success.

The annual meeting of the Congregational church was held on Tuesday evening, when the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: S. H. Hellyar, clerk; S. W. Lawrence, treasurer; O. P. Allen, treasurer of benevolences; James Cowles, auditor; standing committee, in addition to the deacons, James Cowles, J. B. Shaw, Geo. F. Brown, Mrs. E. Brown, Mrs. L. E. Child, Mrs. W. F. Hitchcock; committee on poor, Hubbard Lawrence, S. W. Lawrence, H. R. Stoughton, Mrs. E. Brown, Mrs. S. Smith, Mrs. J. P. Shaw. These officers of the Sunday school were chosen: H. R. Stoughton, superintendent; A. E. Park, assistant superintendent; Mrs. A. E. Park, second assistant; C. W. Cross, secretary and treasurer; W. H. Hitchcock, librarian; Julian Tuthill, assistant librarian. The church has raised for benevolent purposes the past year an average of $9.44½ per Sunday, the total amount being $491.14. This sum has been distributed among the various societies as follows: Am. Board Com. Foreign Missions, $82; Home Missionary Society, $85; Am. Missionary Association, $93; Bible Society, $10; Tract Society, $18; College and Education, $10; Congregational Union, $75; Seaman's Friend, $13; Ministerial Aid, $9; Am. S. S. Union, $10; Woman's Board, $73.

There has not been as much building in this village the past year as in some previous years, and the total value of the buildings erected will hardly exceed $18,000. In dwelling houses President Willis of the Palmer National Bank takes the lead with his commodious new house on Thorndike street, on the site of the one burned a year ago last summer. The paper hangers are now putting the finishing touches on the interior of the house, which will be ready for occupancy in a few weeks. Geo. A. Griffin has built a new house on Park street, J. A. Palmer one on Knox street, and H. A. Northrop a double-tenement house on Central street. The school house has had a large addition made to it, and its interior has been changed throughout, and the New London Northern Railroad has built a new engine house with three stalls. This comprises most of the building operations of the year, unless we mention two or three new barns which have been put up. There is a feeling in some quarters that we have about as many tenements now as the demand will warrant, though in all probability a few more houses will be erected this year, as several parties are considering the matter, and some lots are likely to change hands on Knox street by and by with this object in view.

BRIMFIELD.

The dramatic club will play "One Hundred Years Ago; or, Our Boys of 1776," at the town hall next Thursday evening.

WALES.

The Wales Savings Bank has declared a semi-annual dividend of 2¼ per cent.

Austin Towne, Harry Weaver and Charlie Gonly broke through the ice on Shaw's pond Tuesday. Towne would have been drowned had not Mr. Spencer arrived and with great courage rendered assistance.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

The young people's entertainment and tree, New Year's eve, although not carried out according to the original programme, was a complete success, for which we may thank G. W. Powers, who was instrumental in carrying it through. Our citizens hope to have the pleasure of hearing Charlie Shaw sing again at some future time.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Wednesday morning, 14° below.

Skating is again in order, and soon the ice men will be happy.

The Ladies' Benevolent society met on Wednesday with Mrs. E. B. Gates.

At the Grace chapel Sunday school last Sunday, it was voted to hold the regular sessions at a quarter before one o'clock.

Henry Cutler lost his valuable horse "Sam" on Thursday, because of a broken leg. He was being exercised in the saddle, when the ankle bone suddenly snapped, without any apparent cause.

HAMPDEN.

The boys are making music skating on Scantic river.

Cold weather and no sleighing. Thermometer Tuesday morning 15° below zero; Thursday, at 6 a. m., 18° below.

There were 19 deaths in town in 1881, against 10 in 1880. Of this number two were infants, five between 20 and 30 years, two between 50 and 60, two between 60 and 70, five between 70 and 80, two between 80 and 90.

The town school committee are showing their power by expelling a few boys from school. The expulsion does not tighten the pegs that are loose in and about the school. Matters are getting a little complicated in this direction, and the doings of the committee are criticised by many in town.

WARREN.

All the public schools are to commence next week.

Cold weather and poor sleighing seems to be the fashion this week.

The Congregational church chose officers Thursday afternoon for the coming year.

The Methodist and Congregational societies observed the week of prayer with meetings every day.

The soldiers' fair which is to be held the 17th, 18th and 19th of this month, promises to be of unusual interest, and great preparations are being made to have it both attractive and profitable.

The subject of a new hotel, a much needed want in town, is being agitated, and it is hoped there will be enterprise enough to raise the necessary funds for its accomplishment.

BELCHERTOWN.

Thermometer 6° below zero Thursday morning at 6 o'clock.

Union prayer meetings have been held afternoon and evening during the past week.

The sleigh manufacturers are looking rather sad, and very few of their sleighs have been sold as yet.

The third annual Masonic ball will be held at the Belcher House Wednesday evening, Jan. 12th. Music by Southland's orchestra of Springfield.

Quite a number of the Masonic fraternity went from this place to Amherst Pacific Lodge last Wednesday evening, to witness the dedication of their new hall, after which the officers were installed and a collation was provided for several hundred. The exercises were very interesting and profitable, and not until the small hours did the brothers of Vernon Lodge return.

THREE RIVERS.

The annual meeting of the Union Evangelical church will be held next Tuesday evening, and that of the Y. M. C. A. on Wednesday evening.

Rev. W. L. Noyes, of New Hampshire, is expected to preach in the Union church Sunday morning. There will be a communion service at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Paine, who returned from their bridal trip Monday, were serenaded by the Three Rivers Cornet Band Thursday evening. The band was invited in, and all spent the evening very pleasantly. The young couple have the best wishes of their many friends in this community.

The past year has witnessed the construction of several new buildings in our village, foremost among them being the addition by the Otis Co. to No. 2 mill, the new building being 60 feet long, 48 feet wide and four stories high. The company has also put up a large cotton house on the lot just east of the school house. Capt. P. P. Potter has built a large four-tenement block on the Palmer road, and Postmaster D. F. Holden two cottages on Burns street.

MONSON.

The fourth entertainment in the Star course comes next Wednesday evening; George P. Gilman's illustrated lecture, "Cairo and the Nile."

Forty neighbors and friends surprised Mrs. Eli Fay and family last Friday evening at their home. An elegant repast was served during the evening, after which music and conversation filled the time. The friends left behind them many tokens of their regard.

Dr. G. E. Fuller furnishes us with the following record of the average temperature of each month in Monson, for the past two years:

January	19†	33†
February	25—	30†
March	36†	33†
April	43—	47—
May	62†	66—
June	64—	69†
July	70†	72†
August	76†	70†
September	69†	65†
October	56—	50
November	42†	36—
December	36	23—

The signs † and — are used instead of fractions to indicate the part of a degree.

The general average in 1881 was 49 6-12; in 1880, 49 8-12. The warmest day in 1881 was Sept. 7th, 98°; in 1880 June 25th, 96°. Coldest day, 1881, Jan. 1st,—12°; in 1880, Feb. 10th,—9°. The average temperature for the globe is given at 60°. This places Monson within 10 5-12 degrees as to warmth of the world's average.

BONDVILLE.

R. L. Bond & Co. are erecting a small building to be used as an office.

Rev. B. McKeany, the Catholic priest, received over six hundred dollars Christmas.

Rev. A. C. Manson and wife spent a part of the holidays with their daughter in New York.

Business at the dye works is brisk just now, they being obliged to run over time to keep up with their orders.

P. H. Potter is on from Michigan, and contemplates going into business, probably in Springfield or Holyoke.

D. F. Holden of Three Rivers has started quite a trade in our village, judging from the looks of his delivery wagon.

Luther Collis has laid out a new street running parallel with Pleasant street, and has sold M. D. L. Towne, Butler Sedgwick and Patrick Sullivan a building lot each. His son, Charles Collis, has one also.

The iron bridge to be placed over the canal east of the bridge built in 1880 has arrived, and the abutments are now ready for the long bridge across the river on the new street leading from the depot to the new mill. The street also is nearly completed.

Building for the past year has been very good. The Boston Duck Company have erected three two-tenement houses, and several others have been built by individuals. The new hotel, a building the village has long needed, is progressing rapidly. It is four stories high, and is to be completed March 1.

THORNDIKE.

That wonderful work of genius, "The Palmer Directory," is causing the same comment here that it has elsewhere in the town. It must be provoking to some of the happy saints to learn that they live again—in Palmer.

The first surprise party of the season took possession of the Methodist parsonage on Wednesday evening. Though the night was very cold, about sixty of the family were present, who served an oyster supper and made their pastor the happy recipient of a splendid wolf robe. It was an enjoyable occasion.

The past year has been very important here as regards building interests. More buildings have been erected, probably, than in any previous year in the history of the village. The Thorndike company has put up one factory 118 by 50, four stories high, besides the basement; also a new brick cotton house 100 by 25, which is not yet completed. It has also built twenty tenements or ten double tenements. The one at the west end of Church street is by far the finest designed, for the use of overseers. A new street has been opened facing the Congregational church, which commands the finest prospect in the village, and has four new houses upon it. Three large houses have been built on Church street, leading to the upper village, and the rest have been built in the latter part of the village. Mr. J. Foley has put an addition to his house as also has Harry Bishop. E. E. Wilson has also finished his tasty little cottage, which he commenced last year.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

The Evangelical church has observed the week of prayer.

The singers at the Evangelical church want a new organ, and are trying to raise the necessary money by subscriptions.

The Christmas tree and New Year's supper in Wight's Hall Saturday night, given by the Evangelical Sunday school, was a very enjoyable affair.

George W. Miller was chosen superintendent of the Evangelical Sunday school last Sunday, and was induced to reconsider his previous declination and accept the office.

The mill company has rented a room in Wight's block and will remove the books of its former library, which have been stored away for a long time, to it, and open a public library and reading room soon.

One of our ladies while discussing with friends the peculiar advantages of a furnace over a parlor stove, remarked that she "always enjoyed sitting with her feet on the refrigerator, it's so warm and nice." Her husband intends to buy ice, instead of coal, after this.

About 30 of the male friends of Charles H. O'Brien surprised him last Saturday night and presented him with a new business sign. After the presentation a good time, such as men can have when ladies are not around to bother, was enjoyed, along with a jolly good oyster supper.

A delegation from Hampden council, American Legion of Honor, attended the open installation of the officers of Springfield council at that city Monday night, and were treated to a supper at the Evans House. A delegation from the Springfield council will be entertained by Hampden council next Monday evening, when the following officers will be installed: Com., G. W. Miller; V. C., Wm. Twiss; O., H. L. Hines; P. C., John Chandler; Sec., Dr. E. D. Chapman; Treas., C. E. Frost; Coll., A. S. Packard; G., Jerry Buell; C., E. D. Harris; W., Walter Duneau; S., A. M. Richmond; M. E., Dr. S. F. Smith.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Sixty-one marriages in town in 1881; an increase of 12 over the year 1880.

Rev. A. J. Hall will preach the third of the series of sermons on temperance next Sunday morning. Subject, "The Remedy."

The lecture which was to have been given by Rev. Eugene Sheehey on Saturday evening, with its attendant reception, has been indefinitely postponed on account of his severe illness.

The receipts at the post-office for the quarter ending Dec. 31 were: For stamps, postal cards, stamped envelopes, etc., $1093.58; box rent, $110.80; waste paper, 60 cents; total, $1204.98.

The county commissioners were here on Thursday at the request of the engineer of the Mass. Central, and are to have a hearing in reference to the road Feb. 2d, and one in reference to the location of the streets Feb. 9th.

The tickets for the next lecture in the Y. M. L. A. course, by Archibald Forbes, go on sale at Blood's drug store this morning at 9 o'clock. Mr. Forbes has a world-wide reputation as the war correspondent of the London Times, having passed through the German and Turkish wars. He is spoken of in the highest praise by the press wherever he has been. His subject is: "The Inner Life of a War Correspondent."

The residence of Lucas Gibbs came near being destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning. It was discovered by Mr. Gibbs about half-past six, burning quite briskly. Without stopping to dress he soon had it under control, but about 10 o'clock fire was again discovered on the other side of the chimney, and again extinguished. The cause was no doubt a foul chimney, which took fire, heating the brick so hot as to set on fire the wood work near it.

From the annual report of the East Congregational church, we find that there is a considerable increase in the Sabbath congregations, they being the largest they have been for the past 25 years. Additions to the church 10 by profession, 12 by letter; removals, 2 by dismission and 4 by death, making a gain in membership of 15. The present membership is 355, of whom about 50 are non-resident. The benevolent contributions for the year are $4,545.39, besides more than as much more given by individuals, which does not appear in the report.

The liabilities of the Ware Savings Bank Jan. 1st were: Deposits, $1,890,544.98; dividend due depositors Jan. 1, 1882, $36,345.66. Reserved profits, $6,807.33. Guaranty fund, $14,574.61. Assets—Loans on mortgages, $548,743.62; on personal security, $113,217.41; to towns, $42,500; on savings bank books, $2800; railroad bonds, $238,000; bank stock, $302,900; public funds, $609,000; deposits in banks on interest, $20,000; deposited in Ware National bank, $21,500; premium account, $25,000; real estate for banking purposes, $4,984.19; interest due Jan. 1, 1882, $19,066; cash on hand, $561.36; total, $1,948,272.58; which at present market value, after paying dividend, exceeds the deposits by $222,995.94. Number of depositors, 4319; 291 more than one year ago. A dividend of 2 per cent was paid January 1st.

The new Congregational chapel was filled to its utmost capacity at the dedication on Sunday evening; in fact many went away, not being able to gain an entrance, and all seemed well pleased with the beautiful structure. The exercises were opened with an anthem by the choir, "God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." Invocation by Rev. W. G. Tuttle. Singing:

"How pleasant, how divinely fair,
O Lord of Hosts, Thy dwellings are."

Reading of 122d Psalm, and dedication prayer by Rev. W. G. Tuttle, with response by the choir. After the singing of the 74th hymn, the sermon was delivered by A. E. Perkins, D. D., from the text found in Haggai, 2:9—"The glory of the latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of Hosts; and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of Hosts." Beginning with the idea that religion was to be progressive in its forms and methods, as well as in its ideas, the speaker proceeded to show that though the new chapel was so much superior to the old one in convenience and elegance, yet its glory could be greater only as it should be used more freely for cultivating the social element, for promoting religious work and worship and thus realizing more fully the presence of Christ and the power of the gospel.

The building in Ware the past year has been greater than for many years past, if not than in any year in our history. There have been several good private residences put up. We might mention among them those of Dwight F. Marsh on Cottage street, John Kennedy on Prospect street, J. H. Cummings on South street, and one now in process of erection by Geo. H. Coney on Church street. Nearly 100 tenements have been added to the village, and still the cry is for more, it being difficult to get a desirable tenement at any price. The new library building has been completed, as well as the new Congregational chapel, adjoining it on Church street. The savings bank has put up an elegant building for its accommodation on Bank street, into which it expects to move in a few days. J. H. Storrs has put up the block of stores on the site of the old hotel, much improving the corner. The old chapel is being remodeled, making good accommodations for the apparatus of the fire department, and a fine hall for the firemen. The gun manufactory has been built, employing workmen who have helped to fill the tenements. The Otis company have added to their property 14 tenements, valued at $10,000, and an addition 114 by 40, three floors, to the finishing department of their hosiery works, at a cost of $10,000. The value to the town of all this has been not far from $150,000.

Oscar Wilde, the "too utterly too-too" apostle of æstheticism, has arrived in New York from London, with a new volume of his poems and a new play. He will lecture here.

President Arthur keeps his dead wife's portrait, which hangs in his room at the White House, wreathed with flowers, which are renewed every day.

January Magazines.

The North American Review for January has for a leading article "The Moral Responsibility of the Insane," which contains the views and judgments on the subject of five of the most distinguished authorities in America: Drs. Beard and Seguin of New York, Dr. Elwell of Cleveland, Dr. Jewell of Chicago and Dr. Folsom of Boston. In view of the great trial now progressing at Washington this subject is of special importance to us as a nation, while independently of this it is one which must receive much thought from the public, and the views of these intelligent scholars must find many readers. The other articles are "The New Political Machine," by Wm. Martin Dickson; "Shall Women Practice Medicine?" by Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi; "The Geneva Award and the Insurance Companies," by I. B. Cole, and "A Chapter of Confederate History," by F. G. Ruffin.

St. Nicholas, that periodical so popular with the young folks, and many of the older readers as well, is full of new, fresh and interesting matter, freely and attractively illustrated, as usual, forming a number calculated to meet the demands of any reasonable mind. The regular edition in England is now eight thousand copies, while the sale of the Christmas number will reach ten thousand copies.

The January Atlantic Monthly is a most excellent number of this periodical. It opens with Mr. Howells's "Police Report," giving the incidents of two visits to a police court and some of the thoughts suggested thereby. Mr. Lathrop's serial, "An Echo of Passion," gives promise of great interest, the first instalment being unusually attractive. "John Baptist at Jordan," by Rev. E. E. Hale, is the first of a series of papers on events in the Life of Christ. It is an article of merit, and the series will be of great interest and value, being designed to reproduce as faithfully as possible the conditions of the people at the time of Christ's coming, religiously, politically and socially. "Studies in the South," written by the author of "Certain Dangerous Tendencies," is supposed to represent truthfully the situations and sentiments there as seen by the writer. Elizabeth Robins, S. A. L. E. M., H. H. and others contribute stories, essays and poetry, which with reviews of several important books and an interesting "Contributor's Club" complete the number.

The January Century was a little late in time of issue, but is unusually good, a novel feature being the portrait of Ex-President Thiers, printed in tint, as a frontispiece, and accompanied by an article from the pen of Hon. Elihu B. Washburne, former Minister to France. There is also a portrait of Queen Margaret of Italy, in connection with an article on the making of Burano lace, and one of President Garfield, an artotype by Edward Bierstadt of New York, this being highly esteemed by the intimate friends of the late President, and the one selected by Mrs. Garfield to send to Queen Victoria. The serials increase in interest, while essays, short stories and poetry complete a number of this popular magazine so attractive that the sale demanded the issue of a new edition of nine thousand.

AMERICAN INVENTIONS AND MACHINERY in the principal markets of the world hold the first rank. Notwithstanding the high price of labor in the United States, the products of our skilled artisans and improved machinery compete successfully with those of the ill-paid labor of Europe, where in thousands of cases the machines employed are the result of American ingenuity. While our patent laws are more liberal to inventors than those of any other country, there is much in having an invention properly placed before the Patent Commissioners. The immense volume of business transacted in that department requires that the solicitor for a patent be able to give his client information as to patentability, conflicting claims and other obstacles; such information as none but an expert can give. To inventors we would commend Mr. R. H. Eddy, 76 State street, Boston, as a leading and most successful solicitor of patents; one who, from his two-score yeas' experience and his familiarity with the laws and technicalities in this and foreign countries, is most competent to advise them in regard to American and European patents, trade-marks, designs, re-issues, etc.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diphtheria and Canker Mouth. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it. Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of John Ward, late of New Britain, in the county of Hartford, and State of Connecticut, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, a petition has been presented to said court, by Edwin B. Lyon of said New Britain, with certain papers purporting to be copies of the last will and testament of said deceased, and of the probate thereof in said State of Connecticut duly authenticated, representing that at the time of his death said deceased had estate in said county of Hampden, on which said will may operate, and praying that a copy of said will may be filed and recorded in the Probate Office of said county of Hampden, and letters testamentary thereon granted to him, and that he may be exempted from giving a surety or sureties on his official bond as executor of said will under said letters,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of February next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same. And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation three weeks successively in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, in said county of Hampden, the last publication to be thirty days, at least, before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirty-first day of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPSHIRE SS.—Office of the Clerk of the Superior Court at Northampton.
In Vacation, December 17th, A. D. 1881.
Upon the petition of Isaac S. Lockhart of Ware, in the county of Hampshire, filed in the office of the Clerk of our Superior Court for said county, on this seventeenth day of December, A. D. 1881, for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien against the heirs and devisees of one Charles S. Millette, late of said Ware, and who died on the twenty-second day of November, A. D. 1881, representing that the said petitioner made a verbal contract with the said Millette in his life-time, which contract was not an entire contract, nor for an entire price, and that in pursuance of said contract and for the prices agreed the said petitioner furnished labor and materials in the erection and alteration of certain buildings and parts of buildings upon land of the said Millette, situate on West street, in said Ware, and described as follows: Beginning at a stake and stones on the north side of said West street, thence westerly on said West street 110 feet to a stake and stones standing 20 feet from St. Williams Catholic church lot, thence northerly on a line 20 feet from said church lot 130 feet to a stake and stones, thence easterly on a line parallel with said West street 110 feet to a stake and stones, thence southerly 130 feet to the point of beginning, meaning hereby to describe the land having one tenement building; also a part of another tenement building and a part of a certain shed in the rear of said tenement buildings upon it, supposed to belong to the heirs and devisees of Charles S. Millette, and the structures upon which said labor was furnished and performed and for which said materials were furnished are situate on said West street. And also representing that the said petitioner commenced his labor on said buildings May 3, A. D. 1881, and ceased to furnish labor and materials thereon November 19, A. D. 1881, and that there is due to said petitioner for the labor and materials by him furnished the sum of $167.75, after deducting an equitable portion of such sum for labor peformed and labor and materials furnished for that portion of the said buildings which are built upon the land of Perry Cheever, of said Ware, and further representing that on the seventeenth day of December, 1881, the said petitioner filed in the registry of deeds for said county the statement by law required, and praying that said premises may be sold and the proceeds of said sale applied to the discharge of his demand as by said petition more fully appears.

And it appearing that parties entitled to notice are absent, and that it is probable that they cannot be found to be served with notice, it is thereupon ordered by the clerk that the said petitioner notify all persons interested therein of the pendency of said petition, and to appear before the justices of our said Superior Court, next to be holden at Northampton, within and for said county of Hampshire, on the third Monday of February, A. D. 1882, by causing an attested copy of the substance of said petition and this order thereon to be published once a week, three weeks successively, in the Ware Standard, a newspaper published in said Ware, the last publication to be thirty days at least before the said third Monday of February next, that they may then and there be heard, and show cause, if any they have, why the prayer of said petition should not be granted.

WM. P. STRICKLAND, Clerk.
A true copy of the substance of said petition and order thereon.
3w40 Attest: WM. P. STRICKLAND, Clerk.

Psalm of the Baldhead.

Tell me not, in merry accents,
That I have an unthatched roof;
'Tis the hairy head that lacks sense—
Baldness is of thought a proof.

Hair is vulgar, hair is useless,
And to brush and comb's a bore,
Making life but dull and juiceless;
I need brush and comb no more.

Not for wise men matted hair is,
Black or brown or red if fair;
Let the savage of the prairies
Waste his time in raising hair!

Life is short, and hairs are numbered,
And, though flies are hardly borne,
Still at night I've always slumbered,
When the night-cap I have worn.

In the world's broad field of battle,
Who'd be at the barber's call,
Listening to his tiresome tattle—
Better bare as billiard ball!

Fear no future, baldhead brother,
You were bald in infant days;
Crave not hirsute of another—
Brain it is, not hair, that pays.

Lives of great men will remind us
That our smooth and polished pates
Leave all hairy heads behind us—
Let us thank the favoring fates!

Footprints of Old Time's fleet walking
No one sees on our smooth crowns;
Mind no more the idle talking,
Made by envious mop-head clowns.

Let us, then, O hairless brother,
Proudly through life's pathway roll;
We remember that dear Mother
Earth is barren at the poll.

NEW YORK ESTHETICS.

"Well," said a Deadwood man who had just been introduced to a Brooklyn girl, and who had been asked by her if they had many of those lovely frontiersmen out his way, "well, mum, we hev right smart of 'em in our neck o' the woods."

"And do they wear fringed legs and hunt those dear, sweet buffalo?" asked the girl.

"The stage drivers wear fringe and sich, and when a buffaler shines out some one is pooty apt to hook on."

"How supreme! And those gorgeous Indians in their picturesque wigwams of wampum, with their blending combination of war paint, do you often see them?"

"Oh, once in a while we get a hack at a buck, but mostly they are on the reservations," replied the Deadwood man, staring. "They does come in occasionally, but we don't track with them."

"The sweet things! And you have such sunsets out in your mountain fastnesses, and such loves of highwaymen! Do you ever see those delightful highwaymen?"

"Not often, mum. They get in the brush, and, as for sunsets, we get 'em pretty reg'lar in fair weather."

"Isn't it just too awfully too!" exclaimed the girl, clasping her hands and rolling her eyes.

"Yes mum," stammered the Deadwood man, "sometimes it's pretty dern, too, leastwise it was the day that Cobbler Duffy came into town on the landslide."

"An avalanche! Do you mean an avalanche? Oh! can there be anything more crystally utter than an avalanche?"

"It was pooty tooty utter," hazarded the Deadwood man, dropping into his companion's style of expression. "The cobbler had a—a—he had a crystally shaft up the side of the butte and one day he was—was tooing around up there, and things slipped out from under him."

"Oh! how radiant! How irridescent."

"Yes, mum, and he began to radiate to'ards town at the rate of 1000 miles and three furlongs a minute. We see him a—a uttering down the side of the mountains, ripping up trees and rocks, and tooing along, aud his irridescent wife flapped out of her shack and began to raise a row."

"Poor Lily!" moaned the girl; "did she stop the glorious avalanche?"

"No, mum, not quite. Duffy fetched up against his shack all standing, and began to howl like a blizzard, 'cause he thought he'd lost his mine. But when they tipped the land slide on one end there was the mine underneath just as he left it. So he could work it right under his winder. That was pooty considerable too, eh?" and the Deadwood man never winked.

"How sublime! How crystalline!"

"But I was going to say we never had sunset since."

"So star like," murmured the girl.

"Yes, mostly star like. You see the landslide stands there to this day on end, and they don't dare to turn it over for fear of filling in the town, so we don't get any sun after 11 in the morning."

"A perennial twilight! So fearfully, terribly, awfully utter."

"Yes," murmured the Deadwood man. "It's just about as utter as you get 'em."

And she sat and gazed upon him, wrapped in admiration, while he fell into a reverie and wondered at Brooklyn hospitality in not providing "sand boxes" for strangers.

A boy in a country school was reading the following sentence: "The light-house is a landmark by day, and a beacon by night," and he rendered it thus: "The light-house is a landlord by day, and a deacon by night."

It is hard to tell which is the more ridiculous, the young fool or the old fool; but the old fool has this advantage—he will never be a young fool, whereas the young fool may some day be an old fool.

Preserve the privacy of your house, marriage state, heart, from relatives and all the world.

"Lives of great men always remind us that we are all subject to die," says an exchange, but never cough yourself away as long as you can raise 25 cents for a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves when, by using Parker's Ginger Tonic, they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength surely coming back to them. See other column d

TO GRATIFY HIS WIFE.

AN INTERESTING STORY—A HOPELESS CASE CURED—A GOOD REASON FOR HAPPINESS.

Statement of Mr. Washington Monroe, of Catskill, Green County, New York.

"For many years I had suffered from a complaint which the physicians called Gravel. I had employed some of the most noted doctors without obtaining any permanent relief, and for a long time my case was regarded as hopeless. All who knew the circumstances said I must die. Finally, my wife induced me to try a bottle of Dr. Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy,' which she had somewhere heard of or seen advertised. Without the slightest faith in it, but solely to gratify her, I bought a bottle of a druggist in our village. I used that and two or three bottles more, and—to make a long story short—I am now as healthy a man as there is in the country.

"Since then I have recommended 'Favorite Remedy' to others whom I knew to have suffered from Kidney and Liver Complaints; and I assure the public that the 'Favorite Remedy' has done its work with a similar completeness in every single instance, and I trust some other sick and discouraged mortal may hear of it and try the 'Favorite Remedy' as I did." 4w39

WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northeast from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of hand some chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with

A BRAVE LADY.

SHE ENDURES THE PAIN OF A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION WITHOUT TAKING CHLOROFORM.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., New York, had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflammatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed, she was a mere wreck, a walking skeleton. In this terrible strait she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said, "All right, Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out nor stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength, and is now well. The "Favorite Remedy" is a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it. Your druggist has it. If not, send to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, New York. 4w41

Two Lovers.

Two lovers by a moss-grown spring—
They leaned soft cheeks together there,
Mingled the dark and sunny hair,
And heard the wooing thrushes sing.
O, budding time!
O, love's best prime!

Two wedded from the portal stept—
The bells made happy carolings,
The air was soft as fanning wings,
White petals on the pathway slept.
O, pure-eyed bride!
O, tender pride!

Two faces o'er a cradle bent—
Two hands above the head were locked;
These pressed each other while they rocked,
Those watched a life that love had sent.
O, solemn hour!
O, hidden power!

Two parents by the evening fire—
The red light fell about their knees,
On heads that rose by slow degrees,
Like buds upon the lily spire.
O, patient life!
O, tender strife!

The two still sat together there,
The red light shone about their knees;
But all the heads by slow degrees,
Had gone and left that lonely pair.
O, voyage fast!
O, vanished past!

The red line shone upon the floor,
And made the space between them wide,
They drew their chairs up side by side,
Their pale cheeks joined, and said, "Once more!"
O, memories!
O, past that is!

—George Elliot.

FOOLISH JEALOUSY.

Violet Heath was an only daughter and a belle. Pretty, highly accomplished, and very sprightly withal, she reigned supreme in Clifton—the pleasant little country town where her father resided—queen of fashion, as well as queen of hearts. All the young men admired her and, as a natural consequence, all the female population envied and strove to imitate her. Whether her chief charm consisted in her fair, dimpled face, or deep blue eyes, looking like half-blown forget-me-nots bathed in dew; or in her golden, curling tresses, or mischievous, rosy mouth, or in her half-tender, half-flaunting air and manner, no one could say; but it was generally agreed upon that she was quite a beauty.

Violet was uniformly kind to her many suitors, making her denials, when necessary, so sweetly that the rejected ones felt almost as much favored as the accepted. And when Guy Hillard came to take charge of the village school, although he was a young man of fine appearance and excellent character, it was a long while before the village beauty vouchsafed to him the least sign of preference. But perseverance and patience, as they generally do, succeeded at last, and in due course of time, one tender moonlit eve, under a honeysuckle arbor, in the old squire's garden, the young man pleaded his cause in true loverlike fashion, and was transported into a third heaven of bliss by being accepted. The old squire made no objections, and after a proper lapse of time the young couple were united amid a bewildering profusion of laces and white flowers, and the poor lovelorn swains of Clifton were left to console themselves as they could.

Everybody was surprised to see what a loving, exemplary wife Violet made. She had been so gay a girl, so full of mischief, so petted and flattered, that some of the Clifton wiseacres shook their heads, and hinted that Guy Hillard might repent his bargain; but, on the contrary, he rejoiced over it anew every day, regarding it as the best transaction of his life.

They had a cozy little cottage on the outskirts of the town, all embowered in eglantine, with great shady trees, and a flower garden in front, and the young schoolmaster must have regarded it as the sweetest, happiest spot on earth, judging from the briskness of his step and the brightness of his face, as he returned of evenings from his schoolhouse. Violet was at the gate to meet him, robed in some pretty, fresh apparel, her curls looped back with roses and her blue eyes full of tenderness, ready to lead him to the tidy, well-ordered parlor and waiting supper table. No wonder Guy was happy—he would have been a monster if he had not been so. But after awhile, as if fortune was bent upon running his cup over, something also came to make him still happier. A small, dimpled, crowing babe, with eyes like its mother, and rings of hair that looked like spun gold. Violet was in raptures, and Guy could scarcely wait for night to come in his eagerness to get home. What a happy couple, every one said—even the wiseacres, in spite of their prophecies.

But there never was a paradise, perhaps, that the serpent did not enter in some form or other. It even came to that perfect little home, trailing its slimy ugliness amid the blooming flowers. It was after this wise: One evening Guy chanced to come home a trifle earlier than usual, and Violet and baby were not at the gate to meet him, as were their custom; but he hurried on, eager to surprise them by being early. Just as he reached the outer inclosure of the garden he heard the cottage door open, and saw a man—a real, living man, young and very distinguished looking, come out and pause on the porch for a moment to talk with Violet—his Violet. He saw her plainly laughing and chatting and tossing her ringlets; and then the stranger bowed himself out, and left the premises by the side path.

"Don't fail to come," called Violet after him; "I shall expect you."

Guy Hillard looked on in amazement. Violet was dressed—as he had never seen her before—in a magnificent new silk robe, all covered with laces and roses. What did it mean? Who was that man she urged to come again so cordially? A sharp, swift pang of jealousy and mistrust wrung his heart—mistrust of the woman he held a thousand times dearer than his own life; and he hurried on to the cottage, his brow, for the first time since his marriage, looking lowering and moody. Violet was nowhere to be seen below, so he went up to her chamber. The door was closed, but he heard the babe wailing within.

"Violet! Violet!" he called.

"Yes, dear," came the pleasant answer, "in one moment; as soon as I get my dress on."

He waited patiently until she came out, then he scanned her face with keen, anxious eyes. She looked flurried and confused, and ran back almost immediately to put the blue robe, which she had thrown on the bed, into the wardrobe. Guy followed her into the chamber.

"Have you been out, Violet?" he asked, making a great effort to appear unconcerned.

"Out? Oh, no!" she replied. "Why do you ask?"

"Nothing, only I saw you putting away your dress, and you've got baby dressed out in her finery."

Violet blushed and averted her face.

"O, yes!" she said, catching up the little mass of embroidery. "I've been fixing the sleeves of her slip, you know; but come, let's go down and look after supper."

He followed her down with a weary step and a heavier heart than had ever lain in his bosom before. But he determined to say nothing; he would not question her, but wait and see for himself what it all meant. Violet bustled about, making herself unusually pleasant; but somehow a gloom hung over the whilom happy home which all her gayety could not dispel. Long after she retired with her babe, her young husband sat on the porch with his head in his hands, and his soul tortured with a nameless fear.

The next afternoon he returned home at the usual hour, and found Violet and the baby awaiting him at the gate, her face all brightness and tenderness. His heart began to lighten; she was true to him. What a fool he had been; he was glad he had not let her know it. Laughing and playing with baby, they proceeded to the cottage, and Guy went running up stairs for his dressing-gown with his old buoyant alacrity. On the topmost step he picked up a glove—a gentleman's glove—but not his. A trifle, truly, but it awakened the old jealous pang with redoubled pain. Still, he did not question his wife, but kept up a silent, cunning watch on all her movements.

The next evening and the next, he came earlier, and in both instances, concealing himself in the shrubbery, he saw the tall, fine-looking stranger leaving his house, and Violet flitting about in the azure robe she had never worn for him. Suspense became torture; he could bear it no longer—he must know the worst. Had the wiseacres of Clifton prophesied the truth after all? He approached his wife at twilight, as she sat in a low chair, hushing her baby to sleep.

"Violet," he said gently, but very seriously, "I'm afraid we have a skeleton in our closet."

She looked up inquiringly.

"A skeleton, dear; how so?"

"Haven't you secrets from your husband, Violet?" he asked solemnly.

She blushed deeply, and dropped her eyes, and her voice was faint and irresolute, as she replied, "O, no, Guy! What made you think I had?"

"Because," he answered gravely, "I have seen a young man—a stranger—leaving my house every evening during the past week, and yet you have not even alluded to such a visitor to me. What does it mean, Violet?"

She averted her face, it wore a troubled anxious look, yet there was a dancing, mischievous sparkle in her blue eyes.

"Violet," he went on, seeing that she did not reply, "you can't tell how this has troubled me. Can't you trust me, Violet—me your husband? Explain it all, I entreat you, and end my torturing doubt."

She looked up, her eyes full of tears.

"You doubt me, Guy?" she said mournfully.

"I don't want to doubt you, Violet—I would sooner die; but it is strange, to say the least, that you should have such a visitor every evening, yet never mention it to your husband. But I believe you can make it all clear and satisfactory. Do so, Violet, and let us be happy again."

Still she said nothing.

"Violet, won't you speak?"

She shook her head sadly.

"No, Guy; I have nothing to say."

He started to his feet, white with excitement.

"Nothing to say, Violet? Will you not tell me who that man is, and what he wanted?"

She shook her head, slowly repeating, "I have nothing to say."

Then he rushed from her presence down the stairs, out into the open air, his head throbbing as if it would burst.

"O!" he moaned, sinking down on the turf, "how shall I ever endure it? My wife—my darling wife—my Violet, that I loved so much, can it be true?"

But no one answered him, only the little birds chirped and cooed amid the green leaves, making him envy their happiness. He remained there, wrapped in solemn thought, until the stars came out. He would not be rash; he would bear with her to the very last. Perhaps she would change her mind, and tell him the whole truth. He was ready and willing to forgive her and love her all the same, no matter how deeply she might have erred. He arose and returned to the cottage. Violet looked a little pale, and was a trifle more serious than usual—that was all. She did not even allude to the matter. The night passed—another evening came.

He dismissed his school at noon, and came home, concealing himself in the shrubbery. Hours went by, and at last, instead of seeing the stranger coming, as he had expected, he saw him leaving the house.

He had been there the entire afternoon, in his cottage, with his wife. His face grew white with anger, and he cleared the hedge at a bound. He would overtake him—force him into an explanation. But the stranger was too quick for him; he had crossed the lawn and was out of sight in the wood before Guy could overtake him.

He turned back, aggravated and disappointed, and made his way to the house. His head burned and throbbed, and a strange feeling filled his heart; he had never felt so before, or looked so either, for the little servant girl, chancing to meet him in the yard, shrieked, and ran out of his way. He was a desperate man—almost a dangerous man—Guy Hillard, the good-natured, quiet, well-disposed young schoolmaster. Truly, jealousy is as strong as death, as cruel as the grave.

Violet looked up quietly from the little frock she was embroidering as he entered.

"You are early this evening, my dear," she said pleasantly.

He made no answer. Her gentleness seemed to increase his wrath; she was so artful, so cunning and treacherous—and he had loved and trusted her so.

"Violet," he said, hoarsely, throwing himself on a chair, "you see that I am almost insane. I cannot bear this suspense any longer—I will not bear it. As your husband I demand an explanation. I saw that man leaving the house again a few minutes ago, and he has been here for hours. Violet, I want to know what it means?"

She bent over her work, but made no answer.

"Violet," he went on, his agitation increasing at a fearful rate, "I cannot live with you if you persist in keeping this secret from me. My wife must have no skeletons in her closet. I have borne it as long as I can—as long as I will. I command you now to tell me all—to make everything clear, or henceforth our lives are divided."

Violet was very pale, and her fingers trembled nervously as she stitched away at her embroidery; still, that little, dancing, mischievous sparkle lit her eyes.

"Violet, will you explain?" urged her excited husband.

"No, sir; I have no explanation to make."

He rose to his feet white and stern.

"Then you are no wife of mine. I cast you off—wash my hands of you! You can go back to your father, and tell him that you have blighted my life and broken my heart!"

She rose, also, and took up her babe.

"I will go, Guy," she replied, quietly.

He stood still where she left him, listening to her light footsteps ascending the stairs. Was he awake—in his senses—was it a reality? Was she leaving him—his Violet—the mother of his babe—the only woman he had ever loved! He was on the point of rushing after her and imploring her forgiveness; but that stinging pain came back to his heart, and held him back. She was false to him—let her go. At that instant he heard her voice calling softly from the head of the stairs:

"Guy—Guy, will you come up here, please? I want you a moment."

He went up. She met him in the passage.

"Bear with me, Guy," she said, humbly; "I will go directly; but I have something to show you first."

She led the way to a small room just beyond their chamber, the same little sparkle burning in her eyes. Guy followed with fierce, impatient strides. She threw open the door, and there, supported against the wall, was a portrait of herself, with the babe in her arms, as large as life. Her golden hair fell back from her smooth brow in shining ringlets, and her azure robe, sweeping off from the shoulders in clouds of misty lace, fell to the floor in gorgeous folds. Never was anything so perfect or so lovely. And the babe, a mass of white embroidery, with a round, dimpled, laughing face, and chubby hands peeping out. Guy stared at the beautiful creation in utter astonishment; then forgetting his jealousy, he exclaimed:

"O, Violet; where did you get it? It is yourself over again, and the loveliest thing I ever saw."

"To-day is your birthday, Guy," she replied softly, "and that is my present. I heard you say once that you would sooner have a portrait of me and baby than anything else in the world; so I coaxed the money out of father, and engaged an artist to paint it secretly, that I might give you a surprise. But he had to work hard to get it done against to-day."

Poor Guy! the truth flashed on him like lightning. That was the secret; he had seen the artist going and coming, and had doubted his wife while she was working to please and gratify him. His face turned all colors, and he stood in silence, looking ashamed of himself.

"I am done now, Guy," Violet said, the mischievous dimples deepening about her pretty mouth; "I will go."

"O, Violet!" he burst out, "forgive me—forgive me; I have been a great fool, I know—but forgive me, Violet."

Holding her babe with one arm, she put the other around his broad shoulders and drew him close to her side. He bent his head to kiss her.

"Yes, Guy," she said, "I forgive you; but you must never doubt me again."

"Never again, Violet," he answered, tenderly. "You have cured me completely; we shall never have another skeleton."

HIGH ART.

It's art! High art! Old master! I, too, go to see it. I admire—the cost. Fool like the rest. Companion fool comes along. Fellow countryman. Rich American. Lover of art. Æsthetic tastes. Utter, unutterably utter. Fifteen years ago was slumming out mining reservoirs at $2.50 per day. Glad to get the job. Rubber boots, blue jeans pants, half a suspender, short clay pipe, gray flannel shirt, one sleeve ripped to the shoulder. Too lazy to mend it. At work wet sleeve always flying up and hitting him in the face. Rolled it up about 500 times per day. Sleeve immediately unrolls and whacks him as he lifts his pick in face as before. Now buying old masters in Paris. Slum-gullion school. Lived in a pine log cabin. Bugs, fleas, centipedes, scorpions in the wall. Yellow jackets everywhere else. Tea and tobacco for breakfast and a cord of whiskey bottles stacked behind cabin. Struck a bonanza. Is crazy now to buy an "Old Master!" Wants another "restored" door mat to take home. French connoisseur finds him one. Finds it in a third-class restaurant. Has hung on the walls 200 years. Beautifully smoked and fly-specked. Fly-specks date back to the time of Louis XIV. Only one ear and one front tooth visible. Portrait connoisseur discovers it to be a genuine Guido. Bon. Buys it for five cents. Has it "restored." Beautiful frame. Sells it to lover of high old art from Slumgullion Flat, for 500,000 francs. Picture shown a few appreciating friends on arriving in New York. Beautiful! What coloring! What style! What an ear! What a front tooth! No tea store would dare to offer it, though, for a prize chromo consequent on the purchase of five pounds of tea. —Paris Correspondence.

JUST THE DIFFERENCE.

Some men move through life as a band of music moves down street, flinging out pleasure on every side through the air to every one, far and near, that can listen. Some men fill the air with their presence and sweetness as orchards in October days fill the air with perfume of ripe fruits. Some women cling to their own houses like the honeysuckle over the door, yet, like it, sweeten all the region with the subtle fragrance of their goodness. There are trees of righteousness which are ever dropping precious fruit around them. There are lives that shine like star-beams, or charm the heart like songs upon a holy day. How great a bounty and a blessing it is to hold the royal gifts of the soul so that they shall be music to some and fragrance to others, and life to all! It would be no unworthy thing to live for, to make the power which we have within us the breath of other men's joy; to scatter sunshine where only clouds and shadows reign; to fill the atmosphere where earth's weary toilers must stand with a brightness which they cannot create for themselves, and which they long for, enjoy and appreciate.

The London Lancet urges upon the public the importance of breathing through the nose in damp, cold, or foggy weather. It is nature's respirator and protection to the delicate.

"Dwo vas schoost enough, budt dree vas too blendty," remarked Hans, when his best girl asked him to take her mother along with them to a dance.

Henthusiastic.

A famous hen's my story's theme,
Who ne'er was known to tire
Of laying eggs—but then she'd scream
So loud o'er every egg 'twould seem
The house must be on fire.
A turkey-cock, who ruled the walk,
A wiser bird and older,
Could bear no more; so off did stalk
Right to the hen and told her:
"Madam, that scream, I apprehend,
Does nothing to the matter:
It surely helps the egg no whit;
So lay your egg and done with it.
I pray you, Madam, as a friend,
Cease that superfluous clatter;
You know not how 't goes through my head!"
"Humph! very likely," madam said.
Then proudly putting forth a leg—
"Uneducated barnyard fowl,
You know no more than any owl
The noble privilege and praise
Of authorship in modern days:
I'll tell you why I do it;
First, you perceive, I lay my egg,
And then—review it."

PICTURES OF ANCIENT EXTRAVAGANCE.

Crassus, when a candidate for the consulship, gave a feast of 10,000 tables, to which all the citizens of Rome were indiscriminately invited. Cæsar, to celebrate the funeral of a daughter, gave one of 22,000 tables, with accommodation for three guests at each. This entertainment was repeated and exceeded for his triumph. He brought together more gladiators and wild beasts than were ever produced on any former occasion in an amphitheatre, but his exhibitions of this kind were so completely outshone that it were a waste of time to dwell upon them. In a document annexed to his testament, Augustus states as a title to public gratitude that he had exhibited $8,000 gladiators and brought more than 3,500 wild beasts to be killed in the circus. In the course of the festivities instituted by Titus to celebrate the opening of the colosseum, 5,000 wild beasts were let loose and killed by the gladiators. The Emperor Probus collected for a single show 100 lions, 100 lionesses, 100 Libyan and 100 Syrian leopards, 300 boars and 600 gladiators. Having caused the circus to be planted with trees to resemble a forest, he let loose 1,000 ostriches, 1,000 stags, 1,000 does and 1,000 boars, to be hunted by the populace, who were to keep whatever they could catch or kill. The fiercer animals were encountered by the gladiators. It does not appear how long this show lasted.

Tiberius, whose life at Capri was a disgrace to human nature, was fonder of saving money than of spending it and he left an immense sum in the treasury, which his successor, Caligula, managed to dissipate in two years by extravagance of the most senseless kind. As if in rivalry of Cleopatra, he swallowed precious stones dissolved in vinegar, and caused his guests to be helped to gold (which they carried away) instead of bread and meat. One of his favorite amusements was showering money among the populace from the Basilica of Julius Cæsar. He built galleys of cedar, covered with jewels, and large enough to contain vines and fruit trees, and had canals cut for them along the coast. The stable of his favorite horse, which he talked of naming Consul, was marble, the trough of ivory, the harness of purple and the collar of pearls. The set of emeralds and pearls worn by one of his wives, Lollia Paulina, was valued at £400,000 sterling.

The principal extravagance of Claudius was public games. One of the shows organized for him was a naval combat on a lake, in which the galleys were manned by 19,000 men. He was fond of good cheer, and was in the habit of inviting himself to the tables of the rich. He came on one occasion with 600 persons in his train.

It was to Nero that Tacitus applied the expression, incredibilium cupitor. What he not only desired but achieved in the way of cruelty and vice would be declared incredible if Roman history had not already shown what revolting atrocities may be conceived by a diseased imagination and executed by irresponsible power. After the burning of the city, he gratified his taste, in entire disregard of the proprietors, in rebuilding it. He at once appropriated a number of sites and a large portion of the public grounds for his new palace. The porticoes, with their ranks of columns, were a mile long. The vestibule was large enough to contain the colossal statue of him, in silver and gold, 120 feet high, from which the colosseum got its name. The interior was gilded throughout, and adorned with ivory and mother-of-pearl. The ceilings of the dining-rooms were formed of movable tablets of ivory, which shed flowers and perfumes on the company; the principal saloon had a dome which, turning day and night imitated the movements of the terrestrial bodies. When this palace was finished he exclaimed: "At last I am lodged like a man." His diadem was valued at £500,000. His dresses, which he never wore twice, were stiff with embroidery and gold. He fished with purple lines and hooks of gold. He never traveled with less than 1,000 carriages. The mules were shod with silver, the muleteers clothed with the finest wool and the attendants wore bracelets and necklaces of gold. Five hundred she-asses followed his wife Poppæa in her progress, to supply milk for her bath. He was fond of figuring in the circus as a charioteer and in the theatre as a singer and actor. He prided himself on being an artist, and when his possible deposition was hinted to him he said that artists could never be in want. There was not a vice to which he was not given, nor a crime which he did not commit. Yet the world, exclaims Seutonious, endured this monster for 15 years; and he was popular with the multitude, who were dazzled by his magnificence and mistook his senseless profusion for liberality. On the anniversary of his death, during many years, they crowded to cover his tomb with flowers.

The utmost excess in gluttony was reached by Vitellus, who gave feasts at which 2,000 fishes and 7,000 birds were served up. He prided himself on his culinary genius, and laid every quarter of the empire under contribution to supply materials for a dish which contained livers of mullet, brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of flamingoes, roe of lampreys, etc. Tacitus states that he spent what would be tantamount to several millions sterling in less than eight months in eating or giving to eat.—Quarterly Review.

Any given anniversary falls upon any given day in the week at intervals of 11, 6, 5 and 6 years. Christmas fell on Sunday last year, being the first time since 1870. It will fall on Sunday again in 1887, then in 1892, and then in 1898, after which the series of intervals will begin again.

THE WRONG ASHES.

He was a jolly looking man, with a round corporation, a Burgundy-tinted nose and the general exterior of a contented mind, and as he entered the editorial den he offered us a good cigar, lit another and said:

"How about this local cremation scheme?"

"Well, how yourself?"

"The fact is," said the stranger, reflectively, "I had a pretty tough experience with one of these cadaver roasting concerns once, and I thought mebbe you might like to make an item of the facts so as to warn the people here in time."

"Fire away."

"Well, you see, it was in New Orleans. My wife died there, and as a cremation company was having a good deal of a boom there just then, she made me promise to have her spirit sent up through their flue, as it were. She said she thought it would be nice and melancholy for me to carry her ashes around with me wherever I went—in a vase, you understand."

"And you complied?"

"Why, yes. It was her last wish you know, and besides I thought it might be useful in kinder preparing her for the here—but never mind that now. I sent the remains round to the company's office in a push cart, got a receipt, saw Maria touched off, so to speak, and two days after that they returned to me a beautiful majolica jar full of ashes, scented with forget-me-not, and the stopper tied in with pink ribbon."

"That was pretty."

"Yes; I was very much pleased at first, but I had to keep the bottle out of sight after a while, though, because people were all the time opening the jar under the impression that it contained preserved ginger or chow-chow, or something."

"That would have been unpleasant."

"Unpleasant — well, I should smile — I mean I should weep. Why, actually one day while I was living in New York I came home and found a new servant girl polishing knives with the remains—just think of it."

"Terrible, sir; terrible."

"But what I was going to say, was this: About a year after my wife was kindled—I mean cremated—I was in New Orleans again, and I happened to meet the superintendent of the refractory ore—I should say the corpse-burning furnace—at a banquet, and he got so full that I had to see him home. On the way we stopped in a place or two for a steadier—you know how it is—and the result was that he got very communicative about his company—in fact, gave the whole business away."

"Did, eh?"

"Yes, sir; he squarely owned up that he didn't burn the bodies at all. He said they just dropped 'em through a hole in the bottom of the furnace, took 'em out the back way at night, and sold 'em to the medical students."

"Gracious! And the ashes?"

"Mule ashes, sir; nothing but mule ashes! They would just cut up some old mule carcass, the superintendent said, pitch in enough to make a bad smell, and then sell the ashes to the grief-stricken relatives at $25 a bottle. Terrible cheeky, now, wasn't it?"

"And all this time you had—"

"Had been carrying that old jar of mule ashes all over the country. Just imagine how mean I felt."

"You threw it away then?"

"Well, no," said the widower, as he winked a tear out of his left eye; "the more I studied over the matter the more I concluded that the mule ashes weren't so much out of the way after all. You see, poor Maria was an awful stubborn woman—t-r-e-m-e-n-d-o-u-s stubborn, and—yes, I kinder thought mule ashes would do mighty near as well, all things considered."

And heaving a resigned sigh as of one who had succeeded in bracing up under great sorrow, the anti-crematonist smiled softly, lit another cigar and walked out.—San Francisco Post.

CARE OF THE FEET.

No part of the human body is so much neglected as the feet. Possibly not over ten in each hundred, of even the educated classes, properly cleanse the feet and nails. One who has given the subject much attention offers the following advice:

Bathe the feet every night and morning with a little borax in the water. Ammonia and bay rum, though cleansing, have a tendency to dry the skin and pores. Frequent change of hosiery is more necessary than changing any other part of the clothing. After physical exercise, remove the stockings, bathe the feet and annoint them, the ankles and the calves of the legs, with healing oil or salve. Exchange the socks worn through the day for clean ones at early evening, and the brain will quickly respond to the restoring influence. It would be much better to neglect to wash the face an entire month than neglect to bathe the feet a single day. Pare the nails once a week, and only after softening the feet by bathing; remove the quick, which gathers under the nail, every third day, before it putrefies. Never use cheap or highly perfumed soap, as it has a tendency to dry and parch the skin, and so close the pores as to prove very injurious to health. Castile, olive oil, and other vegetable oil soaps are the best for the flesh.

The tremendous power of the waves of the ocean is sometimes terribly realized by lighthouse keepers. An instance is related by Chamber's Journal. A few years ago the keepers of Bishop's Rock Light, which is erected on a rock beyond the Scilly Islands, far out in the Atlantic, were in a terrible predicament during a hurricane of great violence. The lighthouse was struck by enormous waves in quick succession, each causing a noise like the discharge of cannon, and making the massive stone building rock to and fro, so that every article fell away from its place. One fearful sea broke the great lens in several places and another smashed the cylinders of the spare light, while sand from the bottom, thirty feet deep, was found heaped up on the lighthouse gallery.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1882.

THE New York Legislature has not elected presiding officers yet, and the Democratic factions seem to be as far from harmonizing as they were at the beginning.

JUDGE GRAY took his seat on the bench of the U. S. Supreme Court on Monday, and is said to be the tallest and best looking man on the bench. Senator Hoar gave a dinner Tuesday night in honor of the Judge, which was a very brilliant affair.

THE fact that Gov. Long had three judicial appointments to make the past week hardly caused the slightest ripple in Massachusetts affairs. People had confidence in his ability and inclination to make the best possible selections, and everybody is satisfied with the ones he has made. It would be a fine thing if we could feel that our Presidents would always do as well, in their judicial appointments; but we can't seem to.

DEATH has taken some shining marks the past week. Hon. Richard H. Dana of Cambridge died suddenly of pneumonia last Saturday at Rome, at the age of 66 years. The same day Hon. Edwin W. Stoughton, formerly Minister to Russia, died at his home in New York aged 63; and Chief Justice Pierpont, of the Vermont supreme court, died at his home in Vergennes, at the age of 75 years.

THE hotels at St. Albans, Vt., reopened on Tuesday, in compliance with a petition of the business men, who did not fancy having people shut out of the place for want of food and lodging. The hotels will now go on selling liquor as before, of course. If the temperance people had been as wise in their generation as the liquor sellers, they would have opened their own doors to travelers, or provided for them in some comfortable way, until the hotel landlords would have been glad to resume business, even without the privilege of selling the ardent.

GOV. LONG on Monday announced the following appointments to fill the vacancies which have recently occurred in the judiciary of the State: For chief justice of the supreme court, Marcus Morton of Andover; for judge of the supreme court, in place of Morton, promoted, Charles Allen of Boston; for judge of the superior court, in place of Judge Putnam, deceased, Caleb Blodgett of Boston. Judge Morton is the senior associate justice of the supreme court, and merits the promotion he has received; Charles Allen was attorney of the State for five years and is well qualified for the bench; and Caleb Blodgett is a Boston lawyer of excellent reputation, whose only brother is a judge of the New Hampshire supreme court.

KING WILLIAM of Prussia has caused great excitement throughout Germany by a rescript sent to the Prussian Parliament on the 4th inst., in which he reminds his ministers that they are his servants and not representatives of Parliament; that they are accountable to him alone, and that every official is expected to support the policy of the government, as dictated by the venerable monarch, intimating that any other course will be regarded as treasonable. This is a pretty bold enunciation of the old doctrine of the "divine right" of kings, and will be likely to make trouble for the crown prince, whom the emperor is said to have decided to proclaim regent of both the kingdom and the empire, on his 85th birthday, which will occur March 22d.

THE Legislative committees at Boston were promptly announced last week Friday, and they are already beginning their work. Senator Haile fares pretty well for a new man, being chairman of the military committee, and also on the committees on banks and banking, and manufactures. Senator Corser of Western Hampden is chairman of the woman suffrage committee, and is on the committee on roads and bridges. Senator Cook of Hampshire is chairman of the committee on towns, and also has a seat with the railroad committee. Representative Holbrook of Palmer is given a place on the committee on public charitable institutions; Webber of Holland on the federal relations committee; and Stevens of Ware on the railroad committee.

JUDGE COX rendered his decision Tuesday on the law points which have been raised by the counsel in the Guiteau trial. He decided that the court had jurisdiction, and defined the legal test of responsibility to be whether the assassin knew at the time of committing his crime the difference between right and wrong, with respect to the act. In the main the judge's decision agreed with the prosecution, though both sides expressed themselves satisfied with his rulings. On Thursday Mr. Davidge began the arguments to the jury, making a powerful plea, and greatly angering Guiteau, who made frequent interruptions. The prisoner wants to make a lengthy speech to the jury, and judging from the past will probably be allowed to do so. The case will hardly get to the jury before the latter part of next week.

The people of Somerville presented to their venerable city clerk, Charles E. Gilman, a gold watch and chain and a seal on New Year's Day; and with good reason, for they have annually elected him by a unanimous vote during a period of forty years to the position which he still occupies. It is doubtful if any other man in the country can show as long a continuous term of public service in an elective office.

A Concord (N. H.) man guessed that a bean pot contained 43,999 beans, whereas the exact number was 43,974, and he won an overcoat thereby.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Clean off your walks.

Have you had a sleighride?

Looks a little more like Winter.

The sleds have had their turn this week.

Last week closed up with a January thaw.

Rev. J. H. Amies will occupy the pulpit of the Universalist church to-morrow.

The new depot at Barrett's Junction is covered in and nearly ready for the plasterers.

Rev. J. H. Selden, of Norwich, Ct., will preach at the Congregational church to-morrow.

Representative Holbrook makes his Boston home with the genial Tilly, at the United States Hotel.

Wm. Sherman advertises his house at Tenneyville for sale at a bargain. See his advertisement.

Hon. C. L. Gardner of this place was elected a member of the executive committee of the Republican State Committee, at its meeting in Boston this week.

S. S. Taft has taken into partnership with him in the law business Thos. W. Kenefick, who has been with him for something over two years, and the title of the new firm will be Taft & Kenefick.

Freight Conductor Douglass, of the New London Northern Railroad, had an arm pretty badly squeezed while coupling cars at South Vernon on Wednesday, but escaped without any broken bones.

Baggage Master Gamwell, and O. B. Richardson, driver of Fosket & Holbrook's delivery wagon, are just out after having been laid up a couple of weeks each with a severe swelling in the nature of a carbuncle.

A freight train from the east ran into the rear end of the train ahead, as the engine was taking water at East Brookfield Thursday evening, smashing the forward end of locomotive No. 254, and obstructing the track so that the owl train for New York was delayed some three hours.

A. A. Barker, formerly superintendent of the Palmer Mills at Three Rivers, and who has for some time been engaged in setting up cotton machinery at Corinth, Miss., returned to Palmer last week, and on Monday started for Richmond, Me., where he will take charge of a new cotton mill.

That was pretty good "fisherman's luck" which Otis Griffin and Warner Coles of this place, with J. Converse and L. Needham of Brimfield, met with on Tuesday. They went out on the Brimfield pond and caught 124 pickerel and 82 perch, a total of 206, weighing in all 150 pounds. Some of the pickerel weighed 2¾ pounds apiece.

The second Farmers' Institute of the E. H. Agricultural Society will be held at the Weeks House next Tuesday, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m. The subject for discussion will be "Dairying in all Its Branches." W. R. Sessions of Hampden will open the discussion. The ladies are especially invited to be present, as the subject will be interesting to them.

The Palmer Cornet Band gave an invitation concert and ball at Wales Hall last (Friday) evening, sending bids to some 200 of their friends to be present, and furnishing a tempting programme for their enjoyment, including a couple of clarionet solos by Louis B. Colburn, the well-known musician from Gloversville, N. Y., who was formerly a member of the band.

M. W. French has bought the Bailey farm, on the Three Rivers road, for $3,000, and there is a possibility that a large wire mill and other iron works will be erected there this year, as some capitalists have been looking over the ground with this object in view. Nothing definite is yet known in regard to the project, but it is to be sincerely hoped that it may be carried through to a successful issue.

Rumors have been current for some days that the contract for the new union depot in this place has been awarded to Worcester parties, but nothing definite can be learned in regard to the matter. The plans were completed some time ago, and it is understood that they contemplate a commodious stone structure, which will be not only an ornament to the place, but will also be a vast improvement in convenience and comfort over the present arrangement of depots.

S. W. French, cashier of the Palmer National Bank, has tendered his resignation, to take effect within a few weeks, as he contemplates going into other business. Mr. French is an efficient and obliging official, and his resignation will be generally regretted by the customers of the bank. His successor has not yet been chosen, but it is quite probable that Treasurer Dewey of the savings bank, who is thoroughly familiar with the duties of the place, will be called to the position.

At the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Palmer National Bank on Tuesday, the following officers were chosen: President, A. H. Willis; vice-president, O. B. Smith; cashier, S. W. French; clerk, J. B. Shaw; directors, A. H. Willis, O. B. Smith, M. W. French, R. L. Goddard, J. K. Warren, J. N. Lacey, S. W. French, J. A. Squier, J. B. Shaw. A committee of directors was appointed to consider the subject of salaries, and also the question of procuring additional clerical help.

The incorporators of the Palmer Savings Bank made choice of the following officers at their annual meeting on Monday: President, Chas. L. Gardner; vice-presidents, P. P. Potter of Wilbraham, Lyman Dimock of Palmer, Gardiner Tufts of Monson; secretary, S. S. Taft; treasurer, W. C. Dewey; trustees, R. L. Goddard, Geo. Mooers, John Clough, Ira G. Potter, H. P. Holden, Enos Calkins, J. B. Shaw, J. S. Loomis, C. B. Fisk, E. Brown, J. S. Holden; board of investment, Enos Calkins, P. P. Potter, Geo. Mooers, J. B. Shaw, C. L. Gardner; auditors, S. S. Taft, C. B. Fisk.

Snow began falling at an early hour Wednesday morning, and continued with occasional intermissions through most of the day, though it only accumulated to the depth of three or four inches. Horse owners were quick to improve the opportunity, and in the afternoon quite a number of sleighs appeared on the streets. It was pretty good slipping in the village until Thursday's warm sun took hold of the snow, but outside the village the roads were too rough for runners. Another snow storm began yesterday morning, which gave promise of a sufficient fall to make "bang-up" sleighing.

The name of Frederick Douglass is a familiar one, and great interest is attached to the eventful career of this, in many respects, wonderful man. Born a slave, he has risen by untiring effort and mighty struggles, to fill high and important positions both in society and under the government, while he has also been much before the public as a lecturer, and now in a volume of over 500 pages he gives a complete history of his strange life and the varied experiences through which he has passed, including his life as a slave, as well as his connection in later years with the anti-slavery movement. The work is prepared with great care and is said to be full of interest. Our readers will soon have an opportunity to obtain this desirable book, as C. H. Baker is about to canvass the town and receive subscriptions for it.

One of the pressing needs of our village is the erection of a large building to furnish room and power for small manufacturers. There is reason to believe that during the past year at least three or four new manufacturing interests would have been established here, employing anywhere from 50 to 100 men, had there been such a building available for their use. In a growing community there is always a demand for buildings of this class, which are an important factor in the development of the community, both in regard to population and to material wealth. Manufacturing is a solid rock on which to base the prosperity of a town or village, and the establishment of a few small manufactures here would be a move of great direct value to the place, besides having an influence in drawing others here. The subject is one worthy the consideration of our capitalists and business men.

High Ferry, the mighty Nimrod of Monson, was in town yesterday bearing a big load of hunting spoils. There are comparatively few such characters left in New England, where game has become scarce and the professional hunter has beaten his spear into a pruning hook, as it were; but out in the Rocky mountains the crack shot and trapper lives by his skill and retains a lofty contempt for the "tenderfoot" of the East. Elk, mountain sheep, antelope, bear and buffalo claim his attention, and he has small regard for birds and the swarming speckled trout. These men are royal fellows, quick-witted, alert to impose in a good-natured way on the credulity of tourists, but generous to a fault. A party of pilgrims, last summer, who found themselves short of bread in the Yellowstone country, came upon one of these frontier Christians. He was six feet, bronzed like an Indian, with a clear cut face, honest eyes and the strength of a grizzly. He was making bread and readily shared his provender to the extent of baking all his flour and pressing it on the party. Remonstrance was vain; he scorned money and turned the matter off by saying that he was bound for head-quarters, where he could stock up again. He was a professor of woodcraft, swore picturesquely, but eschewed tobacco and whiskey—the luxuries of that region. He was up by daylight, and with his little train of mules and horses headed away from civilization. The fellow had given away his last "bake" and was ready to enjoy a meat diet for days. Such is the hospitality of the western hunter. Those who have eaten Ferry's juicy birds, tender "gems" and beefsteak done to a turn over wood coals know that hunters are pretty much alike the world over.—Sunday Republican.

THE BARRETT'S JUNCTION WATER POWER.

Several of our citizens were invited to go up to Barrett's Junction yesterday, to see what has been and is being done to develop the water power at that point. Capt. Wm. B. Kimball of Enfield aud Alfred G. Osgood of Springfield bought some 80 acres of land adjacent to the depot, last year, with the intention of founding a new manufacturing village, and the following facts from the Springfield Republican will show what they have done and hope to do: They have built a rolling timber dam 100 feet long, with stone abutments laid in cement, at a point near the northern line of their purchase, thereby gaining a fall of 17 feet and 480 horse power. When their plans are fully carried out their pond will overflow 30 acres, and the position of the dam is so near that of the Boston duck company at Bondsville that they expect to secure the full benefit of that power. They have dug a canal 1000 feet long, 30 feet wide and 8 deep, and equipped it with head-gates having stone abutments. They have also organized and had incorporated the Barrett's Junction water power company, capital $50,000, of which Capt. Kimball is the president and treasurer. They believe that their water power is a superior one, and that the location must necessarily attract industries and settlers. The competition afforded by two railroads is no mean item in starting a manufacturing village, and their plant will be within easy reach of a third, the Massachusetts Central, before many months. After reserving ample room for factories, the company expect to have land enough left so that 130 lots can be sold for dwellings, and they regard the location well adapted for the laying out of streets. They have a frontage of 120 rods on the railroad. Of course it will be necessary that a bridge should be built at a point nearly opposite the new depot, so that the Palmer and Belchertown sections of the location can be connected. All of the buyers of building lots will be required to put their houses a certain number of feet back from the street, so that the front yards shall be uniform in size. Messrs. Kimball and Osgood and their associates in the water power company have also formed the Springfield soapstone company, capital $100,000, with A. M. Cushing of Boston as president. This company have bought 10 acres of land of the water power company, close by the depot, and engaged 150 horse power, and are building a mill 260 feet long and 50 wide, with one story and a basement, which is to begin operations next month. A spur track will run from each road to this mill, being so arranged that stone can be shipped or received on either floor. The company control four soapstone quarries at different points and will make it their business at this mill to saw the stone and finish it up in all the shapes required by the trade, finding their market among the makers of stoves and other soapstone goods. They are now quarrying for the most part at Townshend, Vt., and shipping the stone to their Dana mill to be cut. When the Junction mill is under full headway they hope to employ 75 men. As there are no houses near the mill which can be utilized for new comers, the 30 or 40 men who have been employed during the fall by the water power company being forced to lodge either at Bondsville or Three Rivers, it would seem self-evident that the starting of this mill must necessitate some other building.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

There is to be a ball at Liberty Hall next week Friday evening.

WALES.

Sleighs were flying around after the snow storm.

The week of prayer was observed at the Baptist church last week, with a very good attendance.

Bradley L. Frye and family of Chester, Vt., have been spending a week among their old friends here, but have now returned to the hills again.

Eden D. Shaw was thrown last Friday forenoon from his wagon in front of the Wales stage, which passed over one arm and leg, the wheels grazing the top of his head, but he received no serious injury. His horse ran and was considerably cut up, and the wagon badly smashed.

HAMPDEN.

The Methodist society had a gathering last evening.

A supper of baked beans, brown and white bread, pies, cake, pickles and coffee, was served by the ladies of the Congregational church at their vestry Wednesday evening, after which the young ladies of the society gave an entertainment, consisting of songs, charades, tableaux, etc. "The Love of a Bonnet," by Misses Himes, Sessions, Newell, Lee and others, was warmly received, as was the tableau, "Courtship in Three Parts." This was the annual meeting of the society, and for the current year the officers are: Jennie Himes, president; Helen Sessions, vice-president; Emma Turner, secretary and treasurer. The society have received over $190 the past year.

BRIMFIELD.

The fishermen are having luck on the Sherman pond. Lyman E. Needham of this town caught 98 pounds, mostly pickerel, in three days, which he sold to Mr. Griffin of Palmer, for $10, and going fishing with him, they added 30 pounds to the previous lot; and the cry is, still they come.

The vital statistics of Brimfield for 1881 are as follows: Marriages, 9; births, 20; deaths, 21, of the following classes: under 5 years, 7; from 15 to 20 years, 1; from 40 to 50, 1; from 50 to 60, 2; from 60 to 70, 4; from 70 to 80, 3; from 80 to 90, 2; over 100, Jemima Groves, age 107 years, 16 days.

The ice on the Center mill pond was seven inches thick last week Thursday. H. A. Webber accordingly commenced plowing it out, and on Friday parties began filling their ice houses. Arthur B. Brown, who has charge of the farm of E. T. Sherman, plowed on the same, Dec. 29, 30 and 31—quite a difference in the kind of plowing in one short week. Teams went on to the pond last week Friday morning, but one of them broke through the ice, and they concluded to wait awhile.

THREE RIVERS.

The Union church elected the following officers at its annual meeting Tuesday evening: Deacons, O. S. Thayer and O. B. Sikes; clerk, R. C. Newell; treasurer, G. C. Buell; standing committee, R. E. Knowlton, S. C. Getchel, W. E. Kenerson, J. H. Thayer and C. S. Teague; committee on music, R. C. Newell, C. S. Ruggles and G. C. Buell.

Fire was discovered in the gas house at the Palmer Mill soon after 7 o'clock Thursday evening, and a sizable hole was burned through the roof, but the flames were extinguished by prompt work before they had done much damage. Nearly all the oil was safely removed from the building, and gas was being made as usual last night. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Bethel Chapter, No. 15, Golden Rule Alliance, elected these officers at their last meeting: judge, Fred. Ruggles; associate judge, Mrs. Fred. Ruggles: advocate, Miss Sarah Knox; scribe, Almon A. Milliken; collector, O. S. Thayer; treasurer, W. G. Kenerson; chaplain, J. H. Thayer; guide, Phidas Foote; warden, Mrs. J. H. Thayer; sentry, A. J. Heath. The retiring judge, R. E. Knowlton, will occupy the chair of past judge for the next six months.

MONSON.

G. W. Burdick has sold his big horse to Springfield parties.

J. M. Phipps takes a position in a drug store at Weymouth.

Dr. Ellis has taken the rooms formerly occupied by M. Bradway & Son in Central Block.

The selectmen have awarded the contract for building the two new roads recently laid out by them to Arba Squier.

Extra meetings have been held at the Congregational church this week, on account of the increased religious interest.

C. W. Holmes, Jr., has been chosen superintendent of the Congregational Sunday school, in place of Prof. Cummings, who declined.

The following directors were elected at the annual meeting of the Monson National Bank this week: Cyrus W. Holmes, Charles H. Merrick, Joshua Tracy, Edward F. Morris, Rice S. Munn, Rice M. Reynolds, Alfred Norcross.

Building operations have been active and extensive in town the past year, and there has been a decided increase in the number of dwelling houses, some 20 new ones having been erected, including the fine residence of A. D. Ellis on Green street, while the new straw works and the Lyon library building are the most imposing structures of the year. A number of additional houses will be put up this year, as the demand for homes is still undiminished.

WILBRAHAM.

The Quadrangle met with Mrs. Charles Mowry Thursday afternoon.

Miss Carrie Moody entertained the Willing Workers Saturday afternoon and evening.

The sewing society of the Congregational church was held at the house of Ira G. Potter this week.

The Farmers' club met with E. H. Brewer Monday evening. It was decided to hold an institute soon at the Allis House.

The Wilbraham branch of the Methodist woman's board of foreign missions at the last meeting chose the following officers: President, Mrs. Dr. Steele; vice-presidents, Mrs. A. L. Bridge, Mrs. M. J. Brewster, Miss C. J. Chamberlain; recording secretary, Miss Etta Bosworth; corresponding secretary, Miss Emily Wright; treasurer, Mrs. W. H. H. Phillips.

Athena and Club held an open society in Fisk Hall Friday evening, with the following programme: Prayer; music, "Il Laucredi;" opening address, Kora Chase; declamation, "Carton's Self-Sacrifice," Emma Yost; vocal solo, "For Ever and for Aye," W. H. Wright; question, "Is Conservatism Opposed to True Progress?" affirmative, Grace White, F. P. Harris; negative, Sadie Loomis, J. M. Sheehan; music, "The Whispering Wind," Grace E. Medbery; declamation, "How the Old Horse Won the Bet," C. G. Grilley; vocal quintette, "Alpine Echoes"; Evening Star and Athena World, editor, W. M. Prest, assistant editor, Nellie Morris; oration, "American Liberty—Its Founders," H. H. Paine; music, grand duo, "Bellazario."

WARE AND VICINITY.

Royal Smith has received back pension to the amount of $935.

Chas. Yale, M. D., son of Dr. John Yale, has opened an office in Lowell.

One hundred and forty-three births in Ware in 1881; 126 the year previous.

The land league will hold a fair at Music Hall the 21st, 23d and 24th of this month.

On Sunday morning last several boys were coasting in the lot near Maple street and otherwise desecrating the day.

John F. Robinson has resigned his position in the Boston hardware store of H. F. Brooks & Co., to re-enter his father's store in town.

F. H. Hosmer and Calvin Hitchcock are scattering calendars, advertising their enterprising firms through the surrounding towns.

John Kennedy, a book agent, was arrested last week at the request of Barre officers, for "beating" a hotel, but as he gave a good story concerning his troubles he was released.

The Ladies' sewing circle of the Methodist society at their annual meeting elected Mrs. J. M. Buffington president, Mrs. Jonathan Beers vice-president, Mrs. E. W. Sagendorph secretary and treasurer.

A numerous band of friends surprised David L. Barlow and wife on Tuesday evening at their home on High street, and left a valuable present. On Wednesday evening Mrs. Barlow entertained her Sunday school class.

It is a great pity that Henry Reynolds, M. D., the popular red ribbon reform worker, cannot visit us this winter. Owing to a lack of interest sufficient funds cannot be raised and the reform club have canceled their engagement.

The number of deaths in Ware the past year was 115. The number the year previous was 111. Out of the 115 there were 11 over 75 years of age, and 21 under one year; 15 died of consumption, 19 of fever, 9 of heart disease, 7 of pneumonia, 6 of old age.

A team belonging to Samuel Morse on Tuesday ran away, demolishing a harness and upsetting a buggy belonging to Geo. Lamberton, and ended by throwing to the ground the pair of team horses owned by Homer Partwell, that were standing near Clark's furniture store.

On Tuesday the national bank elected the following directors: Hon. Wm. Hyde, Otis Lane, Calvin Hitchcock of Ware; Nathan Richardson of Warren, William Mixter of Hardwick, Geo. W. Johnson of Brookfield, and Wm. S. Hyde of Ware. The directors elected Hon. Wm. Hyde as president and Wm. S. Hyde as cashier for the ensuing year.

The Grand Army boys and Masonic chapter installed their officers Thursday night; the latter opening their hall to all Master Masons and their wives. After the installation by D. D. G. H. P. Wm. A. Farnsworth of Worcester, some 200 partook of a banquet of wit as well as eatables at Music Hall. The lodges of Warren, Brookfield, Barre, Enfield and Ware were invited.

The lecture at Music Hall Wednesday evening by Archibald Forbes, the war correspondent of the London News, was an interesting epitome of the campaigns of the Franco-Prussian, Servian, Russo-Turkish and Zulu wars. His descriptions were painted with masterly skill, and held his audience spell-bound. It was one of the best literary treats ever given in Ware. Unless our citizens liberally patronize these entertainments of the Y. M. L. A., its members will be considerably behindhand. This ought not to be. Let us give them rousing benefits at the two remaining entertainments.

On Monday the savings bank began business in their new building on Bank St. It is a solid, square structure of brick with pressed brick, sand stone and black brick trimmings, and cost over $6000. H. P. Cummings of Ware was the contractor and builder, E. C. Gardner of Springfield the architect; H. Paige of Ware did all the interior coloring and tinting. The interior, 40 by 45 feet with walls 12 feet high, is finished in polished ash. The windows are of cathedral glass, and the whole appearance of the building is neat and pretty. The toilet rooms and connection with the national bank are in the south. In the center are the counters upon three sides of a hollow square. A large fire-proof vault is in the ell, and a very fine directors' room is separated from the main room by a glass partition. The furniture comes from John D. Chollar of Worcester, and the steam heating apparatus is furnished by Robbins, Gamwell & Co., of Pittsfield. The town now has a good enough bank for any one, and in its present prosperity we can take pride.

By permission we make in advance of publication the following statistics of the Brookfield Association of Congregational churches: Number of parishes in the association 21, of which 13 were organized before 1800, the oldest being West Brookfield, organized in 1717, and the yougest Gibertville, 1867. The oldest ordained pastor is Rev. Dr. Perkins of Ware, who was ordained in 1844 and installed over his present parish in 1855. The amount of money raised for benevolent purposes from 16 parishes was $16,674; number of male members January 1, 1882, 846; female, 1787. Additions during '81 by profession 74, by letter 49. Number died 43, dismissed to other churches 28, excommunicated 1. Number of adults baptized 40, infants 29. Number of scholars in 17 Sunday schools 2856, with an average attendance of 1537, from about 2100 families. The best average attendance is made by the New Braintree school. The largest school is the East parish of Ware, which numbers 407, with an attendance of 211, representing 220 families. Spencer and North Brookfield have 200 pupils.

The schooner Almon Bird was wrecked on the night of the 1st inst., and the crew of eight men took to the boat. They were poorly clad, and two of them died. The second mate died last, and the crew, maddened with thirst, opened his veins and drank the blood; they then tossed the body overboard. The survivors were picked up on the 5th, and taken to Pigeon Cove. One of them soon died, but the others will probably recover, though terribly frozen.

A. B. Darling, of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York, is supposed to have the two best cows in the world. He has just bought for $2000 cash the famous cow "Jersey Queen," with a record of 746 pounds of butter in one year, and her record this year is expected to pass 800 pounds. He also owns "Eurotas," a cow with a record of 750 pounds of butter in one year.

Boston points with pride to the Back Bay as an evidence of her remarkable growth. When the Hotel Brunswick was completed in 1873, there was nothing beyond it in the way of human habitation, and nothing between it and Beacon street. It is now only on the edge of the populous and handsome new fashionable quarter of the city.

Congressman Crapo has a scheme for illuminating Hell Gate at night, by placing an electric light on a skeleton iron light house, some 200 feet high. It will cost about $20,000, but will be of great value to steamers and vessels passing through the Sound.

A company has been formed in Winnipeg to supply Eastern cities with canned frogs. Large canning houses are to be built in the vicinity of the town of Whitemouth.

The emigration from Germany in 1882 promises to exceed that of any previous year; fourteen thousand tickets have already been engaged from Bremen to America.

The safe of the Uxbridge savings bank was blown open with dynamite Wednesday night, and robbed of $400 in postage stamps and a few dollars in cash.

The Michigan sufferers are greatly in need of more money, to carry them through the winter without starving.

LETTER FROM SPRINGFIELD.

How Things Look Since the City Election—Impending Trouble over the Holly Steam Heat—New Year's Calls.

Correspondence of the JOURNAL.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 12, 1882.

Matters at the county seat remain quiet. The heat generated by the city election a month or more ago has subsided, and we are breathing again the pure atmosphere of peace and good will which prevails in all well regulated communities in the season of Christmas and New Year's. All that was said that was unkind during the campaign is supposed to be forgiven, and brotherly love continues, according to the commandment. It is true, however, that human nature is unlike other commodities, and sometimes forgiven things are remembered. For instance, some of the members of the Republican party, who take straight nominations, no matter how secured, are chuckling over the result of the election which put a Democrat in the mayor's chair, and saying, on the sly, "I hope those fellows will get all they want this year;" referring of course to their back-sliding brethren who sailed in to defeat the regular party candidate. And it is not expected they will dress in mourning, if the Democratic mayor proves to be an eye-sore to them. His words and actions are carefully watched, and when they notice apparent discrepancies they exultingly exclaim, "I told you so." It is not unnatural therefore, that they laugh as they hold up the mayor's letter of acceptance in one hand, and his inaugural message in the other, and compare his utterances on the liquor question. They are more unlike than the King James and new versions. His friends explain the difference by saying that the same quill was not used at the two sittings; that the party of the second part did not know how the party of the first part had treated that subject; which is ungenerous, of course, but people will talk.

Another matter that promises to make discussion, if not disturbance, in the near future, is our Holly heat system, introduced three years ago by the gas company. The corporation asked and received extraordinary rights of the city in the way of exclusive privileges for laying pipes, etc., and for two years the owners of buildings heated with the steam spoke highly of it, as the expense did not much exceed the cost of fuel in the ordinary way of heating; but this season the gas company has set the screws down, and although the weather has been unusually mild, the heat bills are enormous. Now Tweed's question, "What are you going to do about it?" is in order. The buildings are piped at great expense for steam heat, but the luxury of the system is so expensive the use of stoves again is being agitated by the economical. The gas company in reply say that the past two years it has made nothing on the heat, and thinks it time to begin to realize, which sounds reasonable. One of our city papers, anticipating just this state of affairs, insisted when the grant was asked that the corporation be required to advertise its profit and loss account, so that patrons might see if they were being mercifully dealt by; but the city government was too magnanimous to ask such a thing of a great and good corporation; in the language of the minstrels, "Where are we now?"

The third annual effort of some of our young men to make pigs of themselves on New Year's day was a failure this season. Three years ago, through the persistent efforts of our local press to make New Year's calls popular, a number of the first families threw open their doors to the tramps who paraded the streets in search of free entertainment; the second year it did not work as well, and this season scarcely a door was found ajar. However much our people may desire to imitate New Yorkers in other respects, it is evident that the custom of open house to everything that comes along on the first day of the year will never become popular in this latitude. Our ladies are a little particular in their selection of guests. SUNNY COOK.

Prof. Edward S. Morse of Salem, one of the original scientific thinkers of the day, has invented a new method of heating houses and public buildings by means of the sun. The invention consists merely of a surface of blackened slate under glass fixed to the sunny side or sides of a house, with vents in the walls so arranged that the cold air of a room is let out at the bottom of the slate and forced in again at the top by the ascending heated column between the slate and the glass. The out-door air can be admitted, also, if desirable. The entire practicalness of the contrivance is demonstrated in the heating of the Professor's study in his cottage at Salem.

A stone bridge to be built at Minneapolis bids fair to become one of the notable structures of the world. It will consist of sixteen 80 feet spans and four 100 feet spans, and, including the short pieces, will have a total length of 1,000 feet. It will support two railway tracks at a height of over sixty feet above the water, and will run diagonally across the river below St. Anthony's Falls. The cost is estimated at nearly $500,000.

S. A. Vandercook, an unmarried man 55 years of age, residing in Alford, Mass., near the New York line, was murdered on Tuesday by Oscar F. Beckwith, a hermit about 60 years old, an old California miner and a desperate character. Beckwith attempted to conceal the evidence of his crime by cutting up and partially burning the body of his victim in his stove, but left his work unfinished and fled. He had threatened to kill Vandercook, because of some trouble over a gold mine in the vicinity.

A smart negro boy 16 or 17 years of age, at Point Coupee, La., raised nineteen bales of cotton on eleven acres of land which he cultivated the past year. He also raised corn enough to feed one team for a year. The cotton is worth $850. Not many white boys could do better than that.

Only one of the seven workmen employed in the telescope manufactory of Alven Clark at Cambridge is an American, and Mr. Clark gives as a reason that Americans are too nervous to do the minute and exact work required, such as dividing a small circle of metal into 440 parts.

George Clifford of Greenwich advertised in the papers for a wife and received answers from 120 women all over the Union. He has just married one of the applicants, a Huntington woman. Oh, it pays to advertise.

News Nuggets.

The cost of the Guiteau trial is estimated at $50,000.

Springfield talks of introducing the Herdic coaches.

Three boys were drowned in Charlestown last Saturday.

The 20th quarterly convention of the Massachusetts Reform Clubs was held at Malden, Wednesday.

The 200th anniversary of the opening of the First Church, Hingham, was observed last Saturday.

A Belfast, Ohio, man has been put under $500 bonds for opening a letter from his wife to her father.

The churches at Port Jervis, N. J., were all closed last Sunday on account of the prevalence of small-pox.

The funeral procession of a Mexican child at Del Rio, Texas, marched to the music of a fiddle and accordeon.

A building at Syracuse, N. Y., was crushed by falling walls Monday, burying 20 persons in ruins; three were killed.

A boy and two girls broke through the ice while crossing the Quaboag at Brookfield last Sunday, and were drowned.

Paymaster Holt's office in the B. & A. R. R. building in Springfield was robbed of $100 in silver Monday evening.

Three boys at Oskaloosa, Iowa, fired at a powder magazine with their rifles. There isn't enough left of them to do so again.

A case has been decided in New York in favor of Yale College, involving the title to property in that city valued at $1,000,000.

An intelligent New York jury has decided that the selling of skim-milk is a violation of the law against the sale of adulterated milk.

The stockholders of the Pacific National Bank of Boston have voted an assessment of 100 per cent, and the bank will resume business.

The fast mail train between New York and Washington was stopped the other day by a couple of elephants in one of the cars, who amused themselves by pulling the bell rope.

Selah Chamberlain, the holder of most of the compromised railroad bonds of Minnesota, went to St. Paul in a special car, equipped with a huge safe, to make a settlement with the State. He received $200,000 in cash and $2,000,000 in new bonds, but the safe was too small to hold the plunder. A large trunk and a guard of five armed men were accordingly placed in the car to accompany him home.

A forgetful woman out west the other night aroused the inmates of a hotel to which her bridal trip had led on account of finding a man in her room. The trifling circumstance of her marriage that morning had quite escaped her memory, and it was not until summary justice was about to be visited upon the offender that she happened to think that he was her husband.

Prof. Edward D. Cope, the Philadelphia geologist and palæontologist, thinks he has discovered a "missing link." In the tertiary formation of the Big Horn Valley, Wyoming, he dug out the skull of a species of monkey which exhibits human characteristics in miniature, and is vastly superior to the monkey skulls of the present day.

The statement that last week's accident on the Boston and Maine Railroad was the first one that had occurred on that road for 42 years was erroneous. A calamity involving a loss of six lives occurred about sixteen years ago at the Charles River drawbridge, by a passenger train going over into the draw.

According to a recent opinion by Judge Gray, corporations are not authorized to make subscriptions to promote fairs, jubilees, etc. The Old Colony Railroad subscribed to the Peace Jubilee, but it had no legal power to do so, and the money cannot be paid.

The Paterson (N. J.) Locomotive Works have turned out 500 engines, valued at $5,000,000, within the past year, and from orders already on hand it is estimated that the number this year will reach 600, or nearly two a day.

A medical man has offered Scoville $1000 for Guiteau's dead body, and is willing to pay the purchase money down, and run his chances of waiting twenty years for the body. Guiteau thinks he ought to bring more than that.

It is said that no port on the Atlantic coast shows an increase of exports of wheat last year except Boston. New York fell off 16 per cent, Philadelphia 60 per cent, Baltimore 40 per cent, and New Orleans 5 or 6 per cent.

It is reported that a bed of crystalized soda nine feet thick has been discovered in Wyoming, on the line of the Union Pacific Railroad, and that the railroad corporation is about to develop it.

The Senate claims committee has decided to report favorably a bill to pay A. H. Emery $225,000 for the iron testing machine he invented for the government at the Watertown, Mass., arsenal.

Havemeyer & Elder's big sugar refinery in Williamsburg, N. Y., was burned on Sunday; loss about $2,000,000. One thousand men are turned out of employment temporarily.

The New York Legislature will be urged to enlarge the Erie canal. It would cost $10,000,000, but it is claimed that the benefit to the State would warrant the expenditure.

Our Book Table.

The Connecticut Valley Historical Society has now been in existence nearly six years, and has just issued a neat volume of 325 pages, containing an abstract of its proceedings up to December, 1881. Those interested in the history of the Connecticut valley will find much of interest in this work, as it contains many of the papers read at the Society's meetings, and many items of interest not readily found elsewhere. It has also a fine portrait of William Pynchon, the pioneer in the Massachusetts settlements of this valley, furnished by one of his descendants, Dr. Joseph C. Pynchon of Springfield. The book is well bound in cloth and can be obtained from the publishing committee, William L. Smith, William S. Shurtleff and William Rice of Springfield. It is also on sale by Whitney & Adams and other Springfield booksellers. Price $2.00; will be sent by mail for $2.15. Those wishing to obtain it will do well to purchase at once, as the edition is a small one and no other will be issued.

In our advertising columns will be found an offer to young housekeepers and brides, which they will do well to avail themselves of, for The Household will be found of great value to all ladies interested in cooking, fancy work, the culture of plants and the many branches of industry where practical suggestions are so acceptable, while the literary portions of the paper furnish entertaining reading matter for all.

The North American Review will present in its February number, to be published on the 15th of the present month, Part III. of its series of articles on "The Christian Religion." It will be from the pen of Geo. P. Fisher, the eminent professor of ecclesiastical history in the Yale Divinity School,—as thorough a scholar and as able a defender of the Christian faith as this country affords. A powerful presentation of the claims of Christianity is expected.

The steamer Lion, which left St. Johns, N. F., last week Friday, on a sealing expedition, was sunk the same day, from some unknown and mysterious cause, and the 43 persons on board all perished.

Deserving articles are always appreciated. The exceptional cleanliness of Parker's Hair Balsam makes it popular. Grey hairs are impossible with its occasional use. j

The Sanitary Engineer.

The recognized authority on all matters relating to Public Health, Food and Drug Adulteration, Drainage and Water Supply, Steam and Hot Water Heating, Plumbing and Gas Fitting, Gas and Electric Lightning, Heating and Ventilation.

Questions on any of these subjects will be answered in the columns of THE SANITARY ENGINEER, free of charge.

The opinions of this journal upon all technical subjects are either prepared or revised by specialists.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

Our excellent technical contemporary, THE SANITARY ENGINEER, bye the bye, is hereafttr to be published weekly, a token of prosperity that is especially gratifying as a proof of public appreciation of the very useful work which our contemporary has done for the public.—New York World.

This journal has become the leading authority in this country upon sanitary questions.—Ohio Medical Journal.

THE SANITARY ENGINEER shows an excellent appreciation of what may be done in the field of Sanitary Engineering, and a practical capability for doing it.—New York Tribune.

The excellent paper published in this city, and called THE SANITARY ENGINEER, might add to its title that of the Practical Philanthropist, for such it proves itself to be in its constant and clear exposure of the wrongs and dangers of many of our domestic and municipal arrangements.—Harper's Weekly.

Prof. Chandler, when delivering a popular and most telling lecture on Sanitation, lately at the Cooper Institute, advised his hearers to subscribe to THE SANITARY ENGINEER, a publication devoted to Sanitation in all its phases. It contains the best thoughts of the best trained Sanitarians of the period.—Congregationalist.

Mr. John Walter, of the London Times, has addressed a letter to the editor of THE SANITARY ENGINEER, of this city, requesting an opinion as to the system of ventilating sewers by perforations or open gratings in the streets. The compliment paid to American sanitary engineering by Mr. Walter's letter, is most flattering; but that it is deserved will not be questioned by those familiar with the merits of the authority Mr. Walters consulted.—New York Com'l Advertiser.

THE SANITARY ENGINEER is for sale by all newsdealers in the United States and Canada. Single Copies Seven Cents. Terms, Three Dollars per year, in advance, postage paid. Published every Thursday at 140 William Street, New York.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of John Ward, late of New Britain, in the county of Hartford, and State of Connecticut, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, a petition has been presented to said court, by Edwin B. Lyon of said New Britain, with certain papers purporting to be copies of the last will and testament of said deceased, and of the probate thereof in said State of Connecticut duly authenticated, representing that at the time of his death said deceased had estate in said county of Hampden, on which said will may operate, and praying that a copy of said will may be filed and recorded in the Probate Office of said county of Hampden, and letters testamentary thereon granted to him, and that he may be exempted from giving a surety or sureties on his official bond as executor of said will under said letters,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of February next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same. And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation three weeks successively in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, in said county of Hampden, the last publication to be thirty days, at least, before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirty-first day of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

REMEMBER THE PLACE!

Good-Night.

Good-night—the little lips touch ours,
The little arms enfold us;
And oh, that thus through coming years
They might forever hold us!

Good-night! we answer back and smile,
And kiss the drooping eyes;
But in our trembling hearts the while
The wistful queries rise—

Who, in the weary years to come,
When we are hid from sight,
Will clasp these little hands and kiss
Those little lips "Good-night?"

STRIKER STOWE'S STRENGTH.

Striker Stowe was a tall, powerful Scotchman, whose position as "Boss Striker" at the steel works made him generally known. Nearly all of the men in his department were hard drinkers, and he was no exception to the rule. But one day it was announced among the workmen that he had become religious, and sure enough, when pressed to take a drink he said:—

"I shall never drink mair, lads. Na droonkard can inherit the kingdom o' God."

The knowing ones smiled and said: "Wait a bit. Wait until hot weather—until July. When he gets as dry as a gravel-pit he will give in. He can't help it."

But right through the hottest months he toiled, the sweat pouring off in streams; yet he seemed never to be tempted to drink. Finally, as I was taking the men's time, one evening, I stopped and spoke with him. "Stowe," said I, "you used to take considerable liquor. Don't you miss it?"

"Yes," said he emphatically.

"How do you manage to keep away from it?"

"Weel, just this way. It is now tan o'clock, isn't it?"

"Yes."

"Weel, to-day is the twentieth o' the month. From seven till eight, I asked that the Lord would halp me. He did so an' I put down a dot on the calendar, right near the twenty. From eight till nine he kep' me, and I put down another dot. From nine till tan he's kep' me, an' noo I gie him the glory as I put down the third dot. Just as I mark these, I pray, 'O Lord halp me—halp me to fight it off for another hour.'"

"How long shall you keep this up?" I inquired.

"All o' my life," was the earnest reply. "It keeps me sae full o' peace an' happiness that I wouldna gie it up for anything. It is just as if he took me by the hand and said, 'Wark awa', Striker Stowe, I'm wi' ye. Dinna' be fearfu'. You teek care o' yeer regular wark an' I'll see to the de'll an' the thirst, an' they shallna trouble ye.'"

A GOOD MOTHER'S PLAN.

A lady gave a rule not long since by which she succeeded in interesting her lively, fun loving boys, so that they preferred to stay at home evenings instead of seeking amusement elsewhere. She said:

"I remember that children are children and must have amusements. I fear that the abhorrence with which some good parents regard any play for children is the reason why children go away for pleasure. Husband and I used to read some history, and at the end of each chapter ask some questions requiring the answer to be looked up if not answered correctly. We follow a similar plan with the children. Sometimes we play one game and sometimes another, always planning with books, stories, plays or treats of some kind to make the evenings at home more attractive than they can be made abroad.

"I dislike to think that any one could make my children happier than I can, so I always try to be at leisure in the evening and arrange something entertaining. When there is a good concert, lecture, or entertainment, we all go together to attend it, for whatever is worth the price of admission for us older people, is equally valuable to the children, and we spare no expense where it is to their advantage to be out of an evening. But the greater number of our evenings are spent quietly at home. Sometimes it requires quite an effort to sit quietly talking and playing with them, when my work-basket is filled with unfinished work, and books and papers lay unread on the table; but as the years go by, and I see my boys and girls growing into home-loving, modest young men and maidens, I am glad it was my rule to give the best of myself to my family."

WHY IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE.

A reporter dropped into one of our largest retail establishments Wednesday, and held a conversation with the proprietor. "You have a great rush," remarked the reporter. "Yes," replied the proprietor, "a big rush—partly because it is holiday season but mainly on account of advertising." "How can you tell whether advertising pays, and what papers are good mediums?" "I can tell that advertising pays by stopping my advertisements. I've tried it. Trade drops, not at once, but the tide of purchasers flows some other way. The cash receipts tell the story."

"Is there any difference in the sharpness of the buyers—I mean, do they haggle much over prices?" "Oh, no; we sell at one price, and all the best stores in Boston do the same. They will sometimes say they can buy such and such an article cheaper elsewhere. When they mention the place we send and see if it is true, and if so, we mark our stock down."

"Suppose you should give up advertising?" "Well, I should save a big pile of money the first year, but I should lose a bigger pile the next two years. You must keep the boilers heated if you want steam. If you bank your fires too long, it takes time to start up. Advertising is the steam which keeps business moving. I've studied the matter."—Boston Journal.

The hard, black German slate pencil has been superseded of late years by the round, white pencil of clay slate. At the quarry, near Castleton, Vt., about 35 workmen produce 50,000 pencils daily, and it is proposed to increase the daily output to 100,000. The blocks when quarried are sawed into pieces 7x12 inches, split to a thickness of a half-inch and smoothed by a planer. The block is passed under a semi-circular knife, and, after having been turned over, the process is repeated. The result is 50 seven-inch pencils. A particle of quartz in the block would break all the pencils. They are pointed by a grindstone, turned, assorted and sent to market in boxes of 100.

The Mother has made a Lap. The boy is in the Lap. He is looking at the Carpet. What has the Mother in her Hand? She has a Shingle in Her Hand. What will she do with the Shingle? She will put it Where it will Do the Most Good.—Puck.

It takes over one hundred pairs of gloves to assuage the grief of the Brooklyn officials over the death of an alderman, whose life might have been saved by a single bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

It is the height of folly to wait until you are in bed with disease you may not get over for months, when you can be cured during the early symptoms by Parker's Ginger Tonic. We have known the sickliest families made the healthiest by a timely use of this pure medicine.—Observer.

The Kingston (N. Y.) Freeman relates the experience of a young mother in that town with her first baby. The mother, it seems, had been reared in luxury, and was lacking in practical knowledge: "The other day she undertook to give the child a bath in a small foot tub. The lady's mother, who lives with her, passing through the room, dipped her finger in the water, and told her daughter it was too cold for the little one and that she would have to warm it. Instead of adding a little warm water, she placed the bath tub with the baby in it on a small gas stove, and waited for further developments. The developments came as soon as the bottom of the tub began to get extra warm. The offspring gave one yell, when the fond mother, grandmother and the two servants rushed to the rescue. In the future, grandmother will look after the child, while the mother reads up on the cares of a mother and how to bring up children."

John Debois took a great deal of trouble to get a good pair of boots in St. Louis for nothing, but he achieved success. He was a traveler staying at the Grand Central Hotel. He went to a store and ordered the finest pair that could be made. He was exact in his stipulations as to the material and style, and wished them sent to his room at a certain time. Then he gave the same order in another store, except that the delivery was to be made half an hour later. The boy who brought the first pair was sent back to have the left boot stretched, and the boy who carried the second pair was sent back with the right one. Debois then put on the two remnants, for which he had not paid, and caught the next outbound train.

"What did you do with that letter that was on my table?" asked Gus de Smith of the colored boy who cleans up his room. "I tuck it to the post office, sah, and put it in de hole." "What did you do that for? Did you not see there was no address on the envelope?" "I saw dar was no writin' on de 'velope, but I lowed yer did dat ar on purposs, so I couldn't tell who yer was a writin' to. I'se an edicated negro, I is."—Texas Siftings.

WOMAN'S TRIUMPH.

A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION—IT IS ENDURED WITHOUT TAKING ETHER—SUBJECT, MRS. EDWARD MEYERS, OF RONDOUT, N. Y.

(From the correspondence of the Kingston. N. Y. Freeman.)

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Rondout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand, without benefit. Not until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy, proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received this terrible intelligence quietly, declined to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorite Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it. 4w-43

WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northeast from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of handsome chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with

A BRAVE LADY.

SHE ENDURES THE PAIN OF A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION WITHOUT TAKING CHLOROFORM.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., New York, had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflammatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed, she was a mere wreck, a walking skeleton. In this terrible strait she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said, "All right, Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out nor stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength, and is now well. The "Favorite Remedy" is a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it. Your druggist has it. If not, send to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, New York. 4w41

The Old Year.

A shadow stood by my bed last night—
A shadow wan, and worn, and old;
With a frozen look on the wrinkled face,
And the hand he laid on mine was cold.
In the ghostly presence I shook with dread,
And shrank from his touch with curdling fear,
As I cried: "God save me! spectre grim,
What sorrowful errand brings thee here?"

Then the pale lips moved, and a whisper came,
Like a breath from the north wind, chill and drear:
"Oh, timid mortal, be not afraid
Of the shrinking form of the dying year!
I am sealing the records my pen hath made—
To be read in the light of the Great White Throne;
Hast thou aught to tell, ere my book is closed,
Of labor for Christ that thou hast done?

"With the names of those who day by day
Scattered the precious seed with tears—
Who bound full sheaves in the harvest time,
And garnered stores for the coming years,
I have vainly looked, oh, child of earth,
If thine, perchance, might be entered there;
Arise; be doing; 'tis not yet too late;
For thee, if thou wilt, there are gleanings rare!

"There are golden grains by others lost,
And sheaves that the reapers in haste forgot;
Up, sluggard soul, from slothful rest,
The hours are precious; oh, waste them not!
Oh, work! oh, work! for the time is short,
To write thee the Lord's ere the bell is tolled
That shall tell to the world that the dead old year
Is laid in the shadows, stark and cold!"

* * * * *

The bell tolled slow for the old year gone;
Alas! for the work that was left undone!

WOOED IN THE DOCKS.

There were twenty-seven persons charged with various offences before his honor that morning. It was only about eighteen months ago.

One of the accused was a young girl about seventeen, who was weeping very bitterly. The usual crowd of hangers on the police court was leering eagerly at the unfortunate tramp, the irreclaimable drunkard, the foreheadless petit larcenist, and the burly burglar.

But there was something in this young girl's sobs, in this sorrow of the fair-haired maiden who had passed the night in the same cell with drunken prostitutes, female dive thieves and women of the worst class, that was heart-breaking.

Even the bailiff of the court—accustomed to criminal misery and inured to the scenes of suffering from the suicide of a wanton to the execution of a murderer and his parting with his mother and sister—even the bailiff felt touched, and, walking up to the railing whispered some kind word in her ear.

And next to her sat a young man pale as death. The humiliation of his position stood out in bold bas relief in his attitude and in every feature of his face, in the nervous clutch of his hands, in the shifting of his feet, the disarranged hair, and the silently expressed suffering.

The judge was late that morning, and kept the prisoners waiting.

"Don't cry," the young man was saying to the girl who sat next to him. "I am sure you have done nothing wrong. I would pledge my life you have not. Tell me your troubles and I will tell you mine. I have been with a wholesale jeweler for two years, and I got into bad company, took some gold that I was to work up into a bracelet and sold it. I first accused some one of having stolen it, but last night I confessed. They had me arrested, and I shall plead guilty and take my punishment."

The girl turned her head quickly, and between her sobs said:

"But I—I have done nothing wrong; only one of the girls at the store where I work put some laces in my pocket because—she is jealous of me, and then they found it there, and a policeman came, and,—oh, my heart is breaking?"

* * * * *

"Hugh Murray, accused of robbing his employer, what have you to say?"

"Guilty!"

His face was whiter than ever, but his mouth was firm and resolute, and after he had said the word that made him a convict, he faced the magistrate and said:

"Your Honor, I have said guilty, because I should be a liar if I said anything else; but your honor, I have this to add to my plea; I never drank wine in all my life until last Friday night, and I was utterly under its influence when I took that gold."

At this juncture an elderly man stepped forward and said, in a voice choked with emotion: "Your honor, I am this young man's employer, and I am very sorry that I have taken these steps now. With your permission I withdraw the charge."

But his honor only looked a little dimly through his spetacles and said:

"Too late; complaint sworn to, arrest made, prisoner pleads guilty."

And it came to pass that Hugh Murray expiated the one criminal act of his life by six months in the house of correction.

But before he left the dock he contrived to whisper to his neighbor: "Tell me your name won't you? I have been so bad, and I am sure you are so good; and perhaps when my punishment is over you who are so gentle will let me come and see you and call you my friend."

And she, with her great eyes all bleared with tears, said faintly: "My name is Isabel—Isabel Daley. I hope you won't be bad again, and that they won't be unkind to you."

And he passed out of the dock with these words ringing in his ears: "I hope you won't be bad again, and that they won't be unkind to you." And when he reached the cell from which they were to take him away to the house of correction, the firmness that kept him up so far all left him, and crouched on the cold stones, he burst into a passionate fit of weeping.

He was not long alone, for his employer had followed him, and the once severe master was now as badly broken as the clerk whom he had caused to be punished so severely. The old jeweler put his arms around Hugh's neck and for several minutes could not speak. At last he said:

"My poor boy, I wish I could undo this. When I saw you standing on the dock, you made me think of a boy of my own who was ruined by the wine cup, and left me for I don't know where. What can I do? How can I undo this?"

There was no reply, for both hearts were too full to speak for a moment; but the young man at last raised his head and said:

"I was not crying like a baby for my punishment, and I have nothing but good will to you. If you have been harsh to me, I don't know it. Let me be candid with you. I was a thief, and I was a drunkard—a thief for the first time and a drunkard for the first time; but still I was both. If you think you have been harsh, then, when my punishment is over, help me to go somewhere where I can get work—a long way off, where my story is not known, and, as I live, I will repay your kindness ten-fold. And there is a young girl," he continued, "charged with stealing some lace, up stairs. Will you see her? I am sure she is innocent, and in the dock she forgot all her trouble for a moment to ask me never to be bad again. It was that, Mr. Belden, which made me give way so weakly."

The parting was a sad one, but the inevitable had to come, and Hugh Murray was for six months to come only "No. 137," in the western corridor.

A few days after he had been in prison he received a trunk full of new clothing from his late employer, some luxuries in the way of food, etc., that were specially permitted by the warden, and the following letter:

"MY DEAR HUGH: Please accept the accompanying little gifts from me, and keep up a good heart. I send you some useful books with which to employ your time. Your friend, who was in such trouble, was perfectly innocent, and was discharged, her arrest having been a conspiracy, and she is now head saleswoman of the house where she was accused of theft. I called and told her yesterday how bitterly you suffered from her sympathy; the noble girl burst into tears and bade me tell you to be of good courage and never be bad again."

* * * * *

A year after this there was a quiet little wedding in Toronto, Canada, and the bridegroom was a successful young jeweler just started in business and president of one of the total abstinence societies, while the bride's name was Isabel Daley. And as he held her to his heart after the ceremony, he whispered: "Darling, do you remember that you were wooed in a prisoner's dock?"

The one strange thing about the wedding was, however, that when they got to their new little home there was a letter addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Murray, and it has a smudge on it just as if an old-fashioned salt tear had fallen on it, and all that was inside of it was a check for $1000, signed by Everett Belden.

"I'M OUT TO-MORROW."

The following pathetic incident is from an account in the New York Tribune of a visit to Sing Sing Prison:

A pitiable and interesting case was that of young McCarty, as the name appeared on the register. This was an alias, however. McCarty had been sent to prison for two years for stealing. He was suffering from consumption when received. The poor fellow lay in his cot. He was undoubtedly in the last stages of his disease, and had an intelligent face and a good brow. He was apparently about thirty years of age. The Warden stepped slowly up to his cot.

"Well, McCarty, almost through?" the Warden asked in a quiet way.

"Yes, Warden, this is the last day, I'm out to-morrow," McCarty replied, his voice scarcely above a whisper.

"How are you feeling?"

"Oh, I'm stronger."

"What are you going to do?"

"God only knows, Warden. I've got $15 left. But how long will that keep me? I suppose I must go to New York. If somebody only knew of my case and would give me $5 to help me on to Philadelphia I could do something there. I could earn $3 a day there. God knows I don't want to be driven to stealing again." He spoke with broken breath, almost gasping out parts of his speech.

"Are you strong enough to go?" the Warden asked.

"Yes, I'm going. My legs are heavy, and they won't work very well, but I'm going. If I only had an overcoat it would protect me from the cold. I'm afraid of the raw air. Do you think, Warden," he asked appealingly, "that there might be an old overcoat lying around that I could have?"

"Don't give yourself any trouble about that, McCarty. I'll see that you are fixed out with everything you want."

"Thank you, Warden, thank you."

A bright light shone in McCarty's eyes. He was evidently thinking of the morrow.

"So, then," the Warden said again to McCarty, as he moved away, "you are bound to go to-morrow?"

"Yes, Warden. Only let me get outside the walls, outside the walls." McCarty was left smiling at the thought of "only getting outside the walls." "Poor fellow," exclaimed the Warden when he had moved away; "I'm afraid he won't ever get outside the walls alive. Stronger? He's growing weaker and weaker. It's strange what a fascination it has for him to get outside the walls."

McCarty had not a friend in the world, nor was there any one to take any interest in him.

HOW THEY PRONOUNCE IT.

These are some of the numerous ways in which the name of Garfield's assassin is pronounced by the people:

"How they getting on with old Gutar?"

"That Gewtaw trial is mighty interestin'."

"Think they'll hang that Gut-ter?"

"Do you think Get-to insane?"

"A pretty clear-headed lunatic, that Get-to."

"What dy'e think they'll do with that 'ere Gewte-o?"

"I tell ye, that Guitar is smarter'n a flash."

"I see you're runnin' that Goo-shaw trial yet."

"Pity Mason didn't shoot that Gee-to in his tracks."

"Miserable man, that Go-shay."

"Why don't Judge Cox shut off that Gewto's chin?"

"How's Gwito coming out?"

"Goatee's weaving hemp for his own neck, ain't he?"

"That Gu-it-e-ar is a rattler."

"I don't see for my part why they don't court martial Go-too right off."

"Darn Git-cow, I reckon they won't do nothing with him."

These and a score of other hintings toward the wretch's unpronounceable name are daily utterances. His relatives pronounce it as though spelled Get-to, with the accent on the first syllable.

"Ma, haven't I been a real good boy since I've been going to Sunday school?" "Yes, my lamb," answered the maternal parent, fondly. "And you trust me now, don't you, ma?" "Yes, darling." "Then," spoke up the little innocent, "what makes you keep the preserves locked up in the pantry the same as ever?"

"Captain," said a cheeky youth, "is there any danger of disturbing the magnetic currents, if I examine that compass too closely?" and the stern mariner, loving his little joke, promptly responded, "No, sir; brass has no effect whatever on them."

PASTEUR AND HIS DISCOVERIES.

During the past summer there was held in London the International Medical Congress, which was visited by thousands of the medical profession, very many of whom were the most distinguished physicians and surgeons from all parts of the civilized world. Among the many distinguished people gathered at that remarkable conference was a partially paralyzed Frenchman, who was received with most remarkable enthusiasm. It is said that when the distinguished president of the meeting, Sir James Paget, paused in his opening discourse to point out on the platform this man, who has been called the most distinguished benefactor of his time, the whole of the vast audience cheered him lustily again and again. This modest appearing man, who has probably done more for scientific medicine than any man living, is neither a physician nor a surgeon, but a chemist who has devoted many years to the study of fermentation and analagous processes excited by the development and activity of various microscopic organisms in organic substances.

His first researches were upon the subject of spontaneous generation; and these placed him among the foremost ranks of the scientific investigators of his time. The results of these investigations and the methods and lines of experiment which he instituted have proved almost without doubt the impossibility of the origination of any form of life, except as the product of an antecedent living organism. His methods of study have been employed in all subsequent investigations upon this subject, of so great interest to all students of biology or the science of life. But his labors did not end here; this was but the beginning of his life work.

About this time there swept over France and Italy a fearful plague among silk-worms, which threatened to cause the extinction of the silk trade in those countries. The government of France became alarmed; millions and millions of dollars were being lost; looms and spindles were standing idle; thousands of men and women were thrown out of employment, and one of the most important sources of national income was nearly cut off. The government appointed a commission to investigate the matter, but with little avail. Finally the matter was intrusted to M. Pasteur, who devoted himself most assiduously to the study of the origin and nature of the singular disease. With unremitting toil and sublime patience he worked on for years until he had discovered the cause of the malady and had found an efficient remedy. The silk industry was restored to France; a fabulous amount of money was saved; the looms and spindles were again set in motion; the financial ruin of thousands was averted in consequence of the patient study of a sick worm by this great man. But while France and Italy rejoiced in their renewed prosperity, Pasteur was a cripple; in rendering this service to his country he had received a permanent paralysis of one of his sides. It was thought that his disability would end his scientific career, but other glories awaited him and greater conquests were to be made.

He turned his attention to the study of wine, vinegar and beer. He devised methods of controlling the manufacture of these substances so as to prevent the disastrous failure due to abnormal fermentation, which had proved such a bane to manufacturers. Prof. Tyndall says, "It is no exaggeration to state that the money value of his work would go far to pay off the indemnity which France had to pay Germany." Well might a man rest after such work as this. Well may the world unite in honoring such a worker. But half is not yet told. Pasteur's latest triumphs are his greatest; his most recent services to mankind are his most beneficent.

There is a fearful epidemic disease among cattle, sheep and horses, and which sometimes attacks human beings, which the French call charbon, and the English splenic fever, or malignant pustule. This epidemic is very common in Europe and is sometimes seen in this country. Pasteur estimates that every year animals of the value of twenty million francs have hitherto been lost in France in consequence of this scourge. In a single district in Russia 56,000 animals and 528 human beings were destroyed by this fearful disease within a period of three years.

Stimulated by Pasteur's discoveries in fermentation, Devaine had studied this disease; he and other observers had found minute rod-shaped organisms in the blood of afflicted animals. A German physician by the name of Koch discovered the germs by which the disease is propagated. The one thing which remained was to discover a method of preventing the dreadful havoc of these germs. This Pasteur has lately done. He has devised a way of mitigating the virulence of the virus of the disease, so that by inoculating animals with this mitigated virus, the disease is communicated in a very mild form; but it is found that immunity from the more virulent form is secured in this way. The practical efficacy of this plan is being tested on a grand scale in France. Within the space of fifteen days more than twenty thousand sheep and many cattle and horses were inoculated near Paris. Pasteur has devised a way to prevent chicken cholera among fowls in the same way. He is now at work upon the subject of hydrophobia.

Though the money value of Pasteur's labors is almost inestimable, this is trivial in comparison with the worth of his contributions to the cause of humanity. He has let in floods of light upon the subject of the germ theory of disease. His methods of research are being employed to-day by many investigators in different parts of the world, in the study of infectious and contagious diseases, and science seems to stand on the verge of discoveries of stupendous importance to the welfare of mankind. It is well known that many of the most fatal and dreaded diseases which medicine has to contend with are of this infectious nature. We seem to have good reason to believe that these remorseless foes of the human kind may be brought under subjection as the splenic fever and chicken cholera of the lower animals have been.

All honor to the great Pasteur, noble devotee of science—one of the most remarkable examples of genius, patience, perseverance and intrepidity furnished us by modern times. He is daily bending over his microscope and handling the germs of disease and desolation, seeking to lessen the pain and suffering of the world. Let the world do homage to this man, and let the world do homage to Science, his mistress, who has conferred so many priceless gifts upon us. **

Compensation.

Earth ploughed the deepest bears the best;
Growth comes of motion, not of rest;
From sweetest grapes, in presses flung,
The richest wine is sharply wrung.

Then let your harrowed, anguished soul
Enrich, and ripened sheaves unroll;
For lo! endurance means in thee
Maturing for eternity.

No word, nor look, nor touch, perchance,
Of mortals can thy strength enhance,
Till they shall have, by God's decrees,
The plowshare felt and borne the sheaves.

It is not new, this hurt of thine;
All hearts have ached that give the wine!
In time, when bead from must runs clear,
The love that bruised thee shall appear.

THE ENGINEER'S STORY.

In the fall of 1879 I was at Cairo, Ill., and was very anxious to get up to Centralia as soon as possible. As I would have had to wait several hours for the regular passenger train, I looked about for some way out of my trouble, and was fortunate enough to get invited by the engineer of a construction train to ride upon the engine with him. It was doubly pleasant to me, for I found him to be a very intelligent man, and possessed of a fund of anecdote that made the time pass very quickly. We had been talking of the severe nervous strain that engineers are subjected to, and the peculiar condition of mind and faculties that are the result of such long continued tension of nerve and brain, when he related the following incident, in which he shared, as the most striking and singular he had ever known in the annals of railroading:

In the summer of 1871 I was in the employ of the W. road as fireman. I expected to be set up as soon as a vacancy occurred, and looked forward eagerly to the time when I should take my place upon the other side of the footboard. I fired engine No. 32 for Tom Moore, the best engineer on the W. road, and one of the finest men I ever knew. Jovial and kind hearted as he always was, he yet possessed the clear, cool head, hard practical common sense and sound judgment, that made him every inch the man and general favorite that he was. We had been on a fast ocean freight, and about the 1st of June were transferred to the Cincinnati express, running east from S. 112 miles to D. We left S. at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, returning at 5 o'clock the next morning, laying over till the afternoon of the next day. Tom and I were mightily pleased at the change, and for a month everything went as smoothly as we could wish. Then Tom began to act queer and strange, wholly unlike his former self. I used to watch him a great deal when I could do so unobserved, and at times I would see a dazed, half frightened look come across his face, and his eyes would be fixed, apparently staring into vacancy. All at once he would recover himself, grasp the throttle more firmly, the wild look would fade from his eyes, and he would perhaps be himself again for three or four days. I did not speak of it to any one, for I thought it would soon wear off, and I did not want to make any needless trouble. But I kept a double watch for both of us, as far as I could.

One dark night as we were passing Harristown, a small station about 40 miles east of S., Tom whistled for brakes. I was in the tender and sprang for our brake as he closed the throttle and threw her over. We were running pretty sharp, and though Tom reversed the engine almost instantly, we ran a train's length or more before we stopped.

"What is the matter?" said I, "as soon as there was a chance to speak."

"We have struck a man," said he, his face pale as ashes, "and thrown him over the fence into the field," and snatching my lantern he jumped from the engine just in time to meet the conductor, who was running up to learn the cause of our sudden stop. Tom explained it hastily, and both hurried off to the rear. All of the train hands and many of the passengers joined in the search, but nothing could be found under the trucks, along either side of the fence, or upon the engine itself. We looked her over carefully but found not a sign of blood, clothing, or anything to indicate that we had harmed a living thing. Tom was dumbfounded, and when we were again under headway he turned to me and said:

"It beats me clean out, Jim. There's a mystery about it too deep for me. I saw him just as plain as I see you, not 50 feet away, before we struck him, standing in the glare of the headlight; a man about my build and size, with a cap and coat like mine. I tell you, Jim, I am not mistaken; it was a man or a ghost, I don't know which." His words and manner impressed me deeply, and for the rest of the way in neither of us cared to talk much. He was so sure, that I fully expected the afternoon train from the east would bring some report of the man, notwithstanding our failure to find him. I was at the depot when the train came in, but no body had been seen or heard of. Then the boys began to chaff Tom about his "spook," as they called it, but he took it so quiet and indifferent-like that they soon got sick of it.

We ran the next two trips all right, but the third night Tom saw the man and stopped again, at the same place and with the same result as before. Nothing could be found, although it was a bright night, and we made a thorough search, for Tom was thoroughly wrought up and bound to get at the bottom of the mystery if he could. When we started again he made me run her in. He would fire, but nothing could induce him to stand on the footboard and hold the throttle. He was bent on leaving the road for good, but the master mechanic coaxed him out of the notion, put another man on the engine and gave him a two months' vacation, and the superintendent got him a pass to Denver, Col. He spent the rest of the summer there among the mountains, camping out, hunting and roughing it with the miners, till the first week in December, when he came back looking strong and hearty and brown as an Indian, full of pluck and courage, and as jolly as he ever was in his best days. Every one had a welcome for Tom all along the line from S. to D. The engine behaved splendidly, and we were both in high spirits at being together again, for we had missed each other sorely the two months past.

The State Fair began that week at S., and every passenger train going west had been heavily loaded. We started out of D. with three extra coaches, making eight in all, which put me on my pins to keep the steam up enough to make time. When we pulled out of Decatur we had on two more coaches that came up on the St. Louis branch. It was lively work, for we had to crowd the engine with steam, all she would bear, with such a train behind us, and we were right on to Harristown before I had hardly time to look about me and notice objects along the road. We were just passing the station, and I had stepped into the tender for more coal, when I heard a harsh rasping sound, followed by a confused roar and rush of steam, and the next thing I knew I was lying on top of a coach with a brakeman trying to keep me from rolling off. I had fallen upon the fourth car from the engine, and had broken three ribs and my shoulder blade, and had several bad bruises beside. And Tom? Well, the same explosion that blew me back threw him forward clear over the engine into the field beyond. And there, not 20 paces from where in fancy he had thrown the phantom man, they found him lying without a bruise or mark upon him, but with his neck completely broken. And the mystery he was unable to fathom and had tried vainly to flee from, had at last followed him to his death.

CHEWING GUM.

Forty thousand dollars' worth of chewing gum is gathered in the State of Maine every year. In Oxford county is a man who makes it his business to collect spruce gum. Every year he buys from seven to nine tons. The gum is found chiefly in the region about Umbagog Lake and about the Rangely lakes. A number of men do nothing else in the winter season except collect gum. With snowshoes, ax, and a sheboygan, on which is packed the gum, they spend days and nights in the woods. The clear, pure lumps of gum are sold in their native state, the best bringing one dollar per pound. Gum not immediately merchantable is refined by a peculiar process. Sieve-like boxes are covered with spruce boughs, on which is placed the gum. Steam is introduced underneath. The gum is melted, is strained by the boughs, and then passes into warm water, where it is kept from hardening until the packer takes it out, draws it into sticks, and wraps it in tissue paper, when it is ready for market.

The gum meets with a ready sale. There is not a village, town, or city in Maine where it is not in demand. One dealer last year sold fourteen hundred dollars' worth. In the large mill cities gum has a free sale. In Biddeford, Lewiston, Lawrence, and Lowell, the factory girls consume large quantities. It is said that in the lumber camps gum is used as a means of extending hospitality. After meal time the host fills his own black clay pipe, and hands it to his guest. Later, clear lumps of spruce gum are placed before the visitor, and he is asked to take a chew. Maine produces forty thousand dollars' worth of gum in a year, some of which finds its way to this market, from which it is distributed to the various outlying factory villages, where, as stated before, it is in good demand. Spruce gum is adulterated, and those who adulterate take the trouble to fashion the pieces of gum to appear like those taken in a pure state from the trees. The ingredient of adulteration is supposed to be the gum of the pine tree.—Providence Journal.

THE DIFFERENCE.

One of the most beautiful sights in the world is to see a boy treat his mother with respect and affection. The difference between French and American youths in this respect is thus described in Amenities of Home:

From the cradle to the grave a French son has one duty, one affection, which is paramount to all others—that is, his love for his mother. As a child, as a boy, he treats her with perfect respect and obedience. As a young man, he delights to send her flowers, to take her to the theatres and cafes. It is a common sight in Paris to see a young man with a gray-haired woman at the public galleries and places of amusement, apparently perfectly happy with each other, the young man studying to make his mother comfortable and amused. Often, in leaving France, a young man asks of his family the privilege of taking his mother with him as his "guide, philosopher and friend." Before his marriage is arranged, she is his constant companion and his best adviser. Never until death separates them does he fail in his duty towards her; and, after that event has closed this sweet, dutiful history, he keeps the anniversary of her death as his most sacred day, and visits her grave with his children to dress it with flowers.

An American young man of even the kindest heart and manners seldom treats his mother with much outward affection. He may, if necessary, work for her; he would be shocked if he heard that he had been guilty of any neglect of even the most remote duty to her; but he gives her no small attentions, such as sending her flowers, helping her to her carriage, greeting her in the morning, taking her to the theatre or for a drive. Nothing is so rare as to see a young American gentleman in attendance upon his mother. Even his manner of speaking to her is harsh and impolite. He goes to her for money, if his father does not give it to him, but he is very indifferent as to his manner of asking for it; he is full of reproaches if she does not give it to him.

The work of reclaiming the Everglades of Florida is being carried on with energy, and with a flattering prospect of success. A steamer is working at the head of the Caloosahatchee River, opening a channel from Lake Flirt to Lake Hichpochee. A dredge boat is rapidly approaching completion at Cedar Keys, which will have a capacity for excavating in twenty-four hours a canal 22 feet wide, 6 feet deep, and 800 feet in length, and will at one handling deposit the material excavated at a convenient distance from the sides of the canal. It is expected that this boat will be actively engaged on the Upper Caloosahatchee early in next month. A dredge of greater excavating capacity is now building on the Kissimee River, and will be in operation next month. It will commence work by cutting from Lake Okechobee out to tidewater.

He had been the boy of the office, the lowest one in rank about the concern, and when he was promoted a notch, he was as pleased as an actress with a bouquet she didn't pay for herself. They asked him about the change. "No," said he, "my work isn't easier. It's meaner, too, and the salary isn't raised any to speak of. But, by hokey, now I've got some one under me that I can kick round. It's a heap of comfort."—Boston Post.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1882.

THE proposed world's fair at Boston in 1885 has been formally abandoned at last. There was not sufficient interest in the subject even in Boston, that city of fairs, to bring out the necessary subscriptions.

SOMEBODY proposes that the Legislature shall sell the Boston and Albany stock belonging to the State. "When you've got a good thing, stick to it," is considered a pretty good rule of action by most men, and is a safe one for the State, as well.

SPEAKER KEIFER has found the House in an ugly mood ever since his announcement of committees, the dissatisfaction with the assignments being very general. He accordingly proposed to placate the disappointed ones by enlarging various committees, to give them places, but in spite of Robeson's efforts to push the measure through, the House on Thursday voted to recommit the report to Robeson's committee on rules, by a vote of 159 to 90—a bad defeat for the Speaker and Robeson.

IT is asserted with considerable positiveness that President Arthur has definitely decided to appoint ex-Senator Sargent secretary of the interior. The old Grant men are taking a good many of the front seats at Washington now-a-days. We hope the President will not forget that there are other and stronger elements in the Republican party than those pertaining to Grant, and that the people will not view with complacency the return of too many of the old crowd to prominent positions in public life.

FOR some days the air has been full of rumors of the settlement of the railroad war, but on Monday there was another large reduction in freight rates to the west, the first-class rate from Boston and New York to Chicago being dropped from 45 to 30 cents per 100 pounds, while the Grand Trunk line put its rate from Boston down to 20 cents. In the face of such rates it is not strange that the roads are anxious to compromise their differences, and a strong money pool, with terms more binding than ever before, will probably be the outcome of the war.

SOME of our Massachusetts clergymen want the Legislature to repeal that part of the law concerning marriages, which requires that one of the contracting parties, or the person officiating, shall be a resident of the place where the ceremony is performed. But what for? It might occasionally put an extra fee into a minister's pocket, but we see no other benefit. The present facilities for marrying are certain y ample—and divorce may be had altogether too easily. We advise the clergy to turn their attention to tightening up the divorce laws, rather than loosening the others.

HENRY WARD BEECHER in his sermon New Year's day made some remarks reflecting strongly upon the morals of the board of education and the chastity of the young lady school teachers in the city. The board thereupon demanded from him the proofs of his assertions, and last Sunday he made a complete retraction of his charge, without, however, offering any explanation or apology. The spectacle of a Christian minister uttering calumny, and then swallowing his own words so squarely, is not a pleasant one, and it is difficult to understand Mr. Beecher's motive for placing himself in such an unenviable position.

SCOVILLE has talked all the week to the jury in behalf of Guiteau, and the end of the trial cannot be reached this week. Scoville boldly charges the responsibility for Guiteau's act upon Arthur, Grant and Conkling. Judge Cox denied Guiteau the privilege of reading his speech to the jury, but it has been published in the papers, so his vanity is about as well satisfied. The speech contains nothing new, being a re-hash of his various addresses in the court room. He continues his speeches and interruptions, and the hideous farce is allowed to go on from day to day without any attempt to keep the vain brute within decent bounds.

EX-GOVERNOR ALEXANDER H. BULLOCK of Worcester died suddenly on the street, while on his way home, Tuesday afternoon, in the 66th year of his age. The news of his death caused profound sorrow throughout the State, and especially in Worcester, where he had lived for more than 40 years, a respected and loved citizen. Gov. Bullock had served his city as mayor, served in both branches of the Legislature several years, and as speaker of the House, and was elected Governor in 1865, filling the office well for three years. Since then he has refused public office, and devoted himself to literary work. He was a graceful and effective public speaker, and in his death the State loses one of her most honored sons. Gov. Bullock leaves a widow, two daughters and a son.

JUDGE GILBERT of the New York supreme court last Saturday sentenced fifteen of Brooklyn's seventeen aldermen to pay fines of $250 each, and also to imprisonment for terms ranging from ten to thirty days, for contempt of court, in passing over the mayor's veto on the last day of their official existence, and in the face of an injunction, a resolution giving extraordinary privileges to an elevated railroad company, in utter disregard of the rights of property owners. They had been in jail only a few hours, enjoying a luxurious banquet in the meantime, when they were let out on bail by another judge, in spite of Judge Gilbert's instruction to the contrary. The long-standing corruption in Brooklyn politics seems to have affected even the courts, and the city of churches has a big job on hand to get rid of its unscrupulous rings.

A DREADFUL ACCIDENT.

A terrible accident occurred on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad last week Friday evening, about a quarter of a mile east of the Spuyten Duyvil junction with the Harlem line. The Atlantic express from Chicago, with 13 cars, containing many members of the Legislature, had just passed the junction, when an air brake gave out, and the train was stopped in a deep cut to repair the brake. While standing there the Tarrytown local train for New York came rushing around the curve and dashed almost at full speed into the rear car, the drawing room car Idlewild, smashing it and telescoping it with the next car forward. The two wrecked cars immediately took fire, and were speedily consumed. Most of the occupants of the Idlewild were caught in the wreck and unable to escape, and such of them as were not killed by the collision were burned to death. Eight charred bodies were taken from the ruins, and 13 were injured.

The shrieks of the victims who were helplessly wedged in the ruins of the burning cars were appalling. Axes were brought and every effort made to release them, but only two were got out, so rapidly did the flames spread. There were no facilities for extinguishing the fire, except a few water pails, and the passengers and villagers were compelled to stand by and see the imprisoned sufferers roasted to death. The saddest incident of the disaster was the burning of Mr. and Mrs. Park Valentine of Bennington, Vt., who were just starting for Florida on their wedding tour. He was just of age, and was married the evening before at North Adams to the accomplished daughter of W. H. Gaylord. His father was accompanying them, and, standing on the rear platform of the Idlewild, saw the approaching train barely in time to save his life by jumping. A passenger who escaped from the next car says: "The first person I met after getting out of the Empire was a gentleman, without his hat or coat, who exclaimed: 'My God! can you give me some help? My son and his wife, who have just been married, are in a section of the last car and are screaming for help.'" Nothing could be done, and the pair were burned before the very eyes of the father. Another man, Thomas Maher of King's Bridge, who saved a woman from the wrecked Idlewild, reports that Mrs. Valentine could have been rescued but for her heroic refusal to leave her husband. "We reached them both," he said, "and found young Valentine wedged in between the seats, but she prevented us from bringing them out by clinging to him until the flames drove us away. I have seen some terrible sights, but I never witnessed such devotion in the face of death as in this instance. When taken from the car the couple were both locked in a death embrace. Senator Webster Wagner, inventor of the Wagner drawing-room and sleeping cars, also perished in the flames, being caught between the two rear cars as he was passing from one to the other.

The accident was due entirely to the criminal carelessness of the conductor and rear brakeman of the ill-fated express. It was the brakeman's duty to go back at once at least half a mile, to warn any approaching train, and it was the conductor's duty to see that he did so. The conductor told the brakeman, George Melius, to go back, and seems to have paid no further attention to the matter. Melius loitered around a while, and then went back but a few rods, standing there until the Tarrytown train came around the curve, too near to be stopped. Melius has been arrested, and should suffer for his criminal neglect of duty. The conductor charges that a party of men prominent in political circles were passing around bottles of whisky in the train, drinking and conducting themselves in a disgraceful manner, and that the accident was caused by some unauthorized person pulling the cord which put on the air brakes. Back of those who were immediately responsible for the accident, the railroad managers are themselves to blame for not employing some system of safety signals on such frequently-traveled portions of their road, and they will probably be obliged to do so hereafter, Governor Cornell having called attention to the matter in a special message to the Legislature, many of whose members will have a lively interest in the subject, after their terrible experience at this accident.

SOME of the United States Senators think they are so terribly overworked that they must each have a private secretary at the expense of the national treasury. The chairmen of committees have the appointment of a clerk, who generally acts as private secretary for his patron, and the rest of the senators are growing envious. But with their $5000 salary and other allowances, the country will hardly countenance this grab.

THE United States Senate passed a bill Thursday placing Justice Hunt of the supreme court on the retired list. He has long been incapable of doing any work, and the bill will doubtless speedily pass the House, and another judge be appointed who can do some needed work on the bench.

OUR Legislature is beginning work in a very leisurely manner, holding brief sessions and not attempting much beyond the reception of numerous petitions. When the committees begin to report, the real work of the session will begin.

The board of education at Quincy, Ill., divided the city into eight school districts, and adopted a rule requiring all colored children to attend one school specially designed for them. The State supreme court has just decided that their action is illegal, and that all the schools must be open to the colored children.

There has been a heavy flood at Nashville, Tenn., this week, and on Thursday a large portion of the city was under water; horse cars were stopped, and 1500 people obliged to vacate their homes. Much damage has also been done in some portions of Alabama and Louisiana.

Two cars of an express train on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad were thrown down a 25-foot enbankment Monday near New Albion, Ia., and were burned. The passengers were all rescued, 23 of them being injured, two or three fatally.

Scoville, Guiteau's counsel, has sued a Chicago paper for libel, in charging him with fraud when he went into bankruptcy some years since.

Rev. E. H. Perry of Quincy will preach tomorrow at the Universalist church.

Rev. Frank Hoffman of New Haven, Ct., preaches at the Congregational church tomorrow.

An effigy of Guiteau, suspended at the end of a rope, is a suggestive ornament in a Main street window.

Some horse sheds have been erected in the rear of the Universalist church, and are ready for the underpinning.

The Universalists had a pleasant social and candy pull Wednesday evening at the residence of J. F. Holbrook.

E. J. Wood calls attention in another column to some bottom prices he is now offering on paper hangings and crockery.

George Griffin's horses went through the ice into the "drink" at Blanchardville Wednesday, but were rescued unharmed.

H. G. Cross has closed up his picture framing business on Central street, to take a position with Ruggles & Co. of Three Rivers.

There is to be a social dance at Wales Hall next Tuesday evening, with music by Field's orchestra of Springfield, W. G. Ryan prompter.

By the way, why don't somebody start around and get up a good old-fashioned sleigh-ride? The ladies would be just "tickled to death" to go.

George B. Kenerson has bought Mrs. James Whitman's place, near Shearer's Corner, for $1300, and has in turn sold it to Mrs. E. Warner.

The "blockers" in Merrick, Fay & Co's. hat shop at Monson, with their ladies, had a sleighride to Palmer Wednesday evening, with a supper at the Weeks House.

Owners of ice houses have concluded that it is not safe to wait any longer, and are filling their houses with ice only six or seven inches thick, but of good quality.

M. W. French has bought for $4000 the Ephraim Warner farm on the Springfield road, for the use of the new iron mills which it is expected are to be built this year.

The following primary school scholars in this place were not absent during the last term: Lizzie Wassum, Grace Lester, Annie Allen, Freddie Lacourline and Louis Chalk.

The temptation for a sleigh-ride was too strong for many people to resist last Sunday, and the quiet Sabbath air was filled almost constantly with the merry jingle of the bells on fast-stepping horses.

The hearing before the selectmen on the proposed variation of the route through Palmer of the Massachusetts Central Railroad will come off at Murdock's Hall, Thorndike, next Tuesday forenoon, at 10 o'clock.

The recent snow-falls have covered the ground enough to make the first good sleighing of the winter, and everybody who owns a horse is making the most of it while it lasts, realizing that one or two days more of warm sunshine like that of Thursday afternoon would make the runners useless.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Society of the Baptist church was held in the vestry of the church Wednesday afternoon, when the following officers were chosen: President, Mrs. Chas. B. Fisk; vice president, Mrs. F. L. Brooks; secretary, Miss Lillian Edgerton; treasurer, Mrs. S. A. Fisk.

H. M. Coney of Springfield was last Saturday appointed special administrator of the estate of Sarah F. Carter of Palmer, at a chambers session of the probate court. The stock of millinery and fancy goods belonging to the estate was sold at auction yesterday forenoon to Mrs. L. E. Carpenter of Stafford, who will continue the business.

One of Marcy's horses was driven a little too rapidly around the corner of Main and Central streets Wednesday morning, and the result was a capsized sleigh. One of the occupants scrambled for the horse's head, and was dragged some distance up Central street before the animal could be stopped. A broken shaft was about the only damage done.

There will be a convention of the Sunday schools connected with the Congregational churches of the Hampden conference, at the Congregational church in this place, some time next month, and several prominent Sunday school workers are expected to be present and make addresses. The day of the meeting is not yet definitely determined.

Fashion decrees that bangs must give place to a new style of coiffure, in which the hair shall be combed high up in front. Anything will be welcome in place of the horrible bangs, which will doubtless soon disappear, now that Dame Fashion has said the word. Common sense and a fair regard for one's personal appearance would have long since banished this barbaric style of head dress.

The stockholders of the new Barrett's Junction Water Power Co. held their first meeting at the district court room Thursday afternoon, when the following officers were chosen: President, Hon. C. L. Gardner of Palmer; treasurer, W. B. Kimball of Enfield; clerk, H. M. Coney of Springfield; directors, C. L. Gardner, W. B. Kimball, A. G. Osgood, J. F. Holbrook and Geo. Robinson; auditor, Geo. Robinson.

It is rumored that the Boston & Albany Railroad is to be divided into two sections, one from Boston to Springfield, and the other from Springfield to Albany, and that the engineers will be required to make their homes in the city from which their runs are made, while they will be at home only half the time, going out one day and returning the next. If this plan is carried out, it will be a breaking up of home ties which will hardly be appreciated by the engineers.

Lovers of roller skating—and this means everybody who has ever had on a pair of the skates—will be glad to learn that they are to have another opportunity to enjoy this sport, W. H. Hitchcock having opened a rink at Wales Hall, yesterday, with a good supply of new skates. There was skating yesterday afternoon and evening, and the hall will be open this and Monday afternoon and evening. On Monday evening there will also be the additional attraction of music by the Palmer Cornet Band. Mr. Hitchcock will give the skaters frequent opportunity to enjoy the rollers during the winter, if the patronage is sufficient, and also plans to vist Monson and Ware occasionally with his skates.

A Palmer correspondent writes to the Southbridge Journal advocating a revival of the Palmer and Southbridge railroad project. The writer believes this would be "one of the best paying roads in the State. It would connect the Massachusetts Central by building only three miles from Palmer, and at Palmer with the Boston & Albany and New London Northern road. The latter connects with the Massachusetts Central about five miles from Palmer and with the Tunnel road at Miller's Falls. It would be one of the best freight roads in the State. I think Palmer people would do something toward building the road. If some of your Southbridge people would come up and look the ground over they will see a good opening for a railroad above Palmer to connect with the Massachusetts Central."

Farmers hereabouts who keep sheep might do well to follow the example of the farmers of Hunterdon and Somerset counties, New Jersey, who use goats to protect their sheep from dogs. Two goats can drive away a dozen dogs, and two are about all each farmer puts in with his sheep. As soon as a dog enters the field at night, the goat attacks him, and their butting propensitities are too much for the canine, who soon finds himself rolling over and over. A few repetitions of this treatment causes the dog to quit the field, limping and yelling. Formerly, when a dog entered a sheep field at night, the sheep would run wildly around and cry piteously. Since the goats have been used to guard them they form in line behind the goats and seem to enjoy the fun. The idea of utilizing goats in this way came from the West, where they are put in sheep pens to drive away wolves.

The annual report of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society has been printed and distributed among its members. It shows the society to be in a very satisfactory condition, without debts, and with cash and other assets amounting to $5,283. The amount of premiums and gratuities paid at its last annual exhibition was $836.05, divided among the following classes: Trotting purses, $300; horses, $99; plowing match, $20; neat stock, $190; swine, $22; poultry, $13.50; sheep, $14; fruit, $29; flowers, $17; vegetables and grain, $16; butter, cheese, bread, etc., $21.75; fancy articles, $30.80; domestic articles, $20; farmers' tools, $17; field crops, $26. The premiums were distributed among 148 persons, the amount going into the different towns being as follows: Palmer, $233.50; Monson, $134.35; West Brookfield, $31; Brookfield, $29.50; North Brookfield, 60 cents; Springfield, $105; Ludlow, $10.75; Wilbraham, $15.25; Belchertown, $32.75: Warren, $5; Brimfield, $8.85; Leicester, $3; New Braintree, $74; Charlton, $11; Longmeadow, $4; Stafford Springs, Conn., $25; Hampden, $1; Chicopee, $71.50; Holyoke, $40.

THE FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

The subject of "Dairying" was handled in a practical and interesting manner by W. R. Sessions of Hampden at the Farmers' Institute in Weeks Hall last Tuesday. He prefers Shorthorns for dairy purposes, and enumerated the points of a good animal. He would feed stock twice a day, giving them in the early morning good hay, with a mixture of linseed and corn meal and shorts, and in the middle of the afternoon rowen and corn stalks. Did not think it necessary to steam feed, if the stables were warm and the food good. He milked last year 18 cows, receiving 115,859 pounds of milk, which yielded 4741 pounds of butter; average milk per cow, 6436 pounds; average butter per cow, 263 pounds, at an average price of 35 cents, yielding $92.05. From his best cow he took 872 pounds of milk, which yielded 365 pounds of butter. C. E. Dewey exhibited some milk from his Jersey cow which showed nearly 30 per cent of cream, while Dr. Wakefield exhibited some choice butter from a Jersey cow, and some skim-milk which looked as rich as though fresh from the udder. Interesting remarks were also made by N. S. Hubbard of Brimfield, C. L. Buell of Ludlow, O. M. Graves of Monson, Mr. Chamberlain of West Brookfield, Judge Robinson and Lawyer Strong of Palmer, and others. In spite of the unfavorable weather some 80 persons were present, and the exercises were enjoyed by all. The subjects for the next institute will be: "How Can we Improve the Winter Feed of our Stock?" and "Growing and Feeding Forage Crops;" and the meeting may be held in one of the neighboring towns. The directors will designate the place at their next meeting, Feb. 6th.

VITAL STATISTICS FOR 1881.

There were 150 births in Palmer last year, against 168 the year before. They have not yet been classified so that the number of each sex can be given. The number of marriages was 65, two less than in 1880. In 14 cases only were both parties American born. The oldest groom was 65, the youngest 18; the oldest bride 55, the youngest 16. Fourteen men took wives older than themselves, in one case the bride being 16 years the senior, while one groom was 21 years older than his companion. It was the first marriage of both parties in 48 cases; first of groom and second of bride, 1; second of each, 2; second of groom and first of bride, 11; second of groom and third of bride, 1; third of groom and first of bride, 1; fourth of groom and second of bride, 1. January, June and September had 6 marriages each, February 8, March, May and July 3 each, April 5, August 7, October and December 4 each, and November 10. The number of marriages solemnized by the different officials was as follows: Rev. F. J. Lynch, 22; B. M. Fullerton, 11; A. C. Manson and T. J. Sullivan, 4 each; C. H. Eaton, 3; W. S. Jagger, 2; T. C. Russell, C. A. Merrill, C. D. Dudley, C. H. Ricketts, B. McKeany, and George Robinson, Esq., 1 each; by out-of-town clergymen, 13.

There was a very welcome decrease in the record of deaths last year, the number being only 92, against 127 in 1880—54 males and 38 females. Natives of Palmer, 38. There were 7 deaths each in the months of Jan., July, Sept. and Dec., 6 in Feb., May, June and Nov.; 10 in March and Oct.; 9 in April; 11 in August. The return of diseases is very incomplete, in 50 cases no cause of death being given. There is therefore no opportunity to ascertain correctly the relative fatality of the different diseases. Such carelessness in the returns ought not to be allowed. The ages were as follows:

BRIMFIELD.

A big party of sleigh-riders from Southbridge took supper and spent the evening at the Monroe House Wednesday.

THREE RIVERS.

There was no preaching at the Baptist church last Sunday, and will be none to-morrow, the church having decided to close its house for the present.

WALES.

There is to be a grand ball at Royce's Hall next Friday evening, Jan. 27th, with music by Bacon & Kenfield's band. An oyster supper will be provided for all who wish.

WARREN.

There were 121 local births, 74 deaths and 26 marriages in 1881.

Mrs. Bridgman fell on the ice last Saturday, bruising her severely.

Rev. Mr. Sanderson exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Forbes last Sabbath.

The Warren amateur orchestra will meet with the musical association to-night.

There was a dance in the town hall Friday evening by the Quaboag engine company.

The soldiers' fair has been a great success, and had a large attendance. A large number patronized the turkey dinner on Wednesday. The farce and old folks' concert gave much satisfaction.

Another course of lectures by the Methodist society is to be delivered in Warren, as follows: February 13, Miss Janie Savage, miscellaneous readings; 27th, Emma Manning Huntley, readings, accompanied by Miss Chamberlain, the celebrated whistling soloist; March 6, Rev. R. R. Riddell of Wakefield, Union spy in the late war, subject, "Battle Echoes;" 13th, Rev. Washington Gladden of Springfield, "The Best Society;" 20th, Rev. J. W. Hamilton of the Peoples' church of Boston; Gen. Luther Stevenson of Boston on "The Battle of Gettysburg," illustrated with the stereopticon.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Rev. T. B. Smith will preach at Grace chapel Sunday evening, at six o'clock.

Some of our neighbors have cut their ice at four inches thick. Guess they are in a hurry.

M. L. Collins has placed an excellent coach on runners, on the route to the Street from this station.

A party of young people had a sleigh-ride to Springfield Wednesday evening, to witness "Michael Strogoff."

President E. P. Tenney of Colorado college preached a graphic sermon on Solomon at Grace chapel last Sunday afternoon.

A large party from the paper mill enjoyed a sleigh-ride to Holyoke on Friday, and enjoyed a good supper at the Windsor House.

On Saturday last Dr. Hamilton and daughter of Springfield were thrown out of their sleigh near the railroad bridge, but escaped with slight damage to the sleigh.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Benevolent Association was held at the chapel last Wednesday. Mrs. E. W. Wall furnished the supper, and there was a very large attendance. Owing to the absence of the president and vice president the election of officers was put over.

HAMPDEN.

Philander Firman has had two or more apoplectic fits, and is very low. He is over 80 years old, and his recovery is doubtful.

The Methodists had a gathering at their church last evening, in place of one advertised for last week Friday evening, which was postponed on account of bad weather.

Sleighing good and much improved by all who have teams. Some few are filling their ice houses with ice six inches thick, while others prefer to trust Providence for a better quality at a later time.

C. I. Burleigh & Co. have been taking account of stock, and report a successful year in business. They have dispensed with their late clerk, Noble, and report says Abner C., the silent partner, is to be in the store pretty costantly hereafter.

School disctrict No. 1 still has some friction. The committee have expelled a few pupils, and some take the hint and leave before the committee can get together to decide upon a programme. Our committee are "wise as serpents," if not the whole sentence. Had their wisdom predominated at the commencement of the school, and a male teacher been hired, perhaps all the trouble would have been avoided.

The Congregational church changed their time of service last Sabbath, preaching service commencing at 12.15 p. m., followed immediately after by the Sabbath school. By this arrangement the Sabbath school more than doubled in numbers and interest. The society are making an effort to purchase a new bell for their church, the old one being cracked for years. They propose a bell from McShane & Co., of Baltimore, Md., which will weigh 1500 lbs., an increase of 50 per cent above the old bell.

WILBRAHAM.

The senior class of the academy held a reception at Philo Hall Saturday evening.

The Amherst College Glee Club gave a concert at Fisk Hall, under the auspices of Club, last evening.

There were 22 births, 13 marriages and 35 deaths in Wilbraham last year. The corresponding figures in 1880 were 36, 18 and 22.

The Willing Workers of the Young Woman's Missionary Society meet at the Congregational parsonage this afternoon and evening.

The selectmen have granted the petition of Dr. Stebbins Foskit to be allowed to erect a telephone line from his house to the office at Collins Depot.

The Farmers' Club met with D. B. Merrick on Monday evening, and the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, M. F. Beebe; Vice Pres., A. J. Blanchard; Sec'y and Treas., H. M. Bliss; directors, Rev. N. J. Merrill, C. A. Corbin, F. E. Clark. The next meeting will be at the house of Mr. Burbank.

A Farmers' Institute will be held at the hotel hall next Wednesday, with morning and afternoon sessions. E. F. Bowditch of Framingham, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, and other distinguished speakers from abroad are expected to be present and take part in the discussion as to which is the best breed of cattle for dairy purposes.

At the last business meeting of the Quadrangle the following officers were chosen for the next six months: President, Miss Josie Firman; Sec'y, Miss Fannie Merrick; directors for one month, Miss Clara Markham, Miss Leila Taylor. The society voted to spend the winter in the study of Grecian History. The next meeting will be with Miss Clara Markham next Thursday afternoon. Subject, Grecian Mythology.

MONSON.

Business at both the straw shops is fairly rushing.

G. H. Newton has reopened his law and insurance office near Gage's store.

The "Favorites" will fill the bill in the "Star Course" on Wednesday evening next at Central Hall.

The number of deaths the past year, as returned to the town clerk, was 67; marriages, 34. The births have not as yet been fully returned.

Several couples drove to Springfield Wednesday night to see "Michael Strogoff," and others took the more prosaic, though more rapid, cars for the same purpose.

A number of relatives and friends of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Nichols made them a surprise visit on the recent golden anniversary of their wedding, and left a number of gifts with them.

The Messrs. Heery at North Monson are arranging to put machinery into the old mill, which has stood still for some time, and will thus nearly double their capacity for manufacturing woolen goods.

Arba Squier has the frame up and inclosed for a new dwelling house on Hampden Avenue. Mr. Squier has also begun work upon the new road to intersect from Pease Avenue southerly to Hampden Avenue.

"Florinel" will be presented this (Saturday) evening at Central Hall by a first-class company. Miss Julia A. Hunt assumes the title role, and comes highly recommended by the press and an appreciative public.

Our Main street has had the appearance of a trotting park afternoons for a few days past, and the fast horses were thoroughly tested, the good sleighing affording pleasant recreation for both man and beast.

Joshua Tracy has bought of Mrs. Packard the lot and store occupied by Frank King, for $2000, and will enlarge the building by an addition of 10 feet in front and 20 feet at the north end, besides raising the roof for an additional story.

The increase of business at the post office has necessitated the putting in of 50 additional boxes. The office has steadily and rapidly increased in business, the returns for the last quarter showing the largest amount ever done, and the business is now double what it was five years ago.

Hiram Newton, who was buried last week, was the last of six brothers who were born and brought up at the Newton homestead, where he always lived, and died. He was for many years one of the selectmen, was twice sent as representative to the General Court, and as justice of the peace in former years had many of the civil and criminal cases brought before him. He leaves a widow, now well advanced in years, and quite feeble, and also two sons, Edward and Albert, the one residing in Monson, and the other in Leominster.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The members of the grammar school took a sleigh-ride to Spencer on Thursday.

Three gangs of men at work on the Massachusetts Central struck for higher wages a few days since.

Dwight Buffington has been chosen superintendent and J. Warren Cummings assistant of the Sunday school at Ware Center.

The Ware high school with their teachers, numbering about 30, went for a sleighride on Monday to visit the academy at Monson, and report a very enjoyable time.

The case against the town of Herbert F. Goodwin to recover damages for the breaking of his leg last June by a bridge, left standing on its edge, falling or being pulled over upon him, has been settled by his receiving from the selectmen $350.

The report of the Methodist church shows an increase in membership the past year of 10, with about as many more on probation. The benevolent contributions amounted to $229, an increase over last year. The membership has increased within the past ten years 57, and the benevolent contributions have increased in the same time $197.

Herbert W. Reed has secured a patent upon his new adjustable wrench, which not only has all the advantages of tightening to the nut by screw as in other wrenches, but has an additional arrangement whereby it can be instantly set to any size of nut independent of the screw. We understand arrangements are being made for their manufacture by parties out of town, but we hope the sale may be so great as to necessitate a manufactory expressly for them. When this time arrives, may we have it located here in Ware.

A meeting of the fire district is called to be held at the new engine house this (Saturday) afternoon, to hear the report of the building committee and see if the district will authorize its prudential committee to borrow such sum of money as may be necessary to enable the building committee to complete the building for the use of the district, and to see if the district will authorize the committee to let such parts of the building at such times as they are not needed for the use of the fire department. The engine house is nearly completed, and appears to be most commodious and conveniently arranged. In case of an alarm of fire the one who gets to the building first enters by a small side door, immediately in front of which hangs a strong cord attached to the bolts of the large doors in such a manner that when pulled the bolts are drawn and the doors fly open before one has time even to reach the engine. It is expected there will be quite a revenue to the district from renting the hall for social parties, entertainments, etc.

The new Southern Pacific route across the continent is suffering seriously from the lack of water for the engines on the plains in western Texas and New Mexico, and trains have been late from six to twelve hours every day since the line was opened. All the carpenters and bridge builders that can be secured are building tanks for a sufficient supply of water.

A syndicate of six leading capitalists of St. Paul and Minneapolis, among them Senator Windom, has been organized for opening up and improving the national park of the Yellowstone. They will build hotels in the park, and have entered into an agreement with the Northern Pacific Railroad for the construction of an 80-mile branch to the park.

A party of engineers who have been surveying a route for the Canadian Pacific Railroad across the Rocky Mountains have been so completely cut off from the world in the inaccessible wilderness that it was only a few days ago that they learned of the death of President Garfield.

The two hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the mouth of the Mississippi river by La Salle falls on April 9 of this year, and an effort is being made by the Chicago Historical Society to arrange for its appropriate celebration.

The oldest bank in the United States is the Bank of North America in Philadelphia, which began active operations on Jan. 7, 1782. The Massachusetts National Bank of Boston was incorporated only two years later.

Congress will be asked to make a special appropriation for the extraordinary expenses of Guiteau's trial, which will be over $50,000. The board bill of the jury and bailiffs in attendance will exceed $3000.

The extinction of slavery in Brazil is proceeding very gradually, and it will take more than thirty years to accomplish it. Emancipation began in 1870, but there are still 1,500,000 bondmen in the country.

A farmer in Grayson county, Va., while working in a field last week, struck a bonanza in digging up $1000 in silver and $358 in gold coin, supposed to have been hidden by some one during the war.

A 12-year-old boy at North Adams the other night robbed a boarder of a revolver, and going into his father's room rifled his pockets of money, being prepared all the time to shoot his parent if he awoke.

Florida papers say that the brown or rusty orange is much the sweetest, and can be kept longer than the bright fruit, but it will not sell at the North for more than half the price of fair fruit.

February Magazines.

Harper's Magazine for February has even more than its usual number of attractions. There is an excellent portrait of Victor Hugo as a frontispiece, and the whole number is unusually well illustrated, both in quantity and quality of the drawings. W. H. Bishop has a paper of great literary merit, "Commercial, Social and Political Mexico," containing valuable information respecting Mexican industries, education, etc. Mrs. Anna Bowman Blake's personal sketches of "French Political Leaders" are admirable, and "The American Life-Saving Service" gives a clear description of the methods used by the service in its life-saving work, adding greatly to the interest by the recital of the peculiar perils attending that work and stories of some of the remarkable shipwrecks of recent years. Philadelphia as it is at present, together with many of its old institutions, receive an interesting description from the pen of George P. Lathrop. A paper entitled "Henry Irving at Home," by Joseph Hatton, is largely made up of Mr. Irving's own recitals of incidents and phases of his career. A striking feature of this number is the beginning of Mrs. John Lillie's serial, "Prudence; a Story of Æsthetic London," which was written and in the hands of the publisher before the comic opera "Patience" was brought out, and which promises to be an interesting exposition of one phase of English life. Short stories and poems from well-known and popular authors, with a new feature in the Editor's Drawer, contributions from eminent American humorists, go to complete a number every way desirable.

The February Atlantic opens with a poem by Mr. Whittier, entitled "The Bay of Seven Islands," and those who enjoy his poetry will find this one of the most attractive features of the magazine. It also contains two additional chapters of Mr. Lathrop's story, "An Echo Passion," and the opening chapters of "The House of a Merchant Prince," a serial story by W. H. Bishop. This last story is to continue throughout the year, and promises to be well worth reading. The second series of "Studies in the South" is so clearly based upon careful and impartial observation, and is written with such perfect clearness that it cannot fail to be read with great interest. Miss Sarah Orne Jewett contributes another of her delightful New England stories, entitled "Tom's Husband." Henry Cabot Lodge writes a very just and excellent paper on the career and character of Daniel Webster, and E. P. Whipple contributes an admirable critical essay on Richard Grant White's works. Herbert Tuttle describes "Some Traits of Bismarck." Some of the other articles in the number very well worth notice are Mr. Dugdale's concluding paper on "The Origin of Crime in Society;" a strong article on "The Refunding Bill of 1881," by J. Laurence Laughlin; poems by George Parsons Lathrop, Owen Wister, and K. G.; reviews of several important recent books, and the Contributor's Club. This well sustains the reputation which the recent numbers of the Atlantic have gained for great vigor, freshness and variety.

The North American Review for February contains Prof. George P. Fisher's articles on "The Christian Religion," in which he comes to its defence against the attacks of modern doubt and infidelity. He disclaims the position of a debater and makes no personal reference to the assailants of Christianity, though necessarily dealing with the objections so audaciously presented by some of its brilliant combatants, and handles the subject with such vigor and clearness as to justify the expectations raised when so able and powerful an advocate took the pen in defence of the religion of Christ. His articles will be regarded with great interest, as furnishing the latest statement of orthodox views in what may be considered an authoritative form. "Do Spoils Belong to the Victor?" by President Andrew D. White; "A Remedy for Railway Abuses," by Isaac L. Rice; "Repudiation in Virginia," by Senator John W. Johnston; and "The Lancet and the Law," by Henry Bergh, comprise the remaining articles of the Review for February.

Vick's Floral Guide for the Spring is out in good season, and with its attractive exterior and colored plates of fruit and flowers in the front of the book seems like a breath of the season which it anticipates. It is quite full and complete, and all who contemplate gardening in any form need only to consult its pages to find all the information necessary, and an opportunity to supply themselves with seeds and plants both for outdoor and indoor cultivation. Published by James Vick, Bochester, N. Y. Price, ten cents.

By means of a telephone in the audience room of the South Congregational Church at Hartford last Sunday the services were heard at the residences of fully one hundred persons.

A plan for inducing the boys and girls of Worcester to read the instructive books in the public library instead of the trash has been successful. It consisted in inducing the teachers in schools to make a practice of referring, in a casual manner, to the contents of interesting and solid works. Thus the youngsters have been led to choose a kind of reading matter which formerly lay unheeded on the shelves.

The quantity of salmon canned on Columbia River last year was 550,000 cases of four dozen one-pound tins, or their equivalent. In 1880 the pack was 535,000 cases.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth when it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it. Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

The Sanitary Engineer.

The recognized authority on all matters relating to Public Health, Food and Drug Adulteration, Drainage and Water Supply, Steam and Hot Water Heating, Plumbing and Gas Fitting, Gas and Electric Lightning, Heating and Ventilation.

Questions on any of these subjects will be answered in the columns of THE SANITARY ENGINEER, free of charge.

The opinions of this journal upon all technical subjects are either prepared or revised by specialists.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

Our excellent technical contemporary, THE SANITARY ENGINEER, bye the bye, is hercafttr to be published weekly, a token of prosperity that is especially gratifying as a proof of public appreciation of the very useful work which our contemporary has done for the public.—New York World.

This journal has become the leading authority in this country upon sanitary questions.—Ohio Medical Journal.

THE SANITARY ENGINEER shows an excellent appreciation of what may be done in the field of Sanitary Engineering, and a practical capability for doing it.—New York Tribune.

The excellent paper published in this city, and called THE SANITARY ENGINEER, might add to its title that of the Practical Philanthropist, for such it proves itself to be in its constant and clear exposure of the wrongs and dangers of many of our domestic and municipal arrangements.—Harper's Weekly.

Prof. Chandler, when delivering a popular and most telling lecture on Sanitation, lately at the Cooper Institute, advised his hearers to subscribe to THE SANITARY EEGINEER, a publication devoted to Sanitation in all its phases. It contains the best thoughts of the best trained Sanitarians of the period.—Congregationalist.

Mr. John Walter, of the London Times, has addressed a letter to the editor of THE SANITARY ENGINEER, of this city, requesting an opinion as to the system of ventilating sewers by perforations or open gratings in the streets. The compliment paid to American sanitary engineering by Mr. Walter's letter, is most flattering; but that it is deserved will not be questioned by those familiar with the merits of the authority Mr. Walters consulted.—New York Com'l Advertiser.

THE SANITARY ENGINEER is for sale by all newsdealers in the United States and Canada. Single Copies Seven Cents. Terms, Three Dollars per year, in advance, postage paid. Published every Thursday at 140 William Street, New York.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of John Ward, late of New Britain, in the county of Hartford, and State of Connecticut, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, a petition has been presented to said court, by Edwin B. Lyon of said New Britain with certain papers purporting to be copies of the last will and testament of said deceased, and of the probate thereof in said State of Connecticut duly authenticated, representing that at the time of his death said deceased had estate in said county of Hampden, on which said will may operate, and praying that a copy of said will may be filed and recorded in the Probate Office of said county of Hampden, and letters testamentary thereon granted to him, and that he may be exempted from giving a surety or sureties on his official bond as executor of said will under said letters,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of February next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same. And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation three weeks successively in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, in said county of Hampden, the last publication to be thirty days, at least, before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirty-first day of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northeast from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of handsome chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with

A HORRIBLE MORMON CRIME.

One crime, which was committed here only a short time ago, I must describe: Mrs. Maxwell came to Salt Lake City with her husband in 1869. Two years afterward her husband took another wife and one year subsequent he was sealed to a third. Mrs. Maxwell had two sons aged respectively fourteen and sixteen years. Their father urged them to go through the endowment house and become Mormons, bound by all the oaths of the church. Mrs. Maxwell objected, and in order to prevail over her sons she told them the secrets of the endowment house. The penalty for revealing these secrets is dismemberment of the body, cutting of the throat and tearing out of the tongue. Mr. Maxwell overheard his wife, being in an adjoining room, and forthwith he informed the elders, who sent for the unfortunate woman and her two sons. They were taken into what is called the "dark pit," a blood-atoning room under Brigham Young's house. The woman was then stripped of all her clothing, and then tied on her back to a table. Six members of the priesthood then performed their damnable crime; they first cut off their victim's tongue, and then cut her throat, after which her legs and arms were severed. The sons were compelled to stand by and witness this dreadful slaughter of their mother. They were then released and given twenty-four hours to get out of the territory, which was then an impossibility. The sons went directly to the house of a friend, to whom they related the butchery of their mother, and getting a package of provisions they started; but on the following morning they were both dead—they had met the Danites. One other case similar to the above occurred about five years ago in City Hall. These are truths, and the lady to whom the sons told their story is willing to make affidavit to the facts if she can be granted immunity from Mormon vengeance.—Salt Lake Correspondence of the St. Louis Republican.

"What is a promise, my boy?" asked a school teacher whose reputation for honesty was not of the best, to one of his younger scholars. "I don't know, sir," timidly replied the youngster. "Well, suppose you should come to collect a bill of me, and I should tell you to come around the next day and I would pay you, what would that be?" "I think that would be a lie, sir!" came from the little fellow, who had evidently resolved to commence the new year by telling the truth, no matter what the consequences might be.

A young lady in New York city, who was accosted by a well-dressed man in an insulting manner, accepted the offer of an old woman who was grabbing in an ash-barrel close by, to "cover him with ashes for ten cents." The man was pelted with handfuls of ashes, covering him from head to foot, before he could escape. The old woman was rewarded with a quarter by the young lady, who remained to witness the operation.

"Minnie" wants to know "who sets fashions?" Well, we don't want to boast, bore, or appear unduly conceited, or that sort of thing, but the fashion of wearing a spring overcoat, flavored at the elbows with benzine, clear through the Christmas holidays and along into next February—we set that one "ourself." We don't know who set the others, as that is the only one we are deeply interested in just now.—Burlington Hawkeye.

"And so, my dear Mrs. Crœsus," said one of the many admiring friends of a wealthy woman in this city, the other day, "it is really settled that you will take an extended tour in Europe next spring." "Yes," returned the opulent dowager, "it is decided upon, and I anticipate so much pleasure. I mean first of all to go to Venice, that lovely city. It has always been the wish of my life to go to Venice and ride in a gondolier."

A bickering pair of Quakers were lately heard in high controversy, the husband exclaiming: "I am determined to have one quiet week with thee!" "But how wilt thou be able to get it?" said the taunting spouse, in that sort of reiteration which married ladies so provokingly indulge in. "I will keep thee a week after thou art dead," was the Quaker's rejoinder.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser mentions what may be safely set down as the worst case of spelling of recent record. It occurred in a "not is" of a "sellybrashun" to be held on the shores of "Lake Eary," and mentioned the occasion as a "guble." This word troubled the editor a good deal, but, with rare perspicacity, he at length resolved it into "jubilee."

Dr. Holland once said that "the greatest blessing a young man can enjoy is poverty." And the greatest task in this world is to convince a young man that the doctor spoke the truth. By the way, Dr. Holland, in order to become rich and escape "enjoying the greatest blessing," died from overwork.—Norristown Herald.

THE GOOD HABIT.

"Charlie, Charlie!" Clear and sweet as a note struck from a silver bell, the voice rippled over the common.

"That's mother!" cried one of the boys; and he instantly threw down the bat, and picked up his jacket and cap.

"Don't go yet!" "Have it out!" "Finish the game!" "Try it out!" cried the players in noisy chorous.

"I must go right off,—this very minute. I told her I'd come whenever she called."

"Make b'lieve you didn't hear her!" they all exclaimed.

"But I did hear."

"She won't know you did."

"But I know it, and—"

"Let him go," said a by-stander. "You can't do anything with him. He's tied to his mother's apron strings."

"That's so!" said Charlie, cheerily; "and it's to what every boy ought to be tied, and in a hard knot, too."

"But I wouldn't be such a baby as to run the minute she called!"

"I don't call it babyish to keep one's word to a mother," answered the obedient boy, a beautiful light glowing in his blue eyes. "I call that manly; and the boy that don't keep his word to her will never keep it to no one else; you see if he does!" And he hurried away to his cottage home.

Thirty years have passed away since those boys played ball on the common. Charles Gray is now a prosperous business man in this great city; and his mercantile friends say of him that his "word is as good as a bond." We asked him once how he acquired such a reputation.

"I never broke my word when a boy, no matter how great the temptation; and the habit formed then has clung to me through life."—The Guiding Star.

SHEATHING A PILLOW.

Certain women have long clamored for some new method of putting on a pillow-case, but these people have either lost their teeth, or the new ones they have bought do not grasp the situation. They have tried several new methods, such as blowing the pillow-case up and getting the pillow in before the wind got out, and they have tried to get the pillow in by rolling up the pillow-case until the bottom is reached, and then placing the pillow on end and gently unrolling the pillow-case, but all these schemes have their drawbacks. The old style of chewing one end of the pillow and holding it the way a retriever dog holds a duck, till the pillow-case is on, and then spanking the pillow a couple of times on each side, is the best, and it gives a woman's jaws about the only rest they get during the day. If any inventor drives this old custom away from us, and we no more see the matrons of the land with their hair full of feathers and their mouths full of striped bed-ticking, we shall feel that one of our institutions has been ruthlessly torn from us, and that the fabric of our national supremacy has received a sad blow, and that our liberties are in danger. —Alta Californian.

This Irish receipt for dandelion tonic was taken down word for word by an Irish friend from an old woman, not a hundred miles from Dublin: "I'll pull the dandelion just afore it'll blossom. I'll pull it up, root an' all. I'll take it to the river, an' wash it in a basket. I'll pound it on a large flag. When I'll have it pounded like chopt cabbage for pigs, I'll squeeze it into a bowl. I'll get my sthrainin'-cloth on another bowl, an' I'll squeeze the stuff into it. I'll wash the sthrainin'-cloth next, an' give it the second sthrainin'; it's clane thin. Then put a glass o' brandy or owld spirrits—wan glass to a pint. Thin bottle it. Whin ye're takin' it in the mornin' shake it. Take it in the mornin' fastin'. In ten minutes ye'll turran around and ate anythin'."

Handsome Jack: "Why, of course we shall recognize Mr. Oscar Wilde and chum round with him. You'll see us walking into Parker's to breakfast, and hear us order: 'Here, waiter, give Mr. Wilde a sunflower and a couple of sprays of fern, and bring us a beefsteak, Lyonnaise potatoes and a cup of coffee.' We shall enjoy the obesity of the land, sir."

If you want to know what a woman really is before you marry her, try to catch a glimpse of her before the hour when she expects company, and before she has put all the pieces of herself together to be looked at and admired. If you can stand that, you are ready to be sacrificed on the altar of Hymen.

A tablet entitled "Useful Knowledge," which is having a wide circulation, tells what a good many things weigh, but omits entirely the weight of a ton of coal. As this is a subject on which dealers are largely at variance, it may be too much to expect that it will be reduced to an exact scientific basis in the present state of the trade.

Edibles are frequently named after illustrious individuals, and fruits after their discoverers, as for instance: Washington pies, Bartlett pears, Baldwin apples, etc., and it is no uncommon occurrence at the present day for a person to walk into an eating saloon and ask for "Plato beans."

"Mr. J. is at the door and wishes to see you." "Well, I don't want to be interrupted." "But, my dear husband, you are really doing nothing." "Exactly so—but that's the reason why I don't wish to be disturbed."

In the bright autumnal days the temptation to comtortable exposure yields its fruit in a most pernicious cough and irritation of the throat. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup stands unrivalled as a remedy for throat and lung diseases. 25 cents a bottle.

It is the height of folly to wait until you are in bed with disease you may not get over for months, when you can be cured during the early symptoms by Parker's Ginger Tonic. We have known the sickliest families made the healthiest by a timely use of this pure medicine.—Observer.

WOMAN'S TRIUMPH.

A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION—IT IS ENDURED WITHOUT TAKING ETHER--SUBJECT, MRS. EDWARD MEYERS, OF RONDOUT, N. Y.

(From the correspondence of the Kingston. N. Y. Freeman.)

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Rondout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand, without benefit. Not until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy, proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received this terrible intelligence quietly, declined to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorte Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it. 4w-

A BRAVE LADY.

SHE ENDURES THE PAIN OF A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION WITHOUT TAKING CHLOROFORM.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., New York, had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflammatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed, she was a mere wreck, a walking skeleton. In this terrible strait she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said, "All right, Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out nor stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength, and is now well. The "Favorite Remedy" is a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it. Your druggist has it. If not, send to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, New York. 4w41

Two Women.

A grandma sits in her great arm-chair;
Balmy sweet is the soft spring air.

Through the latticed, lilac shadowed pane
She looks to the orchard beyond the lane;

And she catches the gleam of a woman's dress,
As it flutters about the wind's caress.

"That child is glad as the day is long—
Her lover is coming, her life's a song!"

Up from the orchard's flowery bloom
Floats fragrance faint to the dark'ning room

Where grandma dreams, till a tender grace
And a softer light steals into her face.

For once again she is young and fair,
And twining roses in her hair;

Once again, blithe as the lark above,
She is only a girl, and a girl in love.

The years drop from her their weary pain;
She is clasped in her lover's arms again!

The last faint glimmers of daylight die,
Stars tremble out of the purple sky,

Ere Dora flits up the garden path,
Sadly afraid of grandma's wrath.

With rose-red cheeks and flying hair,
She nestles down by the old arm-chair.

"Grandma, Dick says, may we—may I—"
The faltering voice grows strangely shy.

But grandma presses the little hand:
"Yes, my dearie, I understand!

"He may have you, darling!" Not all in vain
Did grandma dream she was a girl again!

She gently twists a shining curl;
"Ah, me! the philosophy of a girl!

"Take the world's treasures—its noblest, best—
And love will outweigh all the rest."

And through the casement the moonlight cold
Streams on two heads—one gray, one gold.

CAUGHT.

Six years ago last autumn, the people of two small New England towns were startled and much excited by a series of very bold highway robberies which occurred on the stage road between the two towns.

The robberies will, I dare say, be well-remembered in the county in which they occurred; for they were the first on the highway which had ever been made in that locality. Up to that time, the farmers had felt as safe jogging along that road in the night as if at home in their beds.

Yet a more favorable locality for a highwayman's operations could hardly have been found, for the stage-road from M——, the more easterly of the two towns, over to R——, was much of the way through woods and across bushy plains, with here and there sandy hills, where horses would walk, or stop to breathe. There were not more than four or five houses on the road for nearly nine miles.

The first man robbed was a well-to-do farmer of M——, who for a number of years had bought stock in the county, to drive to Brighton. He was a sort of local drover among the other farmers.

Such a man, from the nature of his business, is known by sight to almost every one in the section of the county in which he does business. Besides, drovers usually carry with them considerable sums of money, since farmers generally expect to be paid at once when they sell cattle or produce.

This Mr. Adams left R—— village and post-office, where he had been transacting some cattle business, at about six o'clock one evening in October, to ride to his home in M——.

Some four miles out on the road, just after dusk had fallen, as his horse was walking up a sandy incline, he overtook two men who seemed to be journeying on afoot. They were talking aloud. There was nothing suspicious about them. One of them had what seemed to be a coat on his arm.

As Mr. Adams' horse came up to pass them, one of the men said, jovially, "If 'twasn't so sandy, I'd beg a ride," and with that fell in behind the wagon, taking hold of the hinder part of it.

Mr. Adams made a pleasant reply. The next thing he knew, the fellow jumped in behind, and threw a blanket, well-sprinkled with pepper, over his head. The confederate then leaped up in front.

In the scuffle all three fell into the road. But the rogues held Mr. Adams down and rifled his pockets, taking from him about two hundred and thirty dollars.

They then walked unconcernedly off, laughing, and left the dazed and sneezing drover to go on at his leisure.

Mr. Adams was not hurt, save for a few scratches; his clothes were somewhat torn. But he was very angry; who would not have been? It was a very deft, coolly executed piece of villainy.

Next morning the story flew from neighbor to neighbor in both towns. Mr. Adams offered a hundred and fifty dollars reward for the arrest of the robbers. All sorts of reports were abroad, as to who they were, etc. Some of the men tried to track them in the road; but no true clue was obtained.

The next man robbed was a wholesale peddler of cigars and confectionery. He had been on his usual trip visiting the county stores, and had passed through R—— on his way to M——, at about five o'clock on the afternoon of the 29th of October.

It was a dull evening. Six miles out of B——, just at the foot of a hill where there were thick pines, the peddler—a Mr. Carr—overtook two men, walking.

It was too dark by this time for him to see the men distinctly so that he could recognize them, but Carr felt for his revolver, which was in his hip-pocket, and put it in his overcoat pocket.

The cigar wagon was set high, and was drawn by a span of horses. As it passed the men, one of them said, "Good-evening, friend. This is rather a scarey piece of road along here, they say."

"So I've heard," said Carr.

They talked of the robbery as they walked up the hill, and so easily and familiarly that Carr was somewhat reassured, and thrown off his guard.

Suddenly the fellow walking by his forward wheel threw a handful of fine cayenne pepper plump in his face and eyes. The other man seized the horses by the head.

Carr tried to get his revolver, but before he could draw and cock it, his assailant pulled him from his seat. The two then pounced upon him, and in a twinkling threw him on his back and had secured his pistol. They searched his pockets, taking his watch and pocket-book. One of them broke open the wagon and helped himself to a box of choice cigars. They then hurried away.

So blinded was Carr, and in such pain, that it was with difficulty that he drove on to the next house, where he stopped and washed the pepper out of his inflamed eyes. Besides his watch and pistol, one hundred and seventy dollars had been taken from him, and he would have lost more, had he not previously hidden three hundred dollars in a secret recess of his cart.

Carr, or rather the firm he traveled for, offered two hundred dollars for the capture of the robbers.

The very next night, a hardware "drummer," named Clark, coming out from R——, rather late, with a horse and buggy, hired that morning at the livery stable at M——, was stopped on the road by a man who stepped out of the bushes and caught the horse by the bits. It was a horse which had previously run away several times—one kept on purpose to let to drummers!

The animal shied and sprang forward so violently as to make the man lose his hold of the bit. Clark gave the horse a sharp blow with the whip at the same instant. The animal ran for a mile or more—leaving the rogues in the lurch, for once, and most unexpectedly baffled in their purpose.

Clark was quite sure that he had a glimpse of a second man attempting to jump in at the back of the buggy just as the horse sprang. The only thing he lost was a heavy valise of samples in cutlery, etc., which was thrown out in the road when the horse jumped. That, the robbers probably appropriated.

The people of the towns of R—— and M—— were now thoroughly roused. Each town offered a hundred dollars for the capture of the highwaymen, but made the offer privately to a number of officers, who, without making any stir, were on the watch for suspicious persons.

One officer even went back and forth hidden in the stage, thinking the rascals might try to rob the mail. They, however, had a wholesome fear of stopping "Uncle Sam's wagon," and thereby getting Government detectives on their track. The stage-driver saw nothing of them.

It was evident that the men robbed were persons whom the robbers in some way knew as men who were likely to have considerable money with them. That looked as if they were either well acquainted in the county, or else had confederates who were. Several days passed and the robbers had not been arrested.

The writer, then a young man of nineteen, was attending school at the L—— Academy, three miles below R—— village. There was a class of us there fitting for college, all young fellows from fifteen to twenty-one.

That week we talked of nothing but the robberies; and it seemed to us, to the writer particularly, that the officers were proceeding in a very clumsy way, and that they stood little chance of capturing the robbers. Here allow me to remark that I then intended to take a college course, and study law; but this affair led me to another pursuit.

So greatly interested did we students become in discussing plans for catching the robbers that I, for one, lay awake the most of two nights, thinking how it might be done. At length I hit on a stratagem by which I felt certain they might be caught, and that, too, at their own game. This scheme I next day suggested to two of my classmates whom I wished to assist me in it.

There had now been five hundred and fifty dollars reward offered. This was something of a stimulus to a poor fellow who had hard work to pay his term-bills and buy school-books.

My two chums at first eagerly agreed to act their part in the scheme; but the next day, finding that there would be some personal danger, they showed the white feather.

I bound them to secrecy, however, and then got in their places two other men, one a blacksmith named Cromett, the other (if the reader will believe it) a Methodist minister, a young man, who had but lately come to preach in L——.

And here let me remark of Mr. J—— (that was his name) that he was decidedly one of the pluckiest men I ever knew. Being a minister had not taken away his physical courage.

Instructing these two men to meet me at the "forks" of the stage road, half a mile to the east of R—— village, at six o'clock, on the night of the 8th of November, I went to my home, four miles from L——. There I borrowed my father's horse and "lamb wagon," an old wagon with a strong open crate set in the body, for carrying lambs, sheep, or poultry.

Mounted on this vehicle, and dressed in a suit of coarse clothes and a slouch hat, I set off the next morning ostensibly as a sheep-drover, through R—— and two or three of the adjoining towns.

For four days I drove about looking at nearly every flock of sheep in that section. I didn't buy, but I bantered and made offers; and wherever I had a little bill to pay, I made a show of my money.

It consisted, in reality, of but thirty dollars, but it was all one-dollar bills, and made something of a roll. On the afternoon of the 8th, I drove into R—— village from the westward with three cosset sheep in my cart, and several pelts on top.

At R—— I went about, bought some pelts, and gave out at the tavern, before all the loafers there and at the stores, that I was going out to M—— that evening. There was to be a Democratic caucus in the town that evening, and there was a larger crowd than usual at the post-office and about the stores and tavern.

Shortly after sunset, I drove out of the village, and took the road to M——.

Arrived at the forks, I found Cromett and Mr. J—— waiting in the bushes. Here we quietly turned out the cossets; and my two partners, armed each with a revolver, took their places inside the crate, and covered themselves over with the sheep-pelts.

Our plan was for me to make no resistance if attacked, but I was to beg hard, and to let them pull me off the cart. While they were busy rifling my pockets, Cromett and Mr. J—— were to jump out and fall upon them. Mr. J—— said he did not mean to use his pistol if he could avoid it; but we agreed to stop them at all hazards.

By this time it was getting quite dark.

We drove on one—two—three—four or five miles. I began to think, sanguine of success as I had been, that I had probably had my labor for my pains, when I saw two men a little way ahead, coming along the road.

One of them began whistling "Yankee Doodle" as they came nearer. Just before they met me, I pulled up and sang out,—

"Say, you fellows, seen anything of them robbers anywheres ahead?"

"No, we haint," replied one. "Have you?"

"Robbers, no," said I. "Guess they've left these parts."

They came along beside the wheel, one of them saying that they had started afoot to go over to that caucus, but guessed they would be too late for it; then he said:

"Can you tell us what time 'tis?" and he struck a match on his pants as I unbuttoned my overcoat and took out my watch.

I leaned down to hold the face of my watch to the match, as he had calculated I would. The next instant he had me by the collar, and I was on my back in the sand.

I yelled lustily, and kicked and begged like a good one.

They laughed, and one of them said, "Don't be scared, my verdant chick. You shan't be hurt if you'll be a nice little boy, and stop kicking!"

They were examining my pockets—but the next moment Cromett and Mr. J—— had each one of them by the collar, with a cocked revolver pointed full in their faces.

Cromett's man curled down, and offered not the slightest resistance. But Mr. J——'s man had more grit. He struggled, and tried to get out a pistol; but I seized him round the legs, and we soon had him on his back in the sand—where I had so lately been. He swore and gritted his teeth.

"Well, my man, who d'ye think's the 'verdant chick,' now?" said I to him, as I knotted the rope on his ankles and wrists. "You're caught at your own game at last."

We put them into the sheep-crate, and drove to M—— with them, where they were locked up.

One of them proved to be a man who had formerly resided in R——, and had acquaintances in town. The other was a city rough who had joined the former for this "country job."

They had stopped, while operating there, at the house of a rather disreputable family, situated in the clearing, at some little distance off the road. Those people were no doubt in league with them, though nothing could be proved against them at the trial. But the two highwaymen were convicted easily enough, and are now serving their sentences in the State Prison.

The five hundred and fifty dollars reward was declared fairly won by me, and was paid. My two partners were satisfied with one hundred each.

The affair of the capture, and the trial where I testified, brought me prominently to public notice. During the following winter, I received several solicitations and many letters asking me to undertake detective services; and as I said above, it was this affair which led me to enter the detective profession.

I am well aware that the public holds but an indifferent opinion of detectives as a class. Yet we are a very necessary class in the world; and I must beg the reader to believe that there are honest men in the business who take genuine pride in their profession in the interests of justice and right.

WHAT IS THE CONDITION OF YOUR CELLAR?

Is it damp, close, and filled with disagreeable odors of decaying vegetables? If so, it is time you gave the matter your earnest attention, for you have in that locality the germs of disease, and yourself and family are liable to be prostrated at any moment. You think your cellar or basement is in good sanitary condition. Do you know that it is? Have you carefully examined the premises? Have you looked over the vegetables, to ascertain their condition? We know that many serious illnesses have their origin in cellars, both in city and country, and we can do our readers no greater service than to urge them to see that at all times, they are in a dry, sweet, wholesome condition. Why should farmers' families, living in the country, away from the pestilential vapors of cities, be so subject to attacks of malignant diseases? There is a reason for it, and we can point it out. They arise from indifference to the observance of hygienic rules, and the violation of sanitary laws. Cleanliness is essential to health, and it is as necessary in the country as in the city. A family living over a foul cellar is more liable to be poisoned and afflicted with illness than a city family living in its polluted atmosphere, but without cellar or basement filled with fermenting roots and fruits. There is far more sickness in the country than there ought to be. With plenty of pure air, water, and exercise, disease ought to be kept at bay, and would be, if a better observance of certain hygienic conditions were maintained. Bad-conditioned cellars, small, close sleeping-rooms, stoves—these are all agents of evil, and are fast making the homes of farmers as unhealthy as those of the dwellers in cities. Are not these suggestions worthy of consideration?—Boston Journal of Chemistry.

A PERFECT ORGANIZATION.—The organization of the German army has been brought to such perfection that in one night any army corps can be mobilized. In the Bureau of the General Staff letters are ready stamped and addressed to every department and commanding officer of the several army corps, only requiring the date to be filled in for despatch in ten minutes. All the horses belonging to private people throughout the country are marked off for the regiments and batteries to which they would be attached in war time, and also the train by which each horse would be dispatched to its destination. The whole country is organized for war, and every individual capable of bearing arms knows where to go and what to do in the event of a call being made for his services. All the railway officials, the telegraphists, and other bodies in Germany are soldiers, and the heads of those departments are general officers, who organize them chiefly to meet the exigencies of war. Even the private servants of the Emperor are old soldiers. The German officers personally know every man under their command, having drilled them. Every captain is responsible to the colonel that every man in his company is efficient by a certain date, the subalterns being responsible again to their immediate superiors.

Can You see the Ink Bottle on the Table? Its full of Nice Black Ink. If you Want to, you can Pour the Ink out on the Carpet. It makes the Carpet look Black too, does it Not? Sit down on the Carpet and Put both of your Little Paddies in the Ink. What a Nice Picture you Make on the Wall Paper now. Make a picture of a Big Man and Little Girl. Happiness.

Do you ask me, love, with fond caress,
What seems to me perfect happiness?
A golden day, and a sapphire sky,
An emerald earth, and you and I
Roaming through the woodlands green together,
That's happiness in summer weather.

And say 'tis winter; outside the snow,
And inside the fire's warm, cheerful glow;
And we sit by it, cheek touching cheek,
Silent sometimes, and sometimes we speak;
So we find, in summer or winter weather,
Happiness means—to be together.

LITERATURE FOR BOYS.

The old-fashioned stories which the unhappy boys of the last generation read have been succeeded by the manly and fascinating criminal novel. In the old story-books it was assumed that truthfulness, honesty, and obedience to parents were virtues, and that the Christian religion was not wholly devoid of merit. If these views were not directly taught in the juvenile literature of our fathers, at all events they were never directly or indirectly attacked. Boys could learn nothing from their story-books except preposterous platitudes—nothing that was of any practical use, or that tended to develop in them many and brilliant traits. No such complaint can be made of the dime and half-dime novels of the criminal school which are now read by all our boys, either openly or secretly. In these delightful stories new forms of profanity and slang are taught in the most effective way. The pleasures of burglary and highway robbery, the manliness of gambling and fighting, and the heroism of successful lying, are set forth in what is regarded by youthful readers as glowing eloquence; while the great truths that all parents are tyrants, that all religious people are hypocrites, and that disobedience to fathers and teachers is obedience to the nobler instincts of juvenile nature, are sedulously taught. Such stories as these develop all that is manly and lawless in our boys, and teach them lessons that cannot fail to be of immense service to them in whatever criminal career they may adopt.

There are a few old-fashioned people who denounce the new juvenile literature in unsparing terms; but that nearly all fathers approve of it is self-evident. They know that their boys are reading novels illustrative of the excellence of crime, but they make no effort to suppress that sort of literature, as they certainly would do did they disapprove of it. Nothing would be simpler than to drive those novels out of existence. All that it would be necessary to do would be to "Boycott" the newsdealers who keep them for sale. The truth evidently is that fathers either do not care what their boys read, or that they have no fault to find with "Jack Harkaway" and the "Boy Burglars." It cannot be that respectable gentlemen who dislike crime, profanity, and vulgarity willfully refuse to know what their boys are reading, or weakly hope that by some happy chance their reading will do them no harm.—W. L. Alden, in Harper's Magazine for February.

TRY.

Try pop-corn for nausea.
Try cranberries for malaria.
Try a sunbath for rheumatism.
Try ginger-ale for stomach cramps.
Try clam broth for a weak stomach.
Try cranberry poultice for erysipelas.
Try gargling lager beer for cure of sore throat.
Try a wet towel to the back of the neck when sleepless.
Try swallowing saliva when troubled with sour stomach.
Try eating fresh radishes and yellow turnips for gravel.
Try eating onions and horseradish to relieve dropsical swellings.
Try buttermilk for removal of freckles, tan, and butternut stains.
Try to cultivate an equable temper, and don't borrow trouble ahead.
Try the croup tippet when a child is likely to be troubled that way.
Try a hot dry flannel over the seat of neuralgic pain and renew frequently.
Try hard cider—a wine-glassful three times a day—for ague and rheumatism.
Try breathing the fumes of turpentine or carbolic acid to relieve whooping cough.
Try taking a nap in the afternoon if you are going to be out late in the evening.
Try a cloth wrung out from cold water put about the neck at nights for sore throat.
Try snuffing powdered borax up the nostrils for catarrhal "cold in the head."
Try an extra pair of stockings outside of your shoes when traveling in cold weather.

THE FOURTEEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD.—The seven wonders of the world, in ancient times, were the pyramids of Egypt, the pharos of Alexandria, the walls and hanging gardens of Babylon, the temple of Diana, the statue of the Olympian Jupiter, the mausoleum of Artemesia and the colossus at Rhodes.

The seven wonders of the world in modern times are the printing press, the steam engine, the telephone, the phonograph, the photograph, the telegraph and the electric light.

The so-called "seven wonders" of the ancients were mere trifles compared with those of the present time. The Brooklyn bridge, for example, would make the hanging gardens of Babylon a mere toy, while the whole seven wonders put together would sink into insignificance could their builder have seen a lightning express train at full speed.

HOW TO BE NOBODY.—It is easy to be nobody, and we will tell you how to do it.

Go to drinking saloons to spend your leisure time. You may not drink much now, just a little beer or some other drink.

In the meantime play dominos, or something else to kill time, so that you will be sure not to read any useful books.

If you read anything, let it be the cheap novels of the day; thus go on keeping your stomach full and your head empty, and yourself playing time-killing games, and in a few years you will be nobody, unless you should turn out a drunkard, or a professional gambler, either of which is worse than nobody.

There are any number of young men hanging about the bar-parlors just ready to graduate and be nobodies.—Yonkers Gazette.

Alcohol cannot in any sense be considered as a necessity for the maintenance of healthy life. It is not a food in any true and practical sense of that term. Labor of the severest kind, mental and bodily, can be carried on without it, and the steadiest and best work is best done without it.—Dr. B. W. Richardson.

Those days are lost in which we do no good. Those worse than lost in which we do evil.

FUEL GAS.

The prediction has frequently been made that the common use of coal as fuel in our houses and factories is to be regarded as a bungling and dirty arrangement of the past, which we should be heartily thankful to escape. Few people, however, are aware that "the good time coming is almost here," and that the process of manufacturing water gas for heating purposes has already had its practical application on a considerable scale, and has proved a remarkable success. The Yonkers, N. Y., fuel gas company has spent over $100,000 in the construction of apparatus for making water gas by the Strong process, and has laid two and a half miles of gas mains through the business and manufacturing portions of the city, where the gas is now used in thirty different places, including a hotel, a restaurant, sixteen private houses, several factories, tin shops, jewelers' shops, tailors' shops, laundries, etc. It is now running a four-horse power gas engine, and is soon to be applied to one of ten-horse power, and appliances are constructing for the use of the gas in forges, and for smelting metals. In short, it is rapidly finding its way into every department of industry where heat is required. As the fuel gas is of higher calorific power than common illuminating gas, special appliances for its use have been required, and time has been necessary to develop the best and most economical methods of using it. The gas costs less than 15 cents per 1000 feet, and the established price is 50 cents per 1000 feet, which is satisfactory to all consumers, and profitable to the manufacturers. The present production is about 400,000 feet per day, and the amount is soon to be doubled. The cost of the gas as compared with coal is not given; but the fact that the gas is being rapidly introduced is evidence enough of its utility. Even at an equal cost with coal, the saving in labor, in handling fuel, the freedom from dust, the possibility of shutting off the heat the moment it may be dispensed with, and the economy of space, are considerations of great importance. The Yonkers experiment will be carefully watched, and unless there are serious drawbacks not yet heard of, the prospect is that the fuel gas system will be rapidly introduced in all our cities.—The Husbandman.

JOURNALISTIC WORK.

It is the ambition of a large number of young men to enter the ranks of journalism because they think it not only an attractive but a lucrative profession. But they have no idea of the labor that is required of journalists. A Western editor aptly describes it in this manner: "A man who writes for a newspaper is much more of a slave than a man who follows any other profession. We are told that the law is a jealous mistress, and will have no divided attention. But if this be true of the law, it is much more true of the profession of journalism. A man who binds himself to a newspaper life has a long and wearied existence of monotonous drudgery. A lawyer, wearied in the preparation of a case, can continue it. He can have vacations and intermissions—but nothing of this sort is possible with the editor. He is like a galley slave chained to the oar. When the time comes he must write. If the brain be wearied and the physical system dull and suffering, it makes little difference. The will must come to the rescue and the task must be accomplished then and there. For this reason more men break down and grow prematurely old in the editor's work than in any other. The joys of society are denied him. No sooner does he get out one sheet than his energies are taxed to go over the ground again, and unless he has a perennial spring of enthusiasm within his breast he soon gets overworked and dull. One of the hardest things in the world is to keep up this perpetual grind all the time, day in and day out. No wonder that the average brain crumbles under it and weakens; and the final result is not flattering. Few make more than a bare living out of it. Others, who, like Greeley, reach the top, like Greeley, die of exhaustion before they taste the joys.

WHEN THE UMBRELLA CAME INTO USE.

From a reference in The Tattler (1709), it is evident that the umbrella was not used by men until a much later period than the middle of the seventeenth century; and, indeed, General Wolfe, writing from Paris in 1752, speaks of the people there using umbrellas for the sun and rain, and wonders that a similar practice does not obtain in England. It is, however, Jonas Hanway, the founder of the Magdalen hospital, who has the credit of being the first with courage to carry an umbrella habitually in London. He probably felt the benefit of the invention during his residence in Persia, where it is constantly used as a protection against the sun. Hanway died in 1786, and is said to have carried an umbrella for thirty years. Some of the first appearances in other parts of England show a somewhat later date than that of the introduction to London. The disrepute and ridicule encountered by it was in part owing to the hackney coachmen, who saw in it an interferance with their trade, in part to the then state of the roads, and in part to the unwieldiness of the instrument itself, at that time made of oiled silk.

THE SNOW PRAYER.—A little girl went out to play one day in the fresh new snow, and when she came in she said:

"Mamma, I couldn't help praying when I was out at play."

"What did you pray, my dear?" asked the mother.

"I prayed the snow-prayer, mamma, that I learned once in Sabbath school: 'Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.'"

What a beautiful prayer! And here is a promise to go with it. "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow." And what can wash them white? The Bible answers: "They have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

A few days ago, a little Oil City girl was taken sick, and her parents called a doctor whom she did not like. "Are you sick, Gracie?" asked the M. D., as he bent over his little patient. The little lady looked at him a moment in the utmost disdain, and then, in a tone of the deepest sarcasm, replied, as she turned her face from him, "Well, I should think you ought to know. Do you suppose I am lying here in bed and taking your horrid old medicine for the fun of it?" The doctor wilted.—Oil City Derrick.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1882.

THE United States Senate on Tuesday passed the bill giving Mrs. Lincoln $15,000, and increasing her pension to $5000 per annum.

THE railroad war is practically ended at last, the trunk lines advancing their first-class freight rates to Chicago from 30 to 45 cents per 100 pounds on Tuesday. The Boston & Albany road stood out a day, but finally fell into line.

EULOGIES on General Burnside were delivered in both houses of Congress Monday, and were more interesting and heartfelt than such addresses usually are. They will be published in book form, with a portrait of General Burnside.

THE rumor is again revived that Conkling is going into the cabinet, to succeed Secretary Folger, who will go on the bench of the supreme court. It will do to believe this when it is done. We think the President senses public opinion too clearly to attempt any such movement.

JEFF DAVIS told the veterans of the army of Northern Virginia, at their reunion in New Orleans last Saturday night, that the southern cause was not lost, but "only sleeping." It is the sleep from which there is no awakening, though perhaps Jeff will never realize it. He seems as incapable of regeneration as Satan himself.

CLARKSON N. POTTER of New York, a prominent lawyer, ex-member of Congress, and Democratic leader of great ability and influence, died at his home on Monday, a victim to his robust constitution, which led him to go without an overcoat in the coldest weather, and to rely on his strength and endurance to an imprudent and fatal degree. He was 58 years old.

T. C. BATES of Worcester, a State director of the Boston & Albany Railroad, favors reducing passenger fares to two cents a mile, and made a motion to that effect at a meeting of the directors last October, but the majority did not favor the proposition. There is little doubt that the increase in business would soon more than compensate the road for such a reduction, which must come, sooner or later—the sooner the better.

AND now the second Cape Cod canal company is said to have "flunked," in consequence of the discovery by recent surveys that the canal would cost a million dollars more than expected. If the Panama canal don't progress any better than the Cape Cod ditch, after all the years it has been talked about, Uncle Sam will have ample time in which to build a colossal navy with which to support his claims to its exclusive control.

COOK and La Salle counties, Ill., are left in a bad plight by a decision of the State supreme court, to the effect that the law constituting the probate courts in those counties was special legislation, and therefore unconstitutional. This closes the courts and makes all their acts illegal and void. Chicago is in Cook county, where the court has been in existence four years, and the amount of real estate titles and mortgages affected by this decision must be enormous, to say nothing of the unsettling of estates which have been settled, and of divorces which have been granted, as well as the marriages following these divorces. The Legislature will of course seek to remedy the confusion if it has the power.

THE Senate judiciary committee at Washington has reported a bill for the suppression of polygamy, which takes hold of the evil in a most vigorous fashion. It provides that those who practice or believe in polygamy shall be kept off juries, and shall be debarred from voting or holding office, while the fact of a person living in bigamous relations shall be sufficient evidence alone of a violation of the law against polygamy. The country is manifesting a new and healthy interest in this subject, and meetings to condemn the Utah polygamists are being held in nearly all the larger cities. They should be held so frequently and so generally that Congress will not dare do otherwise than take effective measures to thoroughly uproot the whole system without unnecessary delay.

THE verdict of the coroner's jury on the Spuyten Duyvil collision was rendered Wednesday, and distributes the responsibility for the disaster pretty widely. The evidence showed that Melius, the rear brakeman, was clearly responsible for the collision, remaining by the wreck, as he did, until the Tarrytown train was heard in the cut. The conductor was also criminally negligent in not seeing that Melius did his duty; and the railroad managers deserve the condemation bestowed upon them for not providing more appliances for the safety of their trains in so dangerous a part of their road; but the attempt to hold the engineers of both trains partly responsible for the collision hardly seems warrantable. In distributing the blame too widely, none are likely to be punished. If the conductor and brakeman had done their duty, it is clear that the accident would not have occurred. Their responsibility is unquestioned. Their punishment should be equally so.

Rebecca Bates, of Scituate, who will be remembered as long as stories of 1812 are told, died recently, aged 88. She and her cousin Abbie were the heroines of the "British scare," when, hidden behind the rocks on the beach, with fife and drum, they sounded the roll-call and struck terror to the hearts of the boat-loads of troops that were going to land from the British man-of-war in the harbor. Abbie still lives, aged 80 years.

GUITEAU FOUND GUILTY.

The Guiteau trial has come to an end at last, and the assassin is declared guilty of the murder of President Garfield. Begun on Monday, Nov. 15, this remarkable trial has dragged its weary length through a period of seventy-two days, until everybody was weary and disgusted, and many were prepared to welcome almost any verdict, if only the end would come. So strenuous were the efforts made to prove the prisoner insane, and so traditionally uncertain is the action of any jury, that a disagreement was expected by many, and confidently counted upon by the defense. The prompt verdict of guilty and the close of the trial were therefore as unexpected as they were welcome. The verdict will commend itself to the judgment of every intelligent person who has followed the history of the case and the evidence, without exception. Guiteau's violent and insolent conduct has without doubt helped materially in convincing the jury of his sanity.

Judge Cox decided last week to allow Guiteau to deliver his speech, which had been published, and he accordingly addressed the jury on Saturday, endeavoring to convince them that the people were coming around to his side. On Monday Judge Porter began the closing address to the jury, and his denunciation of the assassin was extremely severe, rousing the prisoner to the wildest exhibitions of fury and rage. Judge Porter concluded his address Wednesday afternoon, and Judge Cox then charged the jury in an able and impartial manner, occupying an hour and a half. The jury retired about 5 o'clock and were ready to return with their verdict in ten minutes, having agreed upon the first ballot, but the court had taken a short recess and they had to wait about an hour. When the verdict was announced by the foreman, the audience broke out into tumultuous applause, which continued for several minutes, in spite of every effort of the officers to stop the demonstrations. When quiet was restored the jurors were polled, and as the last one responded "guilty" Guiteau shrieked, "My blood will be on the heads of that jury! Don't you forget it." As he was taken to the van, he was greeted with a torrent of yells and jeers from the assembled crowd.

The trial is closed, but the end is not yet. Scoville will file exceptions to-day, and even if a new trial is denied, Guiteau cannot be executed before July, as the law in the district provides that a person cannot be hanged until thirty days after the expiration of the next term succeeding that at which he is sentenced. His sentence must come in the term which began this week, and the end of the next term will not come before June 1. There is no likelihood of a new trial being granted. The prisonor has certainly had every chance in the trial just closed which he could possibly have in another one.

REPRESENTATIVE ANDREWS of Boston hit the nail square on the head this week in offering an order that, in view of the fact that the State laws have just been thoroughly revised, the liquor, woman suffrage and other usual questions have been thoroughly considered by successive Legislatures, and hardly any question of general interest has yet been brought before the Legislature, a committee be appointed to devise and suggest means to end the present session as soon as practicable. The House adopted the order, but we fear will hardly carry out its spirit. Among the more important business of the week is the bill introduced in the Senate, providing that railroads shall keep axes, etc., in every car used for passenger service. The advisability of cutting up the board of health, lunacy and charity into three separate boards is to be considered by the committee on public charitable institutions.

The signature on the American House register, in Troy, of Park Valentine, the young man who was burned with his bride in the recent Hudson River Railroad disaster, is the last that he ever made, and the only one which was written "Park Valentine and wife." A student friend of the young man offered the proprietor of the hotel $10 for the privilege of cutting the signature out of the register as a memento. The latter, however, cut out the page and presented it to the father of the ill-fated bridegroom.

The harbor commissioners of San Francisco have made the unpleasant discovery that the piles of the sea wall at that port are rapidly being destroyed by the teredo, some of them being completely eaten off. This is found to be the case with piles that have been down but a little more than two years. As there are upwards of 35,000 of these piles, the depredations of these insects is a matter of great magnitude. Efforts will be made to discover a remedy.

The proposed printing fund of $100,000 for the Perkins Institution for the Blind at Boston, still lacks $20,000 of completion. The present library for the blind contains only 113 volumes, but the income from the fund would print 12 books annually, making a most valuable addition to the library for the unfortunate ones who must do all their reading through the tips of their fingers.

An old lady of 78 died at Abington last Sunday, after an illness of over two months, during which time she had been left alone in a cold room, with little or no medical treatment, and with no attendance, except that of her son, who took her meals to her from the family table, without any delicacies. The people of the neighborhood are very indignant.

Ex-Governor McCormick of Arizona has purchased 10,000 acres of land in Mexico, on the Pacific coast, and is going into the business of coffee culture on a large scale. He has 40,000 trees in bearing condition, and expects to plant 12,000 a year for four years to come.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The sleighing is gone, and wheels are to the front again.

The days are stretching. Next Wednesday will be just ten hours long.

Some of our merchants have been taking their annual inventory this week.

Mrs. E. Warner will dispose of her personal property at auction on Thursday, Feb. 9th, at 10 a. m.

The moon begins to lighten up the darkness of the nights, and will be in its full glory next Friday.

One hundred freight and ten passenger cars are being built at the Allston shops of the Boston & Albany road.

The regular monthly meeting of the Eastern Hampden Medical Society will be held next week Thursday, with Dr. Ballard of Hampden.

Wednesday, Feb. 22d, has been fixed upon as the date for the Sunday school convention to be held at the Congregational church in this place.

Thursday morning's rain put such a glassy surface on the walks that the ability of even the wicked to stand on the slippery places was put to a sharp test.

St. Paul's parish will probably hold a meeting early next month to consider the settlement of a pastor. Rev. W. A. Start of Boston will preach to-morrow.

The high and biting cold wind last Sunday night was a little too much for the courage of the average church-goer, and the attendance at the meetings was accordingly rather light.

There is to be a Masonic sociable in the Commercial Block lodge rooms next Tuesday night, under the auspices of Thomas Lodge, which will be participated in by members and their ladies.

The ladies of the Congregational society are preparing for a festival at their church next Wednesday evening, when they will furnish one of their excellent turkey suppers, followed by an entertainment.

A good many men drive through our streets in the course of a day without a sign of a bell attached to their horses or sleighs, from which it would naturally be inferred that the law on this subject is a dead letter.

Mrs. L. E. Carpenter will to-day reopen the store in Commercial Block recently occupied by the late Miss S. F. Carter, and in addition to the millinery business will also give her attention to dressmaking and hair-work.

A company of sleigh-riders from Wales were expected at the Nassowanno House Tuesday night, but the cold weather chilled their enthusiasm to such an extent that the trip was postponed for warmer weather.

W. H. Hellyar, for some time past employed in A. H. Willis's insurance office, has been admitted into partnership with Mr. Willis in the business, which will be carried on hereafter under the firm name of Hellyar & Willis.

The physicians in Palmer have officiated at the following number of births in town the past year: Dr. Ruggles, 32; Stowe, 31; Wm. Holbrook, 16; W. E. Holbrook, 15; Warren, 9; Downing, 9; Smith, 9; Bellecourt, 9; Barstow, 1.

The coasting has been capital this week, and it has been enjoyed to the fullest extent. On Wednesday evening a large party of hat shop "boys and girls" had a fine time on the School street hill, followed by a supper and candy-pull at the house of Mrs. George Holdsworth.

The ball at Wales Hall Tuesday evening was attended by only a small party, the extreme cold doubtless keeping many away, but those present had a very enjoyable time. Arrangements are being made for a masquerade party at the same place on Wedneseay nignt, Feb. 8th, under the same management.

Rev. A. F. Newton of Townsend, who has preached at the Congregational church two or three times in the past few months, with so much acceptance as to make him the leading candidate for the pastorate of the church, will again occupy the pulpit to-morrow. C. L. Merriam of Andover will preach the following Sunday.

The Baptist church at Wakefield, of which Rev. R. R. Riddell, formerly of this place, is the popular pastor, has recently extinguished the debt on the church property, and on the 1st inst. held special services in commemoration of the happy event. The church now owns, free from all incumbrance, a commodious edifice which, with the furnishings and land, has cost over $90,000.

A party of about 25 couples from Ware had a sleigh-ride to this place Tuesday afternoon, to enjoy the hospitalities of the Weeks House, and a smaller party from Wilbraham also spent the evening there. A party from Monson were entertained at the same place Wednesday evening, and another from Ludlow Thursday night. During the past fortnight eight sleighing parties have been entertained by Landlord Weeks.

Have you been vaccinated lately? The doctors are disposing of considerable virus in this way just at present. The small-pox has not reached this immediate vicinity, as far as known, but with occasional cases breaking out in every quarter there is no telling how soon it may be here, and it is well to be fortified against it. This is a thing in which an ounce of prevention is worth several pounds of cure.

The rage for card albums has about gone by, and the latest idea is said to be a "dress album," in which a piece of each new dress is pasted upon a leaf with the date attached. Whether the price is also noted is not said, but it is safe to say this style of album will not become popular with the ladies. It would furnish altogether too convenient a record for economical husbands to refer to when the next new dress was wanted.

The sum of $4304 is left to be returned to the towns in this county from the dog fund, after the payment of all damages, divided as follows: Agawam, $113; Blandford, $68; Brimfield, $67; Chester, $80; Chicopee, $239; Granville, $62; Hampden, $82; Holland, $7; Holyoke, $578; Longmeadow, $103; Ludlow, $107; Monson, $256; Montgomery, $32; Palmer, $205; Russell, $42; Southwick, $78; Springfield, $1307; Tolland, $38; Wales, $48; Westfield, $407; West Springfield, $217; Wilbraham, $92.

A party of overseers and others from the corset factory at West Brookfield drove to Palmer last week Friday night, for a little sleigh-ride, and to meet the superintendent on his return from New York. On their way home the driver started to take the Monson road at Tenneyville, but discovering his mistake turned across the pond in the fork of the roads. The four horses and heavy sleigh were too much for the ice, and they broke through, getting a thorough drenching and one or two bruises, but all were got out safely, and they went on home without stopping to dry their clothes.

The skating rink at Wales Hall was open yesterday, and will be open again to day and on Monday, with afternoon and evening sessions. Yesterday afternoon the hall was reserved for the use of ladies only, and there will be another session for their exclusive benefit Monday afternoon. On Monday evening the Palmer Cornet Band will add to the attractions of the rink by its presence and music. The new floor which was laid in the hall last season makes a capital skating surface, and is pronounced much superior to the floor in the Springfield rink. Mr. Hitchcock goes to Monson next week Thursday and Friday with his skates.

The lesson of the recent collision on the Hudson River Railroad is promptly taken to heart by the managers of the Boston & Albany Railroad, who have issued orders that hereafter its passenger trains shall be equipped with fire extinguishers, crowbars and axes, to be placed in the baggage car and in the rear passenger car, thus providing for a front or rear collision. The baggage cars of all passenger trains have for some time been provided with axes, bars, chains, patent switches, etc., for use in a wreck, and the addition of fire extinguishers to the outfit is a move in the right direction. On many accounts, however, it would seem better to have axes and extinguishers in each car, ready for immediate use by those nearest at hand.

John Shea, Michael Murphy and John Carmody of Bondville got a little too much liquor aboard last week Friday evening, and in their unsteadiness managed to break a couple of panes of glass in the front of White, Hellyar & Co's. store. They settled for the broken glass, and on Saturday paid the district court $5.65 each for drunkenness. William Allen, for drunkenness, the second time within a year, paid $8.55. John Collins on Monday paid $6.35 for drunkenness. On Thursday, Mary M. Davis of Monson, for adultery with Everett Newport, was committed to appear before the grand jury in May, Newport's case being continued until Monday. William Allen was up again for drunkenness, this making his third conviction within a year, and was sentenced to the house of correction for one year. He appealed to the superior court, furnishing sureties in the sum of $200. J. D. Fosket paid $6.25 for drunkenness, and Charles Lee was committed to the house of correction for three months, for larceny.

The weather this week has been "various" and varying enough to test the capacity and strength of the most vigorous thermometers, some of which have almost given up in despair. The cold wind last Sunday penetrated everything and everybody, and there was a pretty general freezing up and bursting of water and steam pipes. The bank block has been without steam most of the week in consequence of the freeze, and Edgerton & Davis's foundry had the worst freeze in years. The mercury only got up to about 12 during the day, Monday, being a few degrees below in the morning, while on Tuesday morning it was from 16 to 20 below, and only ventured as high as 5 above during the day. The temperature moderated considerably Wednesday, and on Thursday a rain set in which practically put an end to the sleighing. Yesterday opened with a warm sun and swiftly-flying clouds, driven by a high wind, but so warm that overcoats were almost a burden. The weather clerk is terribly unsettled, evidently, and is playing fast and loose with the ice men in a most aggravating manner.

The new Palmer Wire Co., a chartered corporation with a paid up capital of $50,000, was organized last Saturday, with the following officers: President, M. W. French; treasurer, S. W. French; business manager, Frank F. Bullard of Worcester; these gentlemen also composing the board of directors. The company is chartered for the manufacture of steel, iron and Bessemer wire and wire articles, and will as soon as practicable begin the erection of buildings on the land recently purchased by Mr. French west of the village. The building plans are not fully settled upon yet, but there will probably be a one-story brick mill about 150 by 80 feet, with a two-story frame addition, 125 by 60 feet. When completed, these mills will give employment to a large number of men, necessitating the erection of a number of tenement houses, and making a most important addition to the manufacturing interests of the town. The mills will be located near the tracks of the New London Northern and Ware River railroads, from which spur tracks can be run directly to the mills, thus furnishing excellent shipping facilities.

BONDVILLE.

R. L. Bond has commenced filling his ice house.

Dr. Smith has been vaccinating the mill operatives, and many other residents of the village.

Tuesday was the coldest day yet this season, the thermometer registering from eighteen to twenty degrees below zero.

The ladies' social of the M. E. church met at Mrs. E. M. Murdock's last Wednesday, and passed a pleasant afternoon and evening.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Thermometer on Monday registered zero; on Tuesday 16 degrees below.

William Dempsy, in the employ of the paper company, we are informed, has been married twenty-one years, and has been the happy father of twenty-one children, no twins. Eleven or twelve are now living.

At the annual election of directors of the Collins Paper Co. this week, the following were chosen: Wm. K. Baker, clerk and treasurer; William Whiting, James A. Rumrill, H. S. Hyde, C. A. Nichols, L. L. Brown of Adams and James Kirkham.

BRIMFIELD.

The ice men resumed on Wednesday, only to suspend on Thursday, on account of the rain.

On Friday, January 20th, (not on Wednesday) a sleigh-ride party of 27 couples from Southbridge enjoyed the hospitalities of the Brimfield House. The same day a few couples from the Brimfield high school returned the compliment by a ride to Southbridge and supper at the Dresser House; and on Thursday nine couples, also from the high school, did likewise. If these pupils manifest as much pluck in their studies as it required to turn out for a sleigh-ride on Tuesday, we think success awaits them.

THREE RIVERS.

J. M. Buffington of Ware will take charge of the Otis Company's large boarding house the first of February.

The lecture of Prof. R. H. Mather on "Joan of Arc," which was to have come off last week, was postponed one week, and was given last evening. The next lecture in the course will be by Col. R. H. Conwell, Feb. 3. Subject, "Lessons of Travel."

Rev. T. G. A. Cote, pastor of the new French church in Lowell, will supply the pulpit of the Union Evangelical church next Sunday morning. He will speak in French, to the French people, at three o'clock in the afternoon, at the same place. He will also conduct the services in the evening.

BELCHERTOWN.

The Masonic sociables are well attended, and are a success financially as well as socially.

The thermometer Tuesday morning at 6 o'clock ranged from 22 to 28 degrees below zero.

Mrs. Campbell gave a lecture on woman suffrage at the brick hall last Wednesday, giving reasons why ladies should vote.

Calvin Bridgman, long a resident in this village, and well beloved, is suffering from dropsy and there is little hope of his recovery.

Union meetings are still being held, and quite a religious interest is manifest, goodly numbers being present in spite of the inclemency of the weather.

Nearly all the workmen on the Massachusetts Central Railroad have been sent from this place to Ware, as the work was progressing more rapidly here than at that place.

WILBRAHAM.

The Farmers' Institute at the hotel hall Wednesday was well attended and much enjoyed.

The senior class of the academy enjoyed a sleigh-ride on Tuesday evening, taking supper at the Weeks House, Palmer.

The ladies' sewing circle of the Congregational church met with Deacon Walter Hitchcock Thursday afternoon and evening.

The Willing Workers of the Congregational church will be entertained this afternoon by Dr. Stebbins Foskit and wife.

The day of prayer for colleges was observed at the Methodist church Thursday, by special meetings morning and afternoon, and a special meeting in the evening at the reading room in the boarding house.

The Quadrangle met with Miss Clara Markham Thursday afternoon, and discussed Grecian mythology. The next meeting will be with Miss Lila Taylor next Thursday. Subject, The Iliad and Odyssey, and Life of Homer.

WARREN.

Many of the merchants are taking their inventory.

The Methodists had a love feast at Brigham's Hall Wednesday evening.

James Hill is filling in his land on Crescent street, preparatory to building a house.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. Dr. Warriner Wednesday evening.

Miss Fay will give the teachers a lesson in drawing this afternoon at the high school room.

Capt. Davis slipped on the ice a few days ago, and has been confined to his bed, the fall injuring one of his hips.

Mrs. Morgan is soon to retire from her store of fancy goods and millinery, and is selling out her goods at a very low figure.

The soldiers' fair was a decided success, the total receipts amounting to $628, which will be sent to Chelsea to assist in the payment of the Soldiers' Home.

Mr. Toles, with four little girls, attended the Congregational church last Sunday, and in the evening a union service was held, with an address by Mr. Toles, and singing by the girls from the Home.

The Congregational Sabbath school voted to appropriate twenty dollars to purchase reference books for the use of teachers and older pupils, to be kept at the public library for reference, and not to be taken away.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Surprise parties are the rule just now, and have been in order for the past six weeks.

The new pipe organ at the Evangelical church will be ready for use to-morrow, when Rev. F. M. Sprague will preach on "Music in Church."

When minors want lager beer now they ask for "hops" at one of the bar-rooms, and the bartender hops round and they get the lager. That is the Orchard style.

An effort has been made to oust Officer Needham from the police force, and get an Orchard man appointed, but Mayor Ladd evidently knows a good thing when he has it, and has very wisely reappointed Mr. Needham.

At a recent meeting of the local land league the following officers were elected: President, J. H. Maloney; vice president, J. H. Shea; recording secretary, W. C. Godfrey; financial secretary, J. E. Stone; treasurer, M. Fitzgerald; sergeant-at-arms, P. C. Shea.

Bless the young ladies! They have reorganized one of the best societies ever existing in the Orchard, namely, The Young Ladies' Industrial Club, and the secret workers of evil are trembling at the consequence, but the young men are rolling their tongues in their mouths in pleasant anticipation of the good things in store for them. Miss Annie McClintock is the new president, and with her at the head the club will certainly be led to success, and the young men get at least one supper.

WALES.

The ice men are harvesting good ice 9 inches thick, and are happy.

F. E. Sibley takes the cake for catching pickerel, having recently caught one weighing 4¾ pounds.

J. M. Lyon is building a new house for John Ricketts, near the house Mr. Ricketts recently sold to Mr. Sherman.

Mrs. A. E. Pettie, of Brattleboro, Vt., has occupied her room in Shaw's Block, and is ready to attend to dressmaking.

Eden D. Shaw, who had his sleigh smashed recently, has purchased a new one, and will now have as fine a turnout as any one.

The cold wave brought the thermometer down here, one man reporting his at 32° below zero, while others were at 22° below.

The ladies of the Baptist society held a festival Wednesday evening, improving the time with dialogues, charades and readings, and a social time for all.

The young people arranged for a sleigh-ride last Tuesday, to dine at the Nassowanno House, Palmer, but the cold weather persuaded them to postpone it to some warmer time. Now the thaw has come they wish they had braved it through.

The Methodist society held a festival in the vestry of their church last week Thursday and Friday evenings, with very satisfactory results. A novel feature of the festival was the masquerading before the supper, and the surprises on removing the masks at the table. The masks were given out promiscuously among the ladies and gentlemen, each gentleman taking the lady to supper who had a mask with a corresponding number.

As the Monson owners of fast horses were trying their speed last week Friday afternoon on the flat at South Monson, a stranger on a pleasure drive appeared, coming from the direction of Wales, who at once joined in the race. After several contests, and coming out ahead each time, he drove off in the direction from whence he came, making friends with no one, and leaving the bystanders gaping with amazement and wondering if any such thing could come out of Hegan.

MONSON.

People who traveled on foot last Wednesday, found the middle of the street the best sidewalk.

Now that the ice houses are filled there is no use of trying to purchase fire extinguishers or engines in case of fire.

Meetings have been held the past week at the Congregational church, as for a few weeks previous, and the revival interest continues.

Father Kelly and several members of his church report a pleasant sleigh-ride and highly enjoyable time at Landlord Weeks's in Palmer Wednesday evening.

Wednesday was a big day at Burdick's ice pond; 160 loads of ice were taken out and put into ice houses, 34 horses and oxen and 29 men being required to do the work.

Marvin Bradway has demonstrated that a first-class furniture store will be a permanent institution, and our citizens have found that they can be accommodated at home as favorably as abroad.

A little girl coming to the door after the morning milk asked the dealer, "How long does one have to peddle milk to become a deacon?" She had probably heard of the deaconing of calves.

Rev. George Leonard, D. D., of Bucyrus, O., preached at the Methodist church last Sabbath afternoon. Rev. Frederic Woods of Westfield will preach there to-morrow, in exchange with the pastor.

Thursday was observed as a day of fasting and prayer for colleges and academies, and services were held in the afternoon at the academy, with a short sermon in the evening at the Congregational chapel.

G. H. Newton talks of engaging in the auction and commission business if suitable accommodations can be found. It is very difficult to get a tenement, store or shop, as all seem to be occupied and doing a good business.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The assessors are to meet Friday, Feb. 3, at 10 o'clock, to make abatement on taxes.

The Otis Company's pay roll for last month amounted to $33,611 for the 26 working days.

The ice crop is being harvested. It is 12 inches in thickness, and of the best quality.

The Methodist turkey supper and bazar last Friday evening was a success socially and financially, netting the improvement society $125.

It is reported that some of our dealers are selling oleomargarine for butter. It is said to be better, by far, than poor butter, still but few would use it if they knew it.

Several petty burglaries are reported, one of Snow's mill last week, and the room recently occupied by J. M. Buffington as a market on Sunday night. Nothing of value was obtained in either case.

But one sleigh-ride has come to Ware as yet, and that last week Friday, from Sturbridge. What's the reason more don't come? We believe we have as good a hotel, in the Hampshire House, as any in this part of the county.

O. O. Cross cut the wrist of his left arm in a shocking manner Tuesday, on a circular saw. In reaching over to move a guage his sleeve was caught, drawing the wrist directly down upon the saw. Although a severe wound, it is hoped it will not permanently disable his hand.

Franklin Brakenridge has advertised his farm for sale. On this place, but a few rods from the highway, is the most beautiful site for a house for a summer resort we know of in this vicinity, commanding a most magnificent view of the Ware River valley for many miles, both north and south.

The second public rehearsal of the Ware Musical society will be given Thursday evening, Feb. 2, at the new chapel. Part first will consist of a sketch of the life of Hayden, and as illustrations of his music will be given the choruses, "Now elevate the sign of Judah," and "Heavens are telling together," with other selections. The second part will be of a miscellaneous character.

A reference library is being started for the use of the high school. Contributions of volumes for this purpose will be thankfully received. The school committee have purchased a set of Johnson's Encyclopædia, 8 volumes, and Ramsay's Manual of Antiquities, the best of English authority on this subject. This library is one that has been much needed. While we have one of the best public libraries to be found, the books of reference cannot be taken from the building for use at the school.

The Ware Land League Fair closed on Wednesday evening with a social dance. The fair was one of the most successful ones ever held in town. Owing to the interest in the cause and the efficient management, the receipts for the four evenings were $1020, with expenses of probably less than $200. One hundred and eight tickets were sold to the dance. Some of the leading articles drawn were an easy chair by John J. Ryan, tapestry lounge by Betsey Taylor, barrel of flour by Michael Shea, hanging lamp by Master Clifford.

An alarm of fire was given about half-past three Wednesday afternoon, the cause being the burning of a wood shed belonging to the house of James Harrison, on Water street. The fire soon found its way to the house, which was as good as entirely destroyed. A few pails of water, when first discovered, would have saved the house, but the engine was found to be frozen up, and a long time, it seemed, was occupied in thawing it out. The house was occupied by the owner and Patrick McNaney. The contents were nearly all saved. The house and furniture were insured for about $2000, with Wm. Lincoln & Co. of Warren. The fire, it is supposed, was set by a boy four years old playing with matches in the shed.

The parish meeting and sociable was largely attended at the new chapel on Thursday evening. Hon. Wm. Hyde was chosen chairman. Prayer was offered and remarks made appropriate to the occasion by Dr. Perkins, and as a foundation for the report of the building committee a few well pointed remarks were made by the chairman of the committee, Calvin Hitchcock. The report was then read by E. H. Baker, showing the entire cost of land and building to be $12,216.19. A vote of thanks was given to the ladies who had assisted the committee by raising $260 for the furnishing of the parlors, and for their valuable aid in selecting articles for use in the kitchen. The chairman of the meeting also made a few well-timed remarks, giving some interesting reminiscences of the early days of the East Congregational society.

Some brave New Yorkers have banded together for a crusade against a long-standing superstition, having formed the "Thirteen Club," thirteen of whom sat down to dine together on the 13th inst. at 7.13 p. m., and they propose to run the thirteen business into the ground—unless "thirteen" beats them and puts them under the ground first.

A New Marlboro man claims to have discovered a valuable mine of gold and silver on land in the south part of the town; specimens of ore, taken from a shaft, 20 feet deep, have been assayed, and show such flattering results that a company is to be formed to work it.

Charles Royle, 9 years old, jumped from his sled while coasting at Springfield last Saturday morning, to escape a passing team, and fell in front of the horse, which stepped on his head, injuring him so that he died in the afternoon.

Four ex-Speakers of the Massachusetts House of Representatives have died within a year—three of them within two months—viz:—James M. Stone, Harvey Jewell, Alexander H. Bullock and Ensign H. Kellogg.

An open switch at Vernon, Ct., caused two freight trains on the New York & New England Railroad to collide last Saturday night, badly damaging the engines and derailing several cars.

A Mrs. Goff of Lewiston, Me., was killed, and the house wrecked, Monday morning, by the explosion of the kitchen stove. An enemy of the family had loaded the fire-wood with dynamite.

The winter in British Columbia is the mildest ever known. Grass and other vegetables are starting, trees are budding, stock is in fine order and there is neither frost nor snow.

Forty years ago there were at Newfane Centre, Vt., a court house, jail, school houses, churches and several stores, where now there is not a vestige of a dwelling.

Wild ducks are making sad havoc with young grain in Colusa county, Cal. On one farm they have nipped the blades off from all the wheat sprouted on 1000 acres.

At the annual meeting of the Congregational society of Hardwick it was found that the society closed the year free from debt, with a permanent fund of $4000.

Amherst College will receive $50,000 for its library from the estate of the late Joel Giles, a Boston lawyer, who was a member for one year of the class of 1825.

February Magazines.

The Century for February comes out with a distinctive new cover, dropping out the name of Scribner's Monthly, and announces that this cover will have four variations—one each for the special issues, November, February, May and August. The February or "Midwinter issue," has Winter, represented by a female figure holding an antique lamp, with a background of Aurora Borealis, on the lower half of the page, the whole framed in and connected with the title by twining bare boughs. The contents of the magazine ought to please any one from the great diversity of matter, coming as it does from some of the best writers of the present time. Mr. Emerson has a plea for temperance in speech and conduct, entitled "The Superlative," which is well worth perusal. Dean Stanley compares the late Frederick W. Robertson with Newman and Dr. Arnold, and pronounces him the "greatest preacher of the nineteenth century." The interest in Mrs. Burnett's "Through One Administration," and Mr. Howell's "Modern Instance," is fully sustained, while Mr. Stockton amuse the reader with the droll adventures of the Rudder Grangers in Florida, and "H. H.," under the caption of "Jacob Stolz's Beat," describes the picturesque and curious features of the Moravian settlement at Bethlehem, Pa., the article being illustrated by Birch, Pennell and others. Longfellow, Mr. Stedman, Maurice Thompson (of archery fame), Miss Edith M. Thomas and others contribute poems. There is a fine frontispiece portrait of George W. Cable, engraved by Cole, with a sketch by Col. Waring. A large variety of other papers not named, added to the departments, which contain live and suggestive articles, make a very full, complete and attractive number.

St. Nicholas for February opens with a story of the adventures of a Mexican prince, which has an illustration by F. H. Lungren for a frontispiece. "The Hoosier School-boy," by Edward Eggleston, takes the reader through some stirring scenes of frontier school-life, as it was in the boyhood of the author. In a short article he also describes "A Curious Drama" which he saw in London. There is an illustrated installment of "Donald and Dorothy," Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge's serial, "Men-and-Animal-Shows, and How They are Moved About," by W. O. Stoddard, and short stories fully illustrated, by Sophie Sweet, Hon. Jeremiah Curtin, Sargent Flint and others. There are several poems and humorous verses, the "Very Little Folks' Department," "Letter Box," "Riddle Box," &c., which with a long report concerning the "St. Nicholas Agassiz Association," which now has 1700 members, complete the magazine.

The high wind last Sunday demolished Thomas Dewey's tobacco barn at Westfield, blew down the staging around the Catholic church spire and did any quantity of damage in the way of breaking windows and blowing off blinds, shingles and slate.

A boy 12 years old, at Morrisville, Vt., has in the past year earned and saved $100 by selling candy, driving cows and buying and selling eggs; besides attending school 33 weeks during the time.

Vanderbilt has given an order to Pittsburg for 76,000 tons of steel rails, saying that the American steel is better than the British.

AN ALARMING SPREAD OF SMALL-POX.—The most potent remedy to stop the spread of this great scourge is Darbys Prophylactic Fluid, which is ready for use at all times. Persons are liable at any time to "catch" the disease, and should get the Fluid at once and use it freely about, as places cannot be infected where the Fluid is used. Persons attending the sick or in other ways exposed to the disease will be protected by its free use.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth when it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northeast from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of handsome chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with St. Peter and the Goat.

St. Peter was perplexed with the prevalence of injustice in the world, and thought he could make affairs better if he were permitted to manage them. He frankly confesses his idea to the Lord. Meanwhile a peasant girl appears, complaining that she must do a hard day's work, and at the same time keep in order a frolicsome goat. "Now," said the Lord to Peter, "you must have pity on this girl, and take care of the goat. That will serve you as an introduction to the management of the universe." Peter undertakes the goat, and has quite enough to do, as the conclusion of the song will show:

"The young goat had a playful mind,
And never liked to be confined;
The apostle, at a killing pace,
Followed the goat in desperate chase;
Over the hill, and among the briars,
The goat runs on and never tires,
While Peter behind, on the grassy plain,
Runs on, panting and sighing in vain;
All day, 'neath the scorching sun,
The good apostle had to run,
Till evening came; the goat was caught,
And safely to the Master brought.
Then, with a smile to Peter, said
The Lord: 'Well, friend, how have you sped?
If such a task your power has tried,
How would you keep the world so wide?'
Then Peter, with his toil distressed,
His folly with a sigh confessed:
'No, Master, 'tis for me no play
To rule one goat for one short day;
It must be infinitely worse
To rule the whole wide universe.'"

SIMPLE REMEDY FOR CATARRH AND BRONCHITIS.

It is now generally known that carbolic acid is strongly disinfectant, and very usefully applied to putrid sores or purulent wounds. Wood Creosote is similar, is decidedly antiseptic, and quite volatile. It is therefore natural to suppose it would be useful when applied to catarrhal and bronchial affections which arise from diseased or putrefying mucus. We learned of its use for this purpose from Dr. Pescetto, a leading physician in the noted Italian Medical School in Genoa, Italy, from whose conversations we gleaned portions of the important article on "Catching Cold and the Remedies," given in last December's American Agriculturist. We have since recommended the following statement in many cases with the best results. It can do no harm, is simple, and is eminently worthy of trial, both for temporary and chronic affections.

For Bronchitis.—Get from the druggist's a little good wood creosote. Put two drops of it into a bottle holding a pint or so. Pour in a little more than half a pint of clear water, and shake it well; also shake well always before using it. Take a mouthful of this, throw the head back, gargle it some time in the throat, and then swallow it. Repeat this every two hours, more or less, so as to use up the liquid within 24 hours. For each subsequent 24 hours use three drops of the creosote in 3 to 4 gills of water. This 3 drops a day may be continued as long as any bronchitis appears. Two to four days is usually enough, though it may be continued indefinitely without harm.

For Catarrh.—Prepare the creosote water as above, in any amount, at the rate of one drop of creosote to one gill of water (four drops to the pint), or a little more water if the creosote be very strong and the water too irritating. Make a fresh mixture once in two or three days, and as much oftener as more is needed. Take a handful of this water, previously well shaken, and snuff it through the nose into the mouth, and eject it. A little going down the throat will do no harm. Do this two or three times, and repeat it at bedtime, in the morning on rising, and, if need be, occasionally during the day. In fact, keep the nasal passages washed out with the creosote water. Its vapor will even penetrate the bony cavities, and also be drawn into the lungs with useful results. It destroys the purulent mucus, and tends to prevent its further secretion. It is useful for any discharges from the nose or lungs produced by colds or general weakness.

For bronchitis, and especially for catarrh, good rare-cooked beef or other nourishing food, and quinine if needed, to obtain and retain a vigorous system, are capital aids to the creosote or any other medicine.

To insure accuracy, as usual in such cases we sent a proof-slip of the above to a very competent regular physician, who returned it without correction or addition, except as follows: "The above is valuable and entirely reliable, and should be widely read. Nine-tenths of the people who take nostrums for catarrh have no such disease, but have been made to believe they suffer from it by the quacks who sell their useless and poisonous stuffs for the cure of catarrh at an immense profit. A common 'cold' is an acute catarrh, and properly treated is soon well. Chronic catarrh of any part of the mucus tract is not so easily cured, but fortunately is much more rarely seen by physicians even than people usually think."—Orange Judd in Am. Agriculturist for February.

Too Cautious.—Caution is a good thing when not carried to excess, but Jake, our porter, usually carries it to excess. We saw him nailing up a box the other day, containing some articles which he intended sending by express. From the nature of the contents, we knew it was essential that the box should not be inverted on the passage; so we ventured the suggestion to Jake to place the much-abused "This side up!" etc., conspicuously upon the cover. A few days after we saw Jake.

"Heard from your goods, Jake? Did they get them safely?"

"Every one broke!" replied Jake, sullenly. "Lost the hull lot! Hang the express company!"

"Did you put on 'This side up,' as we told you?"

"Yes, I did; and for fear they shouldn't see it on the kiver, I put it on the bottom tew,—confound 'em."

"No, I shall leave my wife nothing," said old Gribbs, "she's always had her will and now I'll have mine."

"Mine, miner, minus!" This is the general upshot of speculation in mining stock.

BUYING AN OVERCOAT IN DETROIT.

Yesterday morning a tall young man of 20 landed at the Union depot with a bundle under his arm, and after three or four minutes spent in getting his bearings he walked up Jefferson avenue and turned into a clothing store.

"Do you wish to try on some coats and wests for a tollar?" asked the proprietor, as he rushed from behind the counter.

"No, I guess not. Do you deal on the square?"

"My frent, dot is exactly vhat I does. I vas so square dot I lose $3000 last year. Can I sell you an overcoat for ten dollar?"

"No, I guess not. Here is an overcoat that I bought of you four weeks ago."

"Bought of me?"

"Yes, I think you are the man. When I got it home we found that it was moth eaten. I can pick it to pieces in a dozen places."

"Is dot possible! Und how much you pay?"

"Eight dollars."

"My shtars! Und what you vant now?"

"I want my money back."

"Vell—vell. Mine frent, I am sorry for you. You seem like an honest poy, and it vas too pad!"

"Yes, it was a swindle, and I want my money back."

"Dear me, but I vish you vas here yesterday. Let me oxplain mit you. You bought dot coat four weeks ago?"

"Yes, four weeks to-day."

"Vell, I had sold oudt to my cousin Philip shust one day before. Philip ish not a square man."

"What have I got to do with Philip?"

"Let me oxplain. In dree days Philip makes assignment to my brudder Louis. Dot Louis is a leedle off. He would sheat your eye teeth away from you."

"Yes, but I haven't anything to do with Louis."

"Let me oxplain. Louis kept der place a week, und he gif a shattel mortgage to my fadder-law, and vas bounced out."

"I don't know anything about that."

"Let me oxplain. My fadder-law was took mit a fit und died, und he leaf dis place to my vife. My vife vas gone to Europe for two years, and she leaf me as agent. Now you see how it vas. I cannot told you who sold dot coat. Maybe it vas Philip, maybe it vas Louis, maybe my fadder-law. It couldn't haf been me, for I vas in Shicago. If you leaf dot coat I will write to my vife. She is square, shust like me, and maybe she writes back dot you can take a linen duster und two white vests und call it all righd."

"Say, this is a sneaking swindle," exclaimed the young man.

"Maybe it vas. Philip vas a great liar."

"I'll go to the police!"

"Vell, dot ish all righd; maybe der police vill help me catch Louis. I shust found oudt last night dot he cut all der hind buttons off all der coats in der store before he left."

"If you'll step outdoors I'll mash you!"

"Vell, I like to oblige you, but you see I vas only agent for my vife."

Boys, Read and Heed.—Many people seem to forget their character grows; that it is not something to put on ready-made with womanhood or manhood; but day by day, here a little and there a little, grows with the growth, and strengthens with the strength, until, good or bad, it becomes a coat of mail. Look at a man of business—prompt, reliable, conscientious, yet clear-headed and energetic. When do you suppose he developed all those admirable qualities? When he was a boy? Let us see how a boy of ten years gets up in the morning, works, plays, studies, and we will tell you just what kind of a man he will make. The boy that is too late at breakfast and late at school, stands a poor chance to be a prompt man. The boy who neglects his duties, be they ever so small, and then excuses himself by saying, 'I forgot; I don't think!' will never be a reliable man, and the boy who thus finds pleasure in the suffering of weaker things will never be a noble, generous, kind man—a gentleman.—Christian Helper.

A little girl who attended a Christmas Sunday school festival, was asked what they did there. The reply was: "They sang about Jesus, and talked about Santa Claus."

A Michigan girl has husked corn enough to buy a pair of sixteen-dollar silk stockings. She is now going to emigrate to some town where they have got a skating rink.

Stories first heard at a mother's knee are never forgotten. It is the same with some other things received at a mother's knee, which will readily occur to our readers.

A lady in reply to some guests who praised the mutton on the table said: "Oh, yes, my husband always buys the best; he is a great epicac."

"None of your gaudy colors for me," she said to the man at the counter; "give me plain red and yaller."

It is the height of folly to wait until you are in bed with disease you may not get over for months, when you can be cured during the early symptoms by Parker's Ginger Tonic. We have known the sickliest families made the healthiest by a timely use of this pure medicine.—Observer.

WOMAN'S TRIUMPH.

A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION—IT IS ENDURED WITHOUT TAKING ETHER—SUBJECT, MRS. EDWARD MEYERS, OF RONDOUT, N. Y.

(From the correspondence of the Kingston. N. Y. Freeman.)

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Rondout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand, without benefit. Not until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy, proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received this terrible intelligence quietly, declined to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorte Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it. 4w-

RENNE'S Pain-Killing MAGIC OIL.

"IT WORKS LIKE A CHARM."

CURES: HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE, NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, LAMENESS, SKIN DISEASES, SORE THROAT, DIPHTHERIA, BURNS, SPRAINS, ETC.

Some folks seem to be proud of telling how "lame their shoulders are"—of "my crick in the back"—or, "I have got the Sciatica"—and delight in bragging that "nothing can cure me!"—but when we get such "awful folks" to use RENNE'S PAIN-KILLING MAGIC OIL, faithfully, we not only cure their lameness and charm away their pains, but we actually take all that kind of "brag out of them!" and they frankly own up, and say, "It works like a charm!"

Call for Renne's Magic Oil where you usually trade.

Sold by all druggists, merchants and grocers. 4w45

STATEMENT Under Oath!

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D's. Psoriasis, and others Leprosy, commencing on my scalp, and, in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skillful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in the form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor, and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there could be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envolope containing this letter. In the latter part of the winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit, and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. —— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back, across my ribs, arms, hands, feet badly swollen, toe nails came off, finger nails dead and hard as bone, hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. Oh, my God! how I did suffer!

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier), Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures). I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Resolvent three times a day, after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura morning and evening. Result, returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the next of kin, and all persons interested in the estate of Vilura Anderson and William M. Anderson, children of William Anderson, of Star Prairie, in the State of Wisconsin, minors,

Greeting:

Whereas, Charles L. Gardner, the guardian of said minors, has presented his petition for license to sell real certain estate therein specified, of his said wards for investment,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Palmer, in said county, on the second Tuesday of February next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be granted. And said guardian is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, three weeks successively, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

The One-Hoss Sleigh.

Merrily ho the sleigh bells go—
Jingle! Jingle! Jingle!
Their music rings from the years gone by—
Blessed years that seem so nigh—
The huskings and frolics of the olden time
Will ever ring in with a golden chime.

Merrily ho the sleigh bells go—
Jingle! Jingle! Jingle!
Memory paints us a cottage white,
White as the snow in the bright moonlight;
That is the cot that holds our heart—
Oh merry bells, may ye ne'er depart.

Merrily ho the sleigh bells go—
Jingle! Jingle! Jingle!
We see the brother and sister near,
Parents and friends that our hearts hold dear—
All were merry and happy and gay
As they took a ride in the one-hoss sleigh.

Merrily ho the sleigh bells go—
Jingle! Jingle! Jingle!
Over the hills and the crisp, white snow,
With a merry laugh and a loud heigh-ho;
Lads and lasses so happy and gay,
Packed like sardines in a one-hoss sleigh.

Merrily ho the sleigh bells go—
Jingle! Jingle! Jingle!
The one-hoss sleigh to the school-house sped,
While bobbing behind was the urchin's sled,
Whirring along at a fearful speed,
The snow-balls flying from the hurrying steed.

Merrily ho the sleigh bells go—
Jingle! Jingle! Jingle!
A country sleigh is the school boys' boss,
With a string of bells on a prancing hoss;
Nothing can suit a boy so well
As the merry sound of a one-hoss bell.

Merrily ho the sleigh bells go—
Jingle! Jingle! Jingle!
Merry the music and merry the bells,
Merry the maidens through hamlet and dells,
Merry the laddies that sped away
In father's elegant one-hoss sleigh.

THE STAGE DRIVER'S WIFE.

Four bay horses dashed in fine style up to the door of the inn, pulling behind them the gorgeous red stage, which swayed and reeled and rocked in a fashion that made the more nervous passengers wince and shiver.

Hollister threw his reins to the stable boy, and went into the house. He was a bluff, big-fisted fellow—rather rough looking in his wolf skin overcoat and broad-visored cap. Nobody ever doubted the kindness of heart under that unpolished exterior, however.

Now, as he tramped through the big hall, on his way to the bar-room, he paused at the sight of a female figure in one dim corner, with her face dropped into both hands, and her whole attitude one of sorrow and despair. The figure was slender and young, clad in a well-worn gray suit, and the hands on which the brown head was bowed were white and delicate.

"I beg your pardon, ma'am. Are you in trouble? Can I be of service to you?"

Then the girl looked up, and Hollister recognized the daughter of a man who had been at the inn for some weeks—a man whom the driver had no hesitation in classing as an adventurer and a blackleg.

He had pitied the girl on that night when he had first seen her—when he had brought them out from the city; for she seemed a lady, with her quiet way and her wistful eyes, and not at all fitted for a life of Bohemianism, such as it was evident her father was leading her.

She looked up, I say, and meeting the expression of honest kindliness in Frank Hollister's clear gray eyes, she struggled a moment for self control, and then burst into tears.

Frank squared his broad shoulders before her in order to screen her from the curious gaze of any who might pass through the hall, and waited in silence.

Presently the girl raised her head once more, looked at him with tear-stained eyes and said with quivering lips:

"I am in trouble, sir. Yours are the first friendly words I have heard to-day. My father," here a crimson flush dyed her fair brow—"my father has left me; where he has gone I do not know. I am absolutely alone among strangers, and our bill here is unpaid."

For one instant Frank looked at her doubtfully; then with a sudden rush of self-shame and chivalry, his hand went into his breast-pocket and drew therefrom a big leather pocket-book.

The girl made a little indignant gesture, and looked at him with wide-opened, haughty eyes.

"Sir! I scarcely expected an insult!"

Whereupon Frank began a hurried and indignant repudiation of her insinuation. He insult a woman! He who had the dearest mother and the sweetest little sister in the world, away off there in the Eastern States, praying for him!

"P'raps I aint so dainty in my choice of words as I might be, lady. I'm a rough fellow at best; but I'm dreadful soft-hearted where a woman is concerned. If you choose to look on me as a friend and a straight man; one that never goes back on his word, you shan't be disappointed. Now, then, how can I serve you?"

The big pocket-book had disappeared, and the girl's face softened at his rough gallantry. She extended one little hand frankly.

"Forgive me, sir; I know that you are all that you seem. I cannot accept any pecuniary aid from you or any one. The landlord has offered me a situation as table girl. I shall accept it, and in that way can pay our indebtedness. Thanks for your kindness. I shall not forget it."

With a flitting smile she slipped past him and went swiftly up the dark stairway, while the driver proceeded to the bar-room, where the men were talking, laughing, smoking and drinking.

Here Hollister listened to a detailed account of the disappearance of Colonel Pressy, interspersed with various comments concerning him and his daughter Cora.

Pressy was stigmatized as a cheat, a villian and a sponge—anything and everything, they called him, but an honest man. There were some expressions of sympathy for the girl, but it was easy to see that she was not liked. Miss Pressy had held herself too far aloof from every one in the house to win the approval of this free-and-easy western community.

One loutish looking fellow, leaning against the bar-rail, remarked, with a sneering grin:

"That gal's a mighty stuck-up little critter—reckon she won't put on any more airs with me!" and he sent a stream of tobacco juice in a very skillful manner straight into the mouth of a spittoon which occupied the center of the room.

Hollister, who had been a silent listener until now, crossed leisurely to this extraordinary marksman, and, striking him a blow upon the shoulder, said, evenly and distinctly:

"Look here, Jerry, you don't want to talk any more like that about Miss Pressy."

"Goin' to marry her, Frank?"

"I expect to," replied Frank, coolly, as he turned to select a cigar from the case.

There were no more insinuations against Cora Pressy in his hearing. The daughter of an unknown adventurer, no matter how thorough a lady she might seem, and the sweetheart of the jolly, keen-eyed, strong-armed stage-driver, were two different persons, and when the lonely girl entered upon her new duties the next day, she was surprised at the kindness and consideration of all about her.

Frank did not try to weaken the impression which his words had made. He knew that it would be her surest protection; and he felt an intense desire to protect and to help her—she was so delicate and sorrowful, so absolutely alone, now that her unnatural parent had left her.

Two or three uneventful days went by, Cora filling her new situation with satisfactory promptness. Every night, on the arrival of Hollister's stage, she was left to wait upon him in the dining room.

She felt an instinctive confidence in this big, bluff, sun-burned fellow. There was a bond of sympathy growing between them which she had no desire to break.

One day, twenty miles down his route, Frank heard a bit of news which worked him into a fever of impatience. Never had the whip curled so sharply over the flanks of his sturdy horses; never had he made better time than on that day, when it seemed to him but a snail's pace.

At last, however, the stage drew up before the inn whose roof sheltered the girl who, in a few short days, had grown inexpressibly dear to the driver.

He held a hurried consultation with the hostler, which resulted in the latter agreeing to drive the stage on to its destination for a certain sum of money.

Then Frank went into the long dining-room, and seating himself at one of the small tables in a secluded corner, he waited for Cora Pressy.

He flushed to the roots of his crispy curling brown hair as he smiled at her. She noticed it, and wondered silently, thinking, meanwhile, that he was not half a bad looking fellow, with his broad brow, honest eyes and firm lips.

"Miss Cora," he said, rather awkardly, "I would like to have you ride with me this evening, if you will. I have something of importance to tell you," he added, hurriedly, growing redder than ever with embarrassment.

Cora looked at him wistfully. Was it something about her father? But she dared not put the thought into words—there were too many about. So she merely bowed her head in acceptance of his invitation, and went away.

Half an hour later she was tucked into a trim little cutter beside him, dashing along over the white moonlit road, and waiting anxiously for him to reveal the matter of importance at which he had hinted.

But Frank was curiously silent for a long while. It seemed to Cora that he would never speak. At last, with a sudden effort, he said:

"Miss Cora, you've known me only a few days, but you've seen enough of me to know that I am a blunt spoken fellow, so I hope you won't be upset by what I'm going to say. I'm not much of a fine gentleman, but I haven't any very bad habits and make a fair living, and—and—well, I want a wife, little gal, and I love you. If you'll have me, I'll do my prettiest to make you the happiest woman in the country."

Cora smiled up at him through tear-filled eyes, and this gave him courage to slip one arm over the back of the cutter and draw her closer to his side.

She murmured something about being almost a stranger to him; but Frank, grown wonderfully bold, pressed with his lips the lids over the girl's dark eyes, and queried:

"Do you love any other man?"

"No," she answered, honestly enough; "I believe you are the best man I ever knew."

Whereupon Frank kissed her again, upon the lips this time, and made a second proposition, to which at first she would not listen. But the will and the energy of her earnest-hearted wooer carried the day, and the result was a call upon a justice of the peace; and when they re-entered the inn that night the girl was Cora Pressy no longer, but Cora Hollister, and Frank's face was radiant and triumphant.

In the dingy waiting-room an excited crowd was gathered.

Frank endeavored to hurry his wife past the doorway, but her quick glance had caught a glimpse of a familiar figure.

"Father!" she cried, and stepped into the room.

Yes, there he was was, haggard and disheveled, with blood-shot eyes and unshaven face. He might have been fine-looking once. There was just the ghost of debonair about him still despite his wretchedness. An officer guarded him on either side.

"What has he done?" cried Cora, with pallid lips.

Some one in the crowd answered brutally enough:

"Killed a brother gambler twenty miles back. They're taking him through to the city."

Then the poor little bride went into a dead faint in her husband's arms, and he carried her up-stairs with his brown cheek against her white one.

All night he watched beside her while she went from one deathly swoon into another. At last in the gray morning she smiled sadly into her husband's eyes, and whispered:

"Do not be troubled. I will go away."

"Not if I can help it," answered Frank, with a grim set of his under-lip.

Then all at once he put his face down on the pillow beside her and began to cry like a two-year-old baby.

With her slender hands she stroked the big man's curly head, and talked to him in a sweet, weary way that went straight to his warm heart.

"Dear friend," she said, "I know how unselfish you are, but I cannot allow you to make such a sacrifice. You shall not share my shame."

"Look here, little woman; I knew all about this affair yesterday morning; that's why I was in such a rush to get married. I knew they would bring Colonel Pressy through here, and I knew if I did not make sure of you then, that I never should get you. My little darlin' wife," he went on, kissing her hair, and eyes, and lips; "thank God that nothing can separate us—nothing but death."

And looking into her husband's eyes Cora knew that here was her safe home and shelter for evermore.

My reader would set me down as an unsatisfactory story teller were I to omit the sequel.

Colonel Pressy committed suicide a month later in his prison cell.

Frank took his little wife away to his eastern home, where she lives a contented little matron, proud and happy in her husband's love, and the possession of a cooing, bright-faced baby.

FARMING IN DAKOTA.

"Yes, sir," resumed the Dakota man, as the crowd of agriculturists drew back from the bar and seated themselves around a little table, "yes, sir, we do things on rather a sizable scale. I've seen a man on one of our big farms start out in the spring and plow a straight furrow until fall. Then he turned round and harvested back."

"Carry his grub with him?" asked a Brooklyn farmer, who raises cabbages on the outskirts.

"No, sir. They follow him up with a steam hotel and have relays of men to change plows for him. We have some big farms up there, gentlemen. A friend of mine owned one on which he had to give a mortgage, and I pledge you my word, the mortgage was due on one end before they could get it recorded at the other. You see it was laid off in counties."

There was a murmur of astonishment, and the Dakota man continued:—

"I got a letter from a man who lives in my orchard, just before I left home, and it had been three weeks getting to the dwelling house, though it traveled day and night."

"Distances are pretty wide up there, ain't they?" inquired a New Utrecht agriculturist.

"Reasonably, reasonably," replied the Dakota man. "And the worst of it is, it breaks up families so. Two years ago I saw a whole family prostrated with grief. Women yelling, children howling and dogs barking. One of my men had his camp truck packed on seven four-mule teams and he was around bidding everybody good-by."

"Where was he going?" asked a Gravesend man.

"He was going half-way across the farm, to feed the pigs," replied the Dakota man.

"Did he ever get back to his family?"

"It isn't time for him yet," returned the Dakota gentleman. "Up there we send young married couples to milk the cows, and their children bring home the milk."

"I understand you have fine mines up that way," ventured a Jamaica turnip-planter.

"Yes, but we only use the quartz for fencing," said the Dakota man, testing the blade of his knife with his thumb, preparatory to whetting it on his boot. "It won't pay to crush it because we can make more money on wheat. I put in 8900 townships of wheat last spring."

"How many acres would that be?"

"We don't count by acres. We count by townships and counties. My yield was $68,000,000 on wheat alone, and I'm thinking of breaking up from 80 to 100 more counties next season."

"How do you get the help for such extensive operations?" asked the New Utrecht man.

"Oh, labor is cheap," replied the Dakota man. "You can get all you want for from $29 to $47 a day. In fact I never paid over $38."

"Is land cheap?"

"No, land is high. Not that it costs anything, for it don't; but under the laws of the territory you have got to take so much or none. I was in luck. Had a friend at Yankton who got a bill through the legislature allowing me to take 420,000 square miles, which is the smallest farm there, though it is—"

"Look here," said the barkeeper, as the eastern husbandmen strolled out in a bunch to consider the last statement. "Is all this thing you've been telling true?"

"Certainly," responded the western man; "at least it is a modification of what I saw in a Dakota paper that was wrapped around a pair of shoes last night. I didn't dare put it as strong as the paper did, for no one would believe it. You can slate that last round of drinks and I'll pay in the morning. I live right here on Myrtle avenue."—Brooklyn Eagle.

HOW TO SPOIL A HUSBAND.

Snarl at him.
Henpeck him.
Find fault with him.
Keep an untidy house.
Humor him half to death.
Boss him out of his boots.
Always have the last word.
Be extra cross on wash day.
Quarrel with him for trifles.
Vow vengeance on all relations.
Never have meals ready in time.
Run bills without his knowledge.
Let him sew the buttons on his shirt.
Pay no attention to household expenses.
Give as much as he can earn in a month for a new bonnet.
Tell him as plainly as posssible that you married him for a living.
Keep the parlor for company, and don't let him put his foot in it.
Raise a row if he dares to bow pleasantly to an old lady friend.
Get everything the woman next door gets whether you can afford it or not.
Provide any sort of a picked up meal for him when you don't expect strangers.
Tell him the children inherit all their mean traits of character from his side of the family.
Let it out sometimes when you are good and mad that you wish you had married some other fellow you used to go with.
Give him to understand as soon as possible after the honeymoon that kissing is good enough for spooney lovers, but for married folks it is confoundedly silly. If he takes to kissing the cook or chambermaid after that don't be too hard on him.
If he has had an extra amount of brain work, and comes home with his nervous system all on a stretch, don't try to keep the children quiet. Tell them to make all the noise they like, and their father is nothing but an old cross patch anyway.—Saturday Evening Mail.

A bright youth, undergoing examination a few days since for admission into one of the departments, found himself confronted with the question, "What is the distance from the earth to the sun?" Not having the exact number of miles with him, he wrote in reply, "I am unable to state accurately, but don't believe the sun is near enough to interfere with a proper performance of my duties, if I get this clerkship." He got it.

A famous scientist says there is often a marked personal resemblance between husband and wife after they have been married awhile. We have noticed that fact. Some time ago a gallant Philadelphia man, whose eyes were blue, married a jealous black-eyed woman, and in less than a year he had black eyes himself.

A Swedish Poem.

It matters little where I was born,
If my parents were rich or poor;
Whether they shrank at the cold world's scorn
Or walked in the pride of wealth secure.
But whether I live an honest man,
And hold my integrity firm in my clutch,
I tell you, my brother, plain as I am,
It matters much!

It matters little how long I stay
In a world of sorrow, sin and care;
Whether in youth I am called away,
Or live till my bones and pate are bare.
But whether I do the best that I can,
To soften the weight of adversity's touch
On the faded cheek of my fellow man
It matters much!

It matters little where be my grave,
On land or on the sea;
By purling brook or 'neath stormy wave,
It matters little or naught to me.
But whether the angel Death come down,
And marks my brow with his loving touch
As one that shall wear the victor crown,
It matters much!

CORN STALKS AS FUEL.

The smartest man I've met in Iowa is a farmer near Fort Dodge. His name is Bill Ruggles. He has a 400-acre farm, a splendid dairy, a coal mine under his farm, and a fine belt of hard timber within sight of his house.

When I went into Mr. Ruggles' large sitting-room I noticed a very large stove. It was the shape of a parallelopipedon—about four feet long, three feet high, and the same wide. It heated the sitting-room and hall very nicely.

"I see you burn wood, Mr. Ruggles," I remarked, as I held up my hands to warm them.

"No, sir; I cannot afford to burn wood. It's too much trouble to cut it."

"Then coal, I suppose?" I continued.

"No, sir; too much work to dig coal. I'm burning something that beats coal or wood, cheaper than either of them, though I have both coal and wood on the farm."

"Well, what can you burn cheaper than coal or wood?" I asked, desiring to solve the puzzle.

"Why, I burn corn stalks, sir. Corn stalks are the cheapest and best fuel on earth. It is ten times as easy to gather corn stalks and tie them into bundles as it is to cut down trees. Why, I can go into the cornfield with two men, and in a day bundle up corn stalks enough to warm my house all Winter."

"Let me see you put some corn stalks into the stove," I said.

Mr. Ruggles stepped to the door and brought in a bundle of corn stalks about three feet through. They were bound tightly together. The bundle weighed about forty pounds. Then lifting the top of the stove, he laid them in upon the embers, and closed up the front damper.

"How long will they burn?" I asked.

"Three hours. I don't let them burn with a flame. My stove closes air tight. I let them burn slowly without flame. I get all the heat there is in them. The stove is large, with an immense radiating surface. It doesn't have to be very hot."

"Now," said Mr. Ruggles, "five such bundles a day keep my sitting-room warm—or 600 for the Winter. I can bind up 600 bundles of corn stalks in two days alone. I couldn't chop the wood to warm this room in a week. Then in the Spring I have a load of strong ashes for my wheat field, while my neighbors have to cut up the same corn stalks in the Spring to get them away from the harrow. It makes me smile when I hear about those idiots in Minnesota, who have fifty-acre corn fields, and still go cold or buy coal. Why, I'd rather burn corn stalks than cut maple wood within sight of the house."

"How would wheat straw do?" I asked.

"Just as well, only the stove would have to be twice as large. I'd have it made of sixteenth-of-an-inch boiler iron, four feet long, and four feet high, with one little damper, which could be closed air-tight."—Chicago Tribune.

TOO POOR TO TAKE A PAPER.

An editor was sitting in his office one afternoon, when a farmer friend of his came in.

"Mr. Editor, I like your paper, but the times are so hard I can't pay for it."

"Is that so, friend Jones? I'm very sorry that you are so hard up. I will give you my paper."

"Oh no! I can't take it as a gift."

"Well, then, let me see how we can fix it. You raise chickens, I believe?"

"Yes, a few; but they don't bring anything hardly."

"Don't they? Neither does my paper cost anything hardly. Now I have a proposition to make to you. I will continue your paper, and when you go home you may select from among your lot one chicken and call her mine. Take good care of her, and bring me the proceeds, whether in eggs or chickens, and I will call it square."

"All right!" and the farmer chuckled as he went out at what he considered a clever bargain. He kept the contract strictly, and at the end of the year found that he had paid about four prices for his paper. He often tells the joke on himself, and says he has never had the cheek to say he is too poor to take a paper since.

"Ma," said a thoughtful boy, "I don't think Solomon was so rich as they say he was." "Why, my dear, what could have put that into your head?" "Why, the Bible says he slept with his fathers, and I think if he had been so rich he would have had a bed of his own."

INSTANTANEOUS PHOTOGRAPHY.

Have you heard of the instantaneous photograpic instrument? It is a great invention. The instrument is no larger than a well filled pocket book, yet it is so complete that every man can be his own photographer without any trouble. The process of taking the picture is as simple as writing. You simply hold the instrument before the object to be taken and there it is. I believe the policemen of London are armed with them, and they flash their camera on a rogue with as much ease as you would a dark lantern. No matter how swift an object is moving, it can be taken. I know of one enthusiastic man who claims that they will be the reporter's note-book of the future. For example, he is writing an article on the Brooklyn Bridge, and as he writes he uses his camera. When he goes home he develops his plates, and consequently has a correct picture of the scene before him. Indeed he never goes out of the house without this instrument in his pocket, and he keeps his friends supplied with pictures. I am a little afraid of the abuse of this invention. An unprincipled rascal seeing a pretty girl on the avenue can whip out his camera and have her face at once transferred to the plate. The instruments are quite cheap—$10 I believe it is that they cost—so here is fun for the million. How pleasant when taking a walk in the country to reproduce the landscape for one's own gratification or that of those at home! You see a lamb frisking at its mother's side, and in a moment, while its heels are kicking in the air, you have it down before you. If I was going to travel in Europe I should certainly take a pocket camera along with me. Any curious sight you can reproduce in the twinkling of an eye. I have seen pictures of moving crowds, of ships in motion, of men rowing, and horses racing, taken by this process with the most remarkable accuracy.—N. Y. Letter to Boston Evening Gazette.

To prevent diphtheria, and finally exterminate it, every man, woman and child throughout our land and the world should be brought to obey the laws of life and health. Parents should regularly feed, properly clothe and duly restrain all children before they come to the years of understanding and accountability. This alone would do much. A late prominent physician of Paris estimated that 3000 children had died in that city, during the thirty years of his practice there, from short sleeves, short pants, and other kindred imprudence in the dressing of children. And I am fully convinced that as large a portion are sacrificed, in towns at least, in this country, from the same cause—all for a wicked fashion. And from careful observation in this country and abroad, I am confident that at least as many more are carried off by improper food and irregularity in taking it; together with poisonous candies and other unwholesome and indigestible trash, that no child or other person should eat.—Sanitarian.

From scientific investigation it appears that the venom of serpents is not an exceptional and anomalous product, but merely an intensified condition of ordinary saliva, and that the saliva of human beings may constitute a virulent poison. Instances have been known in which a bite from a human being has been followed by death from poisoning, just as would have been the case with some venomous reptile. Violent agitation seems to impart this fatal quality to the saliva of men or animals, and M. Pasteur has recently "cultivated" the poison of the human saliva to such a point as to develop the tonic symptoms of the serpent-poisons in small birds. Even in its normal condition saliva is said to be akin to poison, one of its functions being to destroy the molecular life of the substance eaten.

An Episcopal clergyman, who has recently taken charge of a parish in a small town in this State, was called upon to attend a funeral a few days after he had assumed the performance of his duties. As he entered the house of mourning he was met by a member of the bereaved family, who said: "You are an Episcopalian, I believe." "Yes." "Well, sir, I don't know much about your practices, but I believe you like to undress and dress a good deal. Perhaps you would like to go up stairs and put on your shroud." The clergyman went at once.

Two maiden ladies in the next seat back fainted.—Taunton Gazette.

The reason given by the colored man for not going too near the heels of a famous roan mule was so satisfactory that we can afford to adopt it as an excuse for not doing a good many other things. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1882.

THE dead-lock in the New York Legislature was finally broken Thursday by the election of C. E. Patterson as speaker — a victory for Boss Kelly.

No more cheap traveling to the West after this week. The rates for first-class passage to Chicago are to be advanced Monday to $20 from New York and $22 from Boston.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has signed the bill placing Justice Hunt of the supreme court on the retired list, and his successor will probably be nominated in a few days. It is expected that the position will be given to some New York man.

THE new Public Statutes of Massachusetts went into effect on Wednesday, though few people know what they are, as they are not printed yet, and will not be out for some days. But we can get along very comfortably for a short time without much law.

IT is fortunate for the country, probably, that ex-Secretary Blaine did not remain in the cabinet any longer than he did. The publication of his Chili–Peru correspondence shows that his instructions to Envoy Trescott were of a very belligerant character, and it is asserted that he deliberately violated the orders of the President in giving them such a tone. Blaine claims that the President knew all about it, and is terribly worked up over the matter. He talks of making a statement to the people next week which will open their eyes and set him right.

WEDNESDAY was the last day for the introduction of new business before our Legislature, and the flood-gates were opened wide, 148 new papers being entered in the House alone. The committee will now have their hands full to wade through and digest the mass of stuff before them. It is noticeable that there are a good many petitions for increase of salaries of court and other officers, a matter in which the Legislature should move with great care. The work of the retrenchment era will soon be undone if these petitions are acted upon favorably.

THE Massachusetts Congressmen are said to be anxiously caucusing in a vain attempt to unite on a list of officers for the Boston custom house. As the President is understood to have adopted the plan of making such appointments to suit the wishes of Congressmen, when a delegation is united in its views, we suppose our Representatives can hardly resist the temptation to take a hand at the patronage business, but it looks too much like a step backward to harmonize well with the reform spirit and utterances of the Republican party in this State.

SCOVILLE filed his petition for a new trial for Guiteau last Saturday, its principal argument being that two of the jury read a newspaper in their room. One Snyder, a detective, states that he found a paper in their room with the names of three jurors written upon it, but it is claimed that these names were all written by the same hand, and but little weight is attached to his statement, he having once been arrested for forgery. The court heard the arguments for and against a new trial yesterday. Scoville has issued an appeal to the people for more money, saying the case cannot be carried further without it.

GOV. LONG gave a hearing Wednesday on a petition for the pardon of Charles P. Stickney of Fall River, who was sentenced in 1879 to five years' imprisonment for the stealing of $60,000. The petition was one of the strongest ever presented, being signed by a large number of leading men of Fall River and other parts of the State, including ex-Gov. Rice and others, who think the punishment excessive. Would the petitioners have thought the same if Stickney had been a poor man, without influential friends? We doubt it; and we are glad to see that the Governor and Council refused a pardon by a unanimous vote.

ANOTHER attempt has recently been made on the Czar's life, according to private advices from Russia, some wood for the stove in his study having been filled with dynamite enough to cause a terrible explosion had it been used. Just now the Russian officials are trying to decide upon the best plan for getting the Emperor safely to Moscow, so he can be crowned in accordance with ancient custom. One suggestion is that he go by the carriage road instead of by railway, and that the people shall be separated from the procession by trenches, barriers and lines of troops. What a fine thing 'tis to be Czar of all the Russias, to be sure!

WHEN a fire spreads so rapidly in a large business block, in broad daylight, that an alarm cannot be given in season for some of its occupants to escape, and they are left to miserably perish in the flames, there is something radically wrong in the construction of the building, and its owners ought to be held sharply responsible for the loss of life. There are probably hundreds of other business blocks in New York and other cities which are just as perfect death-traps as the one burned on Tuesday, if a fire should once get started in them. There is no excuse whatever for such reckless disregard for the safety of human beings, but owners of buildings will never heed these lessons until they are forced to by the strong hand of the law. Will the law-makers take heed to their responsibility in the matter?

Of the thirty inebriate asylums established in this country during the past twenty-five years, but four have gone out of existence. Some people look on them as having a sanitary value, while others regard them as convenient lock-ups for inconvenient relatives.

LETTER FROM SPRINGFIELD.

The New Mayor Not as Much of a Reformer as Hoped For—The Cemetery Superintendent—Herdic Coaches and the Street Railroad—The Berkshire Murderer.

Correspondence of the Journal.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 2, 1882.

Matters at the City Hall do not move without friction, exactly, since we began to write 1882. Our reform mayor does not please the newspapers, and they speak less respectfully of His Honor than might have been expected from the interest they manifested in him a week before election. They say that instead of following the sentiments of his letter accepting the nomination for chief magistrate, the elected seems to be trying to get into the footprints of his predecessors,—a thing the voters did not bargain for when they cast their ballots. One of the reforms the people thought they were voting for was a change in the police force; but the new mayor has reappointed the old board entire, except the marshal, instead of giving a new broom, as was prayed for. Then his appointment of Col. Rice for marshal is not regarded the wisest thing he could have done for himself, or the best for the appointee. The Colonel will undoubtedly fill the office with dignity, and may make an efficient officer; but he is not the most popular man in the city, and will not secure credit for well doing from the community as readily as one who has the hearts of the people. He possesses in a superlative degree the unfortunate faculty of making enemies, without drawing friends to his bosom at the same time. Some people have the remarkable gift of being greatly beloved by one class, while they may be hated by another. Col. Rice, unhappily, is not among that number. There is something in his make-up which repulses, which is undesirable for an officer who depends directly or indirectly on the suffrages of his fellows for position. The probabilities are that both mayor and marshal will be yearlings in office, and the glory of writing ex-marshal will hardly compensate, one would naturally think, for the breaking up of a partially, at least, established business.

One of the desirable things promised our citizens in the near future is a change in the superintendence of the old cemetery. The gentleman who has held the position for the past ten years or more, has so outraged the feelings of some of the lot owners by his want of refinement, that the wonder is that he has been retained so long; it is accounted for only in that he has taste, and executive ability for the work of grading and beautifying the grounds, which the managers find it difficult to secure in one with the other desirable qualities. It is reported that the place has been tendered to H. D. Foss, our efficient superintendent of streets, and that he declines, preferring his present position. Mr. Foss is an excellent man for either place; has good judgment, taste and executive ability, and, withal, is a gentleman in his intercourse with those he comes in contact with.

We are having a slight touch of the Herdic coach epidemic, which has had such a run in different parts of the State the past season. Several meetings have been held by interested parties, and the advantages of having a coach to ride in, with a liveried driver, all for five cents, have been beautifully portrayed. The other side of the question, the possibility of its being a losing investment, is not taken in account because the parties most anxious for the coaches do not propose to furnish the capital. They simply work up the enthusiasm and leave the minor matter of money to those who have it to invest. Probably the subject would never have been seriously considered but for the reports that the street railway company is making money. When an enterprise is prospering it is human nature for those who are not fortunate enough to own stock, to want to see profits cut. If railway stock had continued at fifty cents on the dollar, and the corporation had hard scratchings to get means to keep the cars running, no one would have thought the accommodations of the street cars were not ample, even if some of the passengers were compelled to stand occasionally.

The nervous people of Western Hampden were thrown into a state of wild excitement last week by the announcement that the Berkshire murderer and cannibal, Beckwith, was in the vicinity, and had stopped over night with a denizen of Westfield, who knew him at first sight, but was prevented from giving the alarm on account of the nervousness of his wife, who felt delicate about being left alone with the animal, fearing she might be devoured alive before her partner returned. The story was too fishy to affect solid nerves, but it answered for a sensation for the time. The idea that a Westfield Clay-hiller, who will tear himself from his family and all that is dear on earth to chase a fox two days and three nights in succession, whose skin is worth only a dollar and a quarter, and then allow a cannibal, for whose hide hundreds of dollars are offered, to sleep quietly by his fire and crawl out of the trap in the morning because his wife is nervous about being left alone! Tell it not in Gath. Those Westfield people beat all for a sensation. If they can't have a flood, a mad dog, or the small-pox to be scared over, they manufacture an excitement out of possibilities.

SUNNY COOK.

THOSE bronze medals for the immortal 306 who voted for Grant from first to last at the Chicago convention, have just been completed, and will soon be distributed among the Spartan band. They weigh nearly a pound apiece, and are handsomely engraved with a profile head of General Grant, a record of the 36 ballots, and an appropriate inscription commemorative of the faithfulness of the "old guard," who will doubtless feel wonderfully crank with these baubles dangling from their necks. They may serve a good purpose as chest protectors, and will doubtless prove as efficacious as the galvanic batteries in warding off disease, if worn next to the skin, as they should be.

George Dwight, an old and highly esteemed citizen of Springfield, died on Monday morning of paralysis, at the age of 69 years and 8 months. He was president of the cemetery association and superintendent of the gas company. He had served in the State Senate and House, was superintendent of the Armory in 1861, and for many years was chief engineer of the fire department. For a long series of years he was an alderman, and also a trustee of the old Institution for Savings.

An attempt was made last Saturday to wreck another train on the New York Central Railroad, near the scene of the Spuyten Duyvil disaster, by driving a piece of wood between the rails. It is thought to have been done by dissatisfied laborers who have not been paid for helping clear away the wreck on the night of the late accident.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Thursday was Candlemas day.

Septuagesima Sunday to-morrow.

Valentines are putting in an appearance.

February is giving us snow without stint.

The days have now lengthened over an hour.

Snow shovels and back-aches have been boon companions this week.

Rev. Mr. Manson will preach in the Methodist church at Four Corners Sunday morning.

Rev. J. H. Amies of New London will occupy the pulpit at St. Paul's church to-morrow.

The sale of Mrs. E. Warner's live stock and other personal property comes off next Thursday forenoon.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Boston & Albany Railroad will be held in Boston next Wednesday.

Charles L. Merriam, of the Andover Theological Seminary, will preach at the Congregational church to-morrow.

The trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank hold an adjourned meeting at their banking room this afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

Cyrus Sturtevant's horse of Ware had a little run on Main street the other morning, using up a sleigh in the operation, but doing no other damage.

The junior class of Wesleyan Academy, at Wilbraham, have a sleigh-ride to Monson to-day, followed by a supper at the Weeks House in this place.

Baggage Master Gamwell of the Boston & Albany road is confined to his house again by sickness, and Frank Kendall is handling the baggage in the meantime.

Col. H. R. Stoughton and Dr. Wm. Holbrook represented Merrick Post, G. A. R., of this place, in the Grand Encampment at Boston Tuesday evening and Wednesday.

H. A. Northrop has filled his ice houses at Three Rivers and at Maloney's pond, and has his house in this place partly full. The ice is about 12 inches thick, and of good quality.

St. Paul's parish will hold a meeting in the chapel Monday evening, at 7.30 o'clock. A call to the pastorate is the principal business, and this will doubtless insure a full attendance.

Telephones have been placed in Hitchcock & Co's. drug store and the offices of Doctors Warren and Downing this week. All our physician now have these talking instruments in their offices.

The directors of the agricultural society will meet next Monday to arrange the programme for their annual exhibition next fall, and also to decide upon the place for the next farmers' institute.

Last Sunday was a breezy day, and the high wind whisked the snow around in a manner that made it pretty uncomfortable for churchgoers and others who had to be out. The wind and snow also held high carnival yesterday.

The masquerade and fancy dress ball at Wales Hall next Wednesday evening, with music by Gardner & Field's orchestra, is expected to be an occasion of considerable interest, and will doubtless be liberally patronized.

Those musical old bells which jingle round the neck of Dr. Stowe's horse were the property of the doctor's great grandfather, the original number being all there as perfect and complete as they were in the days of "auld lang syne".

Between 30 and 40 persons attended the Masonic social Tuesday evening, in spite of the storm. The Misses Atwood of Three Rivers furnished some good music, which, with the collation and the sociability, made up an evening of enjoyment to all present.

Our citizens are manifesting a commendable increase of public spirit in the matter of clearing their walks of snow. As a rule the sidewalks through the village were cleaned off in good shape early Wednesday morning, though the ones who had it to do found it was snow fool of a job.

E. W. Phinney has sold his meat market in Commercial Block to D. H. Brown of Sidney, Neb., formerly of Brimfield, and a brother of G. F. Brown, whose familiar face will continue to be seen at the old stand. Mr. Phinney will probably accept a good position offered him by Brigham & Co., the Boston milk dealers.

Section Master McQuaid of the Boston & Albany Railroad has about three miles of sidings to keep clear of snow, and Tuesday's storm gave him about all he could do this week, even with fifteen men swinging their shovels. Where there are four or five tracks side by side, as at the depot, the snow has to be handled over two or three times, and then carted off out of the way.

The directors of the Palmer National Bank at their meeting on Wednesday elected W. C. Dewey cashier, in place of S. W. French, who resigns to attend to his duties as treasurer of the new wire company. Mr. Dewey has been treasurer of the savings bank for the past year, and has been connected with one or the other bank for several years, so that he comes to his new office well fitted for the faithful and acceptable discharge of its duties.

A business meeting of the Congregational church was called for Tuesday evening, to take action in regard to calling a pastor, but the storm prevented a full attendance, and the matter was postponed to next Tuesday evening, when it is expected that some decisive action will be taken. The probabilities point strongly to a vote in favor of Rev. A. F. Newton of Townsend, for whom a large majority of the church have already expressed a preference.

Anchor of Hope Lodge of Good Templars installed the following officers Thursday evening: W. C. T., Alonzo B. Hoyt; W. V. T., Lottie Moore; W. S., Cora Leach; W. F. S., Nettie Moore; W. T., Lizzie Root; W. M., Henry Trumble; W. C., Mrs. E. G. Wood; W. I. G., Mrs. A. E. Palmer; W. O. G., Charles Dame; W. R. H. S., Anna Wood; W. L. H. S., Mary Leach; W. D. M., Cyrus Patrell; W. A. S., S. Leach; P. W. C. T., A. B. Root.

The skating rink drew out a large number to try the rollers Monday evening, and the skates were all out at an early hour. To-day there will be three sessions at Wales Hall, one from 9 to 11.30 a. m. and the usual afternoon and evening sessions. The hall will also be open Monday afternoon and evening, and at the evening session the band will again be present and furnish music. On Tuesday and Wednesday next Mr. Hitchcock will give the Amherst people a chance to try their skill on the rollers.

The New London Northern Railroad had four locomotives give out on Thursday. The "Williams" broke a piston as it came in from the north in the morning; the "Thames" broke the coupling between the engine and tender; the "Dow" pulled off the draw-bar casting, and the "Canada," on its way to take the place of the "Dow," broke down at South Windham. On the whole, it seemed to be rather an unfortunate day for the engines on that road, though no great damage was done.

The annual meeting of the New London Northern Railroad company was held at New London Wednesday, when these directors were chosen: William W. Billings, William H. Barns, Benjamin Stark, Augustus Brandegee, Robert Coit and J. N. Harris, all of New London, Thomas Ramsdell of Windham, Ct., C. H. Osgood of Norwich, Ct., William Allen Butler, New York, William H. Hill of Boston, James A. Rumrill of Springfield. Robert Coit was chosen president and treasurer, and J. A. Southard secretary, both of New London.

It is believed that Oscar Beckwith, the murderer of Simon Vandercook at Austerlitz, N. Y., spent the night with Erastus Keith, near Newell's Pond, a week ago last Sunday. Mr. Keith used to know Beckwith, but the latter was disguised when at his house with a long white beard. The next day he was seen on the road to Ware without the whiskers, and Mr. Keith is confident that his guest was Beckwith. On Tuesday morning of this week a man who had spent the night in the tramp room in this place was very anxious to get out as soon as it was light, and started off toward the east. It was thought that he resembled Beckwith, and Deputy Sheriff Palmer started after him, overtaking him at Cooley's Crossing and bringing him back to the lock-up. He then telegraphed for a description of the murderer, but when it was received it was found not to tally with the prisoner, who was younger and taller than the description, and he was accordingly set at liberty.

January went out with the heaviest snow storm we have had in many years. The flakes began falling soon after noon, Tuesday, and through the afternoon and night the storm raged with uncommon vigor, the snow filling the air with an almost solid mass of flakes, which accumulated with astonishing rapidity. On Wednesday morning the sun rose bright and clear upon a mantle of snow from 20 to 24 inches deep, and for a few hours there was a lively "rassle" with snow shovels and plows in opening paths for pedestrians. The morning modoc from the west came in almost on time, and the Ware train came down also about on the dot. But the trains on the New London Northern road were about an hour and a half late, and the morning accommodation from the east did not come in until 9.45, being preceded by two engines with a snow plow and a scraper. The tracks were cleared during the forenoon, and the afternoon trains were mostly on time. The snow drifted but little, or there would have been some serious blockades.

LUDLOW.

C. L. Buell entertained the school teachers and their friends at his house last evening.

The ladies of the Methodist society gave a supper Wednesday afternoon, and another one in the evening, following a literary entertainment by the young people.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. W. A. McKillop, of the Newton Theological Seminary, will preach at the Baptist church in this place to-morrow.

Michael Leary, formerly an overseer in the Palmer Mills in this place, who removed to Lawrence last year, is about to take charge of the carding department in a cotton mill near Philadelphia.

WALES.

Last Saturday's high wind demolished J. M. Lyon's chimney.

The Meadow district school house was burned to the ground last Friday morning.

The Wales Dramatic Club will present the drama, "The Reward of Crime; or, The Love of Gold," in the vestry of the Methodist church next Wednesday evening.

MONSON.

The Amherst College Glee Club had a full house at Central Hall Wednesday evening.

Ex-President Chadbourne, of Williams College, is expected to spend the Sabbath in Monson, and to preach in the Congregational church.

No particular news this week, except the news that the gentleman from Wales beat everybody here at the trotting a few days ago. That is news to everybody hereabouts.

The weavers and others in Ellis's mill have presented a valuable chain and charm and Appleten's Cyclopedia to their boss weaver, Thomas Mack, who goes to Philadelphia to take a good position.

WILBRAHAM.

The Quadrangle met with Miss Leila Taylor Thursday afternoon.

The poles for the new telephone line between Dr. Fosket's house and the depot are being set.

The next meeting of the Farmers' Club will be with F. E. Clark, of Maple street, Feb. 13th.

There will be an exhibition of Prof. Raymond's gymnastic class at the gymnasium next Saturday evening.

A stereopticon exhibition was given by Prof. Turner of Boston, at Fisk Hall, Thursday evening, under the auspices of the Womens' Missionary society of the Methodist church.

WARREN.

The Methodist church is being plastered.

Mr. Price is building a house on Southbridge street.

Coasting has been forbidden on all the principal streets.

Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Hitchcock and Miss Milliman start for Nassua Feb. 13th.

A new bank is talked of, and a petition has been sent to the Legislature for the same.

Capt. Tyler and wife have gone to Washington to spend the remainder of the winter with their daughter.

The severe snow storm so blockaded the roads that some of the village schools did not keep on Wednesday, and the milk car was delayed till quite late.

A large delegation from the musical society went to North Brookfield Wednesday evening to hear "Esther," which was rendered by the musical association, and is to be given to the public by our society some time the last of this month.

HAMPDEN.

Snow fell 18 inches deep on a level Wednesday morning, and the roads are hardly passable yet.

Irving Newell, in loading railroad ties, got his fingers on one hand considerably smashed the other day.

Rev. Mr. Root supplied Rev. Mr. Dutton's pulpit in East Longmeadow, last Sabbath forenoon, Mr. Dutton being sick with pneumonia.

A. O. Thresher returned from Northern Vermont last Saturday with six choppers (Frenchmen), who have pitched their tent and commenced work.

Quiet reigns in Hampden in regard to the post office, the department having decided not to remove our long-tried and worthy postmaster, and all seem to acquiesce in the conclusions of the department.

There is much religious interest in Glendale (Wilbraham), quite a number of conversions, and many more are inquiring, and the meetings are often and fully attended. It is said the Lord is bringing "good out of evil."

We had no mail in Hampden Wednesday. Mr. Davis, our mail carrier, forced his way through the drifts to East Longmeadow, only to find that the postmaster at Springfield had not sent the mail bag. Another guaranty of attention to business is needed.

C. I. Burleigh & Co. are talking of building an ice house on the banks of the Scantic, as they contemplate running an ice cream saloon the coming season, and will need more ice than formerly. They have a new clerk, A. Varney, from Deering, N. H.

Moses H. Warren, our former townsman, who has been living in New Haven for two years, has been spending a week or more here. He was with the choir in the Congregational church last Sabbath, and it seemed like old times. He is contemplating moving back here next Spring.

Frank Bartlett drove his team upon Thresher's pond for ice, and put on a heavy load, but the last cake "broke the camel's back," and horses, sled and all went under water. He had a lively time in rescuing the horses, but did so, by taking a cold bath himself. He is satisfied with sprinkling, and thinks immersion unnecessary. His ice house is now full.

The Eastern Hampden Medical Society held its annual meeting Thursday with Dr. Geo. T. Ballard in this place, and these officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, Dr. Geo. T. Ballard; vice president, Dr. W. H. Stowe of Palmer; secretary and treasurer, Dr. J. W. Hannum of Ludlow; censors, Doctors Downing, Foster and Smith. Dr. Ballard read an interesting essay on "Peritoneal Surgery in Relation to Gunshot Wounds," in which he advocated a new treatment which is proving very successful. The next meeting will be held with Dr. Fuller of Monson.

BRIMFIELD.

Dr. G. F. Chamberlain has had a telephone put in his office, for the accommodation of himself and his patrons.

The young people of the First Congregational society gave a dramatic entertainment last evening, presenting an adaptation of Dickens's carol, Scrooge and His Ghostly Visitors.

The First church have voted to invite Rev. Samuel V. McDuffee of Ludlow Center to become their pastor, and at a parish meeting Wednesday it was voted to unite with the church in the invitation.

Fordyce Phelps, a Brimfield man who was a member of the 34th regiment in the late war, and from whom nothing had been heard for years, has recently died in Arizona, leaving $20,000 to his brother and sister, formerly of this place.

Marcus Hitchcock and his wife Patty will celebrate their golden wedding on the 16th inst. It is related that in the summer or fall of 1714 a number of Springfield's citizens, who intended to settle Brimfield, drove their cattle out here, cut hay to keep them through the winter, built a fort for protection near where the poor-house now stands, and then all went back to Springfield to spend the winter except Lieut. Nathaniel Hitchcock and his family, who remained to care for the cattle, with no neighbors nearer than Springfield and Brookfield. Marcus Hitchcock is of the fifth generation in descent from Lieut. Hitchcock, and he has a great grandchild, making eight generations who have lived in town. Mrs. Hitchcock is of the fifth generation in descent from Samuel Bliss, one of the original proprietors of the town, who also came from Springfield.

Last week a "Guiteau Club" of thirty members was formed here, with the following officers: President, G. N. Tucker; clerk, Geo. S. Clark; executive committee, Everett Tyler, Albert Doane, M. H. Davis; priest, G. B. Walker; musicians, E. Bent, J. B. Lyman; chief marshal, F. A. Charles; coroner, A. F. Walsh; high sheriff, Ernest Bent; deputy sheriffs, Ernest Tyler, G. D. Gleason; doctors, M. H. Davis, Geo. S. Clark. At the last meeting it was decided to hang and burn Guiteau in effigy Tuesday evening, and notwithstanding the severe storm, every one of the thirty members was present at the roll call of the drum at seven o'clock. The executive committee had prepared an excellent effigy of Guiteau, weighing about 140 pounds, and after marching around the common, up the center to the gallows, the club formed a circle, the prisoner was led to the gallows, and the sheriff read the death warrant. The priest then made a short and sweet prayer, the black cap was drawn over Guiteau's head, and at 8.04 the drop fell. At 8.23 he was pronounced dead. The coroner then held a post mortem examination, and it was found he was not crazy. He was then allowed to imbibe a gallon of kerosene, and a match was placed at his heels to see if he was surely dead, and he at once illuminated the whole town. About nine he was cut down and his ashes placed in a soap box and buried in the Brimfield pond. So perished the assassin in this place.

WARE AND VICINITY.

A hook and ladder company is needed in town.

The Good Templars of Ware visited their brethren and sisters at Greenwich on Wednesday evening. Sturvetant's 'bus on runners took the party.

We understand $1900 insurance was paid for the loss on Water street last week. It might have been saved in five minutes by a good hook and ladder company.

A woman by the name of Connelly was complained of the other day for selling liquor and brought before Justice Richards. She pleaded guilty, and paid the fine of $50 and costs.

Daniel C. Marsh had a narrow escape a few days since. While in a well putting in a pump a bucket of stone was dropped from the top by the chain breaking, but by some good fortune it passed him without injury.

The proceeds of the Land League fair, over $800 in amount, have been sent to help pay the $250,000 pledged by the Chicago national convention of the American National Land League, to be sent for the relief of Ireland.

Our boot manufacturer reports a prosperous year in the one just closed, and although running light the shop has not been closed for the usual winter vacation, but is now putting on the ordinary complement of hands, about 20 to 25 in number, hoping by commencing thus early to fill all orders received for youths' and children's boots, of which this shop makes a specialty.

The Good Templar officers to be installed next Monday evening are: W. C. T., H. L. Fairbank; W. V. T., Mrs. J. L. Fairbank; W. S., Wm. A. Newton; W. T., L. N. Fairbank; W. F. S., Mrs. H. P. Billings; W. M., Arthur Dexter; W. C., Mrs. H. Ramsdell; W. I. G., Miss Eddie Killmer; W. O. G., Chas. Clements; W. A. S., Emma Campbell; W. D. M., Aggie Kennedy; W. R. H. S., Nellie Spear; W. L. H. S., Ella Prickett; P. W. C. T., H. P. Billings; janitor, Chas. Smith; organist, Mary Kennedy.

Runaways have been in order this week, no less than four having occurred. The one doing the most damage was the frightening of J. W. Robinson's horse by the cars between here and Gilbertville. The load of furniture was somewhat damaged, and Mr. Mulvaney, the driver, was thrown out and considerably bruised but not seriously injured. On Monday evening the longest runaway occurred. The horse and sleigh, with gentlemen and lady, started from the depot, ran to near Mr. Beaman's on the West Warren road, and then turned short about, throwing out the occupants of the sleigh, tearing the gent's clothing so that new was needed. The horse and sleigh then came back through South street to Main, and when in front of Lawton's Block took the sidewalk and kept it to the west end of the street, turning down West street and from there to Water street, where the horse was captured, after a two-miles' run through some of our principal streets, and no one hurt.

WHAT ENGLAND THINKS OF US.

In view of the license given to Guiteau during his trial, and the bursts of laughter with which his ghastly jokes were often received by the spectators, we are not surprised that the London Times declares that the American people are satisfied with the conduct of the trial, which was a broad farce, enacted in a court, without one sympton of popular disapprobation. It doubts whether the nation, which has turned the sufferings of Garfield into food for a sensation, the crime into a jest and the trial into a prolonged farce has the right to hang Guiteau. It insists that the English sympathies expressed at the time of the President's death are now proved to have been unnecessary, and it affirms that all Americans, educated people excepted, sat by Garfield's bedside, not as sympathizing friends, but as dabblers in the mysteries of physiology and speculators upon the chances of life for a man threatened with pyæmia. The whole article is a series of studied insults.

The Saturday Review follows suit, remarking that Guiteau is a typical American, urging that not merely the peculiar offensiveness of the criminal, but the peculiarity of the crime itself, is directly traceable to democracy. The scandals of the trial it says are directly connected with democratic politics and society. It points to the shooting of the President as the result of a hundred years of unbridled democracy, and concludes that the democratic helot may at least be thanked for an instructive lesson.

The malaria case against the Smith Paper Co. of Lee, who are sued for causing malaria in that region by the erection of their Pleasant Valley dam, situated partly in Lee and partly in Lenox, was opened in Pittsfield on Monday, but has been continued to the July term of court, for want of time at this session. The continuance is very expensive to both sides, as experts from all parts of the country were present to testify.

Rev. Dr. Henry W. Bellows, pastor of All Souls' Unitarian church, New York, died on Monday, aged 67. Dr. Bellows was pastor of the same society for nearly 43 years, and was one of the most prominent men in the denomination. The success of the sanitary commission during the war was largely due to the untiring efforts of Dr. Bellows, who was at its head. He wrote and spoke much, and was beloved by a host of friends.

Amherst College is making rapid strides in power and influence, and its wealthy friends are making it the recipients of their bounty. In the early spring an "annex" to the library will be built, with a capacity for holding 230,000 volumes. The interest of $50,000 annually will enable them to add yearly some three thousand volumes.

The high gale of Friday week did a good deal of damage in Western Massachusetts and other parts of New England. Church steeples were wrenched, tobacco barns, trees and chimneys blown down, and much other damage done, while many persons were blown about and bruised.

The suspension of the Union Generale, the great Catholic bank at Paris, with deposits of some 132,000,000 francs, has caused quite a panic in European financial circles, and the Bank of England has advanced its discount rates to 6 per cent.

Back among the Franklin county hills the farmers are cutting down their timber by the wholesale. In the formerly well-wooded regions of Charlemont, Coleraine, Heath, Rowe and Hawley a large area of land has been cleared, leaving acres of stumps and sprouts.

Gov. Cornell of New York has offered a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of the murderer of Simon A. Vandercook, whose remains were found dismembered and partially burned in the cabin of Oscar Beckwith last month, near Alford.

About a thousand million dollars of our national debt has been paid since the war ended. France has now nearly treble our debt, and Great Britain more than double. Even Spain has a bigger debt than that which remains of ours.

A young man recently married in North Carolina came home from a hunting expedition the other day, and asked his bride to pull off his boots. She declined, and he picked up his gun and shot himself dead.

The recent rains in Tennessee have uncovered a bonanza in the form of a bed of coal on the side of Cumberland Mountain.

The railway tunnel under the St. Lawrence at Montreal has been contracted for, at a cost of $3,500,000, to be finished in 1885.

A young man at Bridgeport, Ct., was killed a few days since by a drug clerk's mistake in giving him oxalic acid for German salts.

The loss to England by the last three years' bad harvests is estimated at from a hundred to a hundred and fifty million dollars a year.

Hon. Jacob Sleeper has been superintendent of the Bromfield street Methodist Sunday school in Boston for fifty-two consecutive years.

A Canadian judge has decided that the lease of a pew in church gives the lessee a right to sleep and snore therein during divine service.

A hackman and his horses were killed at a railroad crossing in Boston last Saturday, and the six occupants of the carriage were badly injured.

Books, Magazines, &c.

The need of a book of quotations, comprehensive, complete and reliable, while so arranged that any sentence required may readily and easily be found, has long been felt by literary persons, and until recently has been imperfectly met. But the publishing house of I. K. Funk & Co., of New York has lately issued the Cyclopedia of Practical Quotations, by J. K. Hoyt and Anna L. Ward, which must meet the full approval of all who have any need of such a work. It is a volume of 900 pages, 649 being devoted to English quotations, quotations from the classical Latin authors, proverbs and mottoes from the Latin, French, German, Italian, Portuguese and Spanish; Latin law terms and phrases, ecclesiastical terms and definitions of the Christian and Jewish churches, concluding with a list of the authors quoted, their nationality, date of birth and of death if not living. The remainder of the volume is occupied by the index, which is one of the most thorough, complete and yet simple ever given to the public. The subjects or topics are first classified, and then follows a concordance so full that if but a word or two of a quotation is recalled it can be found at once. It is the result of years of labor and care, and must meet a cordial welcome from all writers, as well as many others. It is printed on good paper and attractively bound.

A new aspirant for favor comes before the public in the form of a monthly publication "devoted to the advancement and diffusion of Electrical Science." It treats of electricity in all its forms and uses, as well as many other topics con ted with it directly or indirectly. The Februar number contains a letter published in the Figaro of Paris, and written by Hiram J. Maxim, inventor of the Maxim electric lamp, in which he claims to have invented an automatic fire extinguisher which, if used, will entirely prevent a recurrence of calamities such as the burning of the Nice, Brooklyn and Vienna theatres. Those interested in electricity will find the magazine attractive. It is called The Electrician, and is published by Williams & Co., 115 Nassau street, New York. Terms, per year, including postage, 50 cents; single copies, 5 cents.

Among the comparatively new publications for young people is the Children's Museum, which closes its first year with the February number. It seems a well-conducted magazine, made up of original article, good selections, a mother's column, puzzle department, etc., the whole freely illustrated. Those obtaining it for their children need fear no undesirable influence. Address, F. B. Goddard & Co., 6 Bond street, New York. Price $1.00 a year.

Five hundred thousand dollars is considered a low estimate of the damage caused by the recent floods in Tennessee. The village of Johnsonville, on the Tennessee river, has been virtually destroyed by the high water, and houses and mills suffered in every direction.

Conductor Hanaford and Brakeman Melius, of the train wrecked at Spuyten Duyvil recently, have been indicted by the grand jury for manslaughter in the fourth degree. The superintendent and managers of the road are also censured by the jury.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has awarded prizes amounting to $2215 to supervisors and foremen of the various divisions between Philadelphia and Pittsburg, as incentives to diligence in keeping its road-bed in good condition.

The average temperature for January was 26°. The average precipitation of rain and snow for January was greater, with the exception of '78, than for any January in the past ten years, rain or snow falling on twenty-two days.

FIRES.—There was a terrible fire in New York Tuesday forenoon. Flames were discovered about 10 o'clock in the building at the corner of Park Row and Beekman street, and almost in an instant the fire had spread to every part of the structure. The occupants of the numerous offices started to flee as soon as the alarm was given, but so rapid was the spread of the flames that many of them could not escape by the stairways and had to run to the windows. Some leaped in frantic terror from the upper windows, and others were rescued by ladders, while a few were overcome by the stifling smoke and sank back into the sea of fire. One negro woman jumped from a fourth story window and was crushed to a shapeless mass. The number known to have perished in the flames or been killed by jumping is six; 12 were injured, some of them badly, and 10 are missing. The Scientific American and several other papers had offices in the building. The total pecuniary loss is about $1,000,000.——There was a $100,000 fire at Lockport, N. Y., Tuesday night; one fireman was killed and several injured.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northeast from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of handsome chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with A Wife's Blast Against Tobacco.

He sits in a corner from morning to night—
'Tis smoke, chew, smoke!
He rises at dawn his pipe to light,
Goes puffing and chewing with all his might,
'Till the hour of sleep. 'Tis his delight
To smoke, chew, smoke!

The quid goes in when the pipe goes out—
'Tis chew, chew, chew!
Now a cloud of smoke goes up from his throat,
Then his mouth sends a constant stream afloat;
'Tis chew, chew, chew!

He sits all day in a smoke or fog—
'Tis puff, puff, puff!
He growls at his wife, the cat and the dog,
He covers with filth the carpet and rug,
And his only answer when I give him a jog,
Is puff, puff, puff!

The house all o'er, from end to end,
Is smoke, smoke, smoke!
In whatever room my way I wend,
If I take his clothes to patch and mend,
Ungrateful perfumes will ever ascend,
Of smoke, smoke, smoke!

At home or abroad, afar or near,
'Tis smoke, chew, smoke!
His mouth is stuffed from ear to ear,
Or puffing the stump of a pipe so dear;
And his days will end, I verily fear,
In smoke, smoke, smoke!

THE DIPHTHERIA PLANT.

Some light was thrown on the origin of diphtheria in a recent lecture before the Academy of Natural Sciences in Philadelphia by Prof. Horatio C. Wood, who gave the result of his researches in connection with Dr. Henry F. Formad, involving the important discovery that this fatal and insidious disease is propagated by a microscopic plant or fungus, existing in all human beings, especially in the mouth and throat, but lacking the power of reproduction until given increased vitality by those disordered conditions of the mucous membrane which attend sore throat when caused by cold. The investigation was made at the instance of the national board of health, and extended, not only to the phenomena attending the ordinary epidemic diphtheria existing in Philadelphia, but to the more violent form occurring from time to time in different places. Dr. Formad visited an infected town on Lake Michigan, where one-third of all the children in a marshy district died of the epidemic, and brought back with him specimens of the diphtheritic virus, several of the false membranes which are invariably formed in the throats of afflicted persons, and portions of their viscera. In all blood, said the professor, there are two kinds of corpuscles, the red or color-giving and the white. By careful study and experiments, both in human beings and the lower animals, it was found that this infinitesimal plant fastens upon the white corpuscles and multiplies its cells, altering their character until, with the interior destroyed, they burst, and the plants, set loose in an irregular mass, separate and go off individually, to continue the destructive work on other corpuscles. Thus increased, they poison the blood, choke the vessels, and are found in myriad numbers in the spleen and bone marrow, where the blood is manufactured. Prof. Wood's investigations show that the false membrane, supposed to invariably indicate the presence of diphtheria, may be caused by ammonia, Spanish fly or any other irritating influence in the throat, so that its presence is not infallible as indicating the existence of this disease. But in any case the false membrane is built up by this parasitical plant, which grows and multiplies upon its inflamed surroundings, whatever may be its cause. It is when the plants grow strong enough to extend to the blood, either poisoning it themselves or carrying the poison with them, that diphtheria sets in. This little plant is exactly the same as found upon a coated tongue. When Prof. Wood put plants such as are found upon a healthy tongue in sterilized matter they failed to grow. On the contrary, plants from the throat or blood of a person affected with diphtheria multiplied rapidly. The practical result of the investigation pointed out was the possibility that diphtheria, if existing theories hold good, may be prevented by artificial vaccination. In the case of splenic fever caught from animals, which has been proved to originate in a somewhat similar plant, Pasteur has found that the plant, when exposed a sufficient time to the air, by the action of oxygen loses its poisonous character, and then when introduced into the system makes the animal sick, but is no longer fatal. The deduction is that this diphtheritic plant, scientifically known as "micrococ," may in time be cultivated so that when innoculated with it, the system will be no longer subject to the disease in its fatal form. Concluding the lecture, Prof. Wood was applauded when he said that these discoveries could never have been made but for the aid of vivisection, against which there is a foolish prejudice in the minds of many.

The New York Hour calls attention to the fact that greater care is taken of young fish than of children in that city. For while more than half the children die before the age of five, the fish commissioners say that only about two per cent of the spawn of shad or salmon are destroyed. Perhaps this is owing to the fact that so many New Yorkers like shad or salmon much better than they like children.—Detroit Free Press.

Keep a list of your friends; and let God be first in the list, however long it may be. Keep a list of the gifts you get; and let Christ, who is the unspeakable gift, be first. Keep a list of your mercies; and let pardon and life stand at the head. Keep a list of your joys; and let the joy unspeakable and full of glory be first. Keep a list of your hopes; and let the hope of glory be foremost.

THE CUTICURA REMEDIES.

SOME FACTS REGARDING THEM—WHO MAKES THEM AND WHAT IS THOUGHT OF THEM BY THE DRUG TRADE—INTERVIEW OF A TIMES REPORTER WITH PETER VAN SCHAACK, ESQ.

To enable the Times to furnish its readers with some reliable information regarding the Cuticura remedies, which are now attracting so much public attention, a reporter called yesterday upon Mr. Peter Van Schaack, of Van Schaak, Stevenson & Co., wholesale and retail druggists, corner Lake and Dearborn streets, when the following facts were elicited:

R.—Will you oblige the readers of the Times by answering a few questions regarding the Cuticura remedies?

Mr. Van S.—Certainly; fire away.

R.—Do they sell well?

Mr. Van S.—The sale of the Cuticura, Cuticura Resolvent and Cuticura Soap have been unprecedented.

R.—What reasons do you give for so large a sale?

Mr. Van S.—I give four reasons. First, they are original and revolutionary in their composition and mode of treatment. Second, they undoubtedly possess great curative properties. Third, there are thousands upon thousands of sick and suffering who have tried and found wanting the usual remedies and modes of treatment, and who are ready to welcome a really great and successful medicine. Fourth, the price of them is within the reach of every invalid.

R.—Are your large sales of these medicines through your agents?

Mr. Van S.—No; they are legitimate mail orders. We employ no travelers on the road—are fundamentally opposed to that way of selling goods—the retailer has to stand such expenses, and such staple goods as these require no one to force them off.

R.—Do you class them as patent medicines?

Mr. Van S.—I do not. They are proprietary only so far as their names are concerned, these being held as trade-marks.

R.—Can you tell us something about this firm?

Mr. Van S.—Weeks & Potter are importers, wholesale druggists and chemists, and for twenty-five years have been the foremost house in the trade in New England.

R.—It is popularly supposed that advertising will sell most anything, regardless of merit. Is it true?

Mr. Van S.—No. A remedy falsely claiming to possess virtues of which it is in fact destitute, will surely fail. No reputable firm—and druggists are the most competent judges—would think of risking fame and fortune on any medicine unless it had, under the most trying circumstances, proved itself to possess extraordinary medicinal value. The expense attending the introduction of such remedies is enormous. A fortune must be spent before any return can be expected. If, after a wide distribution, they are found to possess the virtues claimed for them, those who have been cured will recommend them to one another, and thus make them remunerative. When a man backs his statements with his own money, you may generally rely upon them. This Weeks & Potter are doing.

R.—Have they ever before prepared medicine for popular use?

Mr. Van S.—I believe not. They are, like ourselves, agents for a great many, but we think these are the first that they prepare themselves. It is but once in a lifetime that a discovery is made of a remedy that such a firm as Weeks & Potter are willing to stake reputation and fortune on.

R.—Are the prospects flattering, or otherwise?

Mr. Van S.—Very flattering. As I said before, the remedies undoubtedly possess great merit. And besides they treat blood and skin diseases according to a new and thoroughly rational plan that must take a firm hold on the confidence of those who suffer from chronic diseases of the blood, skin and scalp.—Chicago Times.

Ebery provision ob nature may be wise, but I doan see why a body should suffer so much in cuttin' teeth. A dog doan hab no truble, neder does a coon, but natur gibs fits to de baby. "Oh, papa, that plaque is just too too," said a lovely young girl as she stood looking in a shop window on Main street. "Only $2.02!" said the old gentleman in some surprise. "I should think that was cheap." "You'd better buy it." It was a natural enough mistake, but the old gentleman bought the plaque all the same, though it did cost him $15.

The laziest boy exists in Connecticut. His mother sent him to a neighbor's house after a cup of sour milk. On being told that there was none but sweet milk to be got, he helped himself to a chair, and said: "Well, I'll wait till it sours."

It having been remarked that cigarette smoking is killing thousands of young men, the Chicago Tribune savagely says that the kind of young men who smoke cigarettes can all be spared. The fittest would still survive.

Young Tompkins, (thinking to take a rise out of Pat)—"Why, you've got that paper upside down, Paddy!" Pat—"Bedad! any fool cud rade it the other way oop!" (Calmly goes on with his reading.)

"I declare!" exclaimed Brown, "I believe I have forgotten all I ever knew." "Sorry to hear it," remarked Fogg. "However, you can take an hour some day and learn it all over again."

Conceit is to nature what paint is to beauty; it is not only needless, but impairs what it would improve.

WOMAN'S TRIUMPH.

A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION—IT IS ENDURED WITHOUT TAKING ETHER—SUBJECT, MRS. EDWARD MEYERS, OF RONDOUT, N. Y.

(From the correspondence of the Kingston. N. Y. Freeman.)

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Rondout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand, without benefit. Not until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy, proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received this terrible intelligence quietly, declined to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorite Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it. 4w-43

RENNE'S Pain-Killing MAGIC OIL.

"IT WORKS LIKE A CHARM."

CURES HEADACHE, TOOTHACHE, NEURALGIA, RHEUMATISM, LAMENESS, SKIN DISEASES, SORE THROAT, DIPHTHERIA, BURNS, SPRAINS, ETC.

Some folks seem to be proud of telling how "lame their shoulders are"—of "my crick in the back"—or, "I have got the Sciatica"—and delight in bragging that "nothing can cure me!"—but when we get such "awful folks" to use RENNE'S PAIN-KILLING MAGIC OIL, faithfully, we not only cure their lameness and charm away their pains, but we actually take all that kind of "brag out of them!" and they frankly own up, and say, "It works like a charm!"

Call for Renne's Magic Oil where you usually trade.

FOUNDED BY GORDON M. FISK.

STATEMENT Under Oath!

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D's. Psoriasis, and others Leprosy, commencing on my scalp, and, in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skillful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in the form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor, and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there could be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envolope containing this letter. In the latter part of the winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit, and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. —— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back, across my ribs, arms, hands, feet badly swollen, toe nails came off, finger nails dead and hard as bone, hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. Oh, my God! how I did suffer!

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier), Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures). I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Resolvent three times a day, after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura morning and evening. Result, returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper.

The Owl.

"One kiss," I pleaded, "just a tiny one,
For a good-night."

A deep carnation swiftly spread
Across the face so pale before,
And modest drooped the graceful head,
As the sweet lips, blushing red,
Trembled denial that the eyes forswore.

"Ah, yes"—still pleading—"see, we are alone;
'Tis Love's good-night."

The crested head raised proudly now,
And flashed the eye like diamond light;
And the white face was purest snow,
And the red lips they pouted so,
As the lady fair swept from my sight.

An owl—a philosophic one he proved to be,
Who saw the whole occurrence from his tree—
Blinked once, blinked twice, then flapped a lazy wing,
And cracked his bill and gave one claw a fling.

"Young silly!"—here he paused to scratch his head
And plume his owlship's gravity ere he said:
"To plead for what is yours—if you but make it!
To give she could not, but she'd let you take it!"

A ST. VALENTINE EXPERIMENT.

It was the eve of Saint Valentine's day. Two girls were sitting before a bright open fire in the cozy sitting room of an old-fashioned house amongst the New Hampshire hills. It was about twenty years ago, when open fires were more in vogue than now. The warm glow glinted and glimmered upon the walls and furniture and touched the forms and faces of the girls with a tender, poetic grace. "Now's our chance to have a peep into futurity," said Grace Elmore, the younger and gayer of the two. "If we walk down cellar backwards with a looking glass at the witching hour of midnight, we shall see our future—"

"I shouldn't dare to try the experiment," said Irene Beresford. "I've heard of persons seeing their coffins instead of a true lover. Poor May Gaylord tried it last year, and though she wouldn't mention what she saw, she told me before she died she could never think of that night without a shudder."

"Nonsense! how superstitious you are?" said the more practical Grace. "How can you believe such things. Now, I haven't the least idea that either lover or coffin would appear. If I should try the experiment, I should only do it for a lark."

"Call it superstition, or what you like," returned Irene, "I know that many fine, high-wrought, and yet powerful natures, are strongly controlled by such notions. You know we have high authority for the assertion that 'there are stranger things in earth and heaven than is dreamt of in our philosophy.' I do not believe in supernatural influences, subject to laws whose workings we not understand, but which are none the less real. Now, I'm just sensitive enough—cowardly, if you like—to prefer doing almost anything disagreeable to the ordeal of walking down cellar alone at that hour."

"Well, there's no need of our discussing this subject before Paul in such a gloomy manner," said Grace, hastily. "He's low-spirited enough now, aren't you, Paul?" getting up and crossing the room to the side of Paul, who was reclining upon a low lounge that sat in a recess. "I guess you weren't noticing what we were saying," she continued, as he did not speak. "Come, coz," patting him on the cheek, "cheer up, and let us have some fun on the eve of dear old Saint Valentine."

"I did hear what you were talking about," he said, quietly, "and I agree with Irene. I believe—"

"O, yes, of course you believe anything that's dismal, and hateful, and disagreeable. Come, Irene, help me wheel him around out of these shadows; he'll never move unless we do, and see if this bright firelight won't dispel these dismal ideas."

Irene lent a hand, though the occupant protested, and the lounge was placed before the cozy firelight. Then Mary, the housekeeper, brought in apples and nuts and cider, and the girls ate and drank and laughed and joked with intent to cheer up their invalid cousin, who was in a decline, some said, and others that he was only low-spirited.

Paul Wentworth was a dreamy, imaginative youth of nineteen, whose sensitive temperament had acquired a morbid tint from the misplaced kindness of an indulgent mother. Believing him too delicate for the rough-and-tumble play of ordinary boyhood, she had treated him like a hot-house plant, which had further strengthened this tendency. She had died suddenly a few weeks before the opening of our story, and the shock had thrown him into a state or hopeless despondency. His two cousins from a neighboring town were spending a few days at the farm-house, trying to cheer up his spirits, but all their efforts were in vain.

As he sat before a cozy fire in his sleeping room after the girls had retired, his unnaturally bright eyes and the vivid flush on his cheek seemed good evidences of the truth of his friends' fears, that consumption was doing its work. The subject on which the girls had been speaking in the first of the evening had a strange fascination for him, and he was resolved to try the experiment of which they had spoken. Not that he really believed that there was any truth in the matter, only he felt a strange longing which was quite consistent with such a nature as his, to experiment in something which had a suggestion of the supernatural. He had no fear of death, indeed he had a sort of morbid longing for it; so if he saw his coffin, he felt that it would not unnerve him. The thought kept him hopeful, and he sat in a low chair before the fire, glancing occasionally at the clock until the hands pointed to five minutes before twelve. His room opened on the sitting-room. He took a small looking-glass that hung on the wall and a lamp, and passed through the sitting-room to the kitchen. The house was still as death. All the inmates except himself were sleeping in the chambers. He heard the clock strike the mystical midnight hour, as he opened the cellar door, which creaked noisily. He descended the steps slowly, for walking backwards down stairs is a slightly difficult performance. He trembled so violently by this time with excitement that he could scarcely hold the light. As his feet touched the bottom, the cellar became illuminated with a weird light distinct from that shed by his lamp, and he seemed for a moment to lose his identity, as in the glass, from which he never took his charmed gaze, he beheld looking over his shoulder the fair face framed in golden curls of his cousin Irene! It is doubtful if his coffin would have startled him half so much as this unexpected apparition. He was paralyzed for a moment. Then the vision glided away as noiselessly as it came; and, without stopping to investigate, he reascended the stairs as hastily as his trembling limbs would allow, and the cellar door closed with a bang. The sound acting on his overwrought nerves caused him to drop the looking-glass, and it fell on the kitchen floor with a loud crash and was shivered to atoms. He hurried into his room, undressed and crept into bed. He lay a long time in a dazed, bewildered state, for thoughts of a lady-love had never before entered his head, and when at last he slept his dreams were of his fair-faced cousin, who had showed herself to him in such a weird, mystical manner.

Next morning when Mary entered the kitchen she was startled by the sight of the shattered looking-glass on the floor. With considerable superstition about such mishaps, she gathered up the fragments in an awed sort of way, and saw that it was the one that had hung in Paul's room! She considered it as a mysterious omen of ill to him, but checked herself about asking him about it, as she feared the effect on his nerves. She confided the matter to the girls as soon as possible in an awed whisper.

"I guess it's easily enough explained," said Grace, in a light tone. "Let's ask Paul about it. I shouldn't wonder if he did it himself."

"Oh, no; you mustn't mention it," said the excited woman. "If he did, it's all the worse for him; but I wouldn't have him questioned on the matter—it would only excite him. Poor dear! he won't be long after his mother."

Irene regarded the circumstance as singular, but said nothing, and Grace kept her secret for the time—resolved to see the end before she revealed it.

But whether or not a broken looking-glass is ever an omen of ill, it was not so in this case. The sudden shock to his nerves reacted with a beneficial effect upon his whole system. From that night his health improved rapidly. He ceased to brood morbidly over the memory of his mother. His countenance lost its absent, dreamy expression, and his actions betokened the workings of a hitherto latent energy. He never mentioned the glass, for he would rather have died than revealed what he had seen to the girls, and he was too ingenuous to tell the story with any false varnishing; but he wondered secretly why Mary had never spoken of it. He commenced to manifest a bashful reserve toward Irene, which she did not know how to interpret. He had improved so much, Grace said, through their influence, that they returned home with a promise from him of a speedy visit. When he clasped Irene's hand in the good-by, a strange thrill shot through his frame, for he felt convinced that some time in the future she was to be his wife.

"Leave the farm in charge of John and Mary and go West with me."

Paul's eyes kindled with a new animation.

"I'm sure, uncle, I'm willing to do anything you think best. I feel as if I had only just begun to live."

"Well, you'll have enough to do out there to make a man of you. Three or four years of brisk, active life will change you so your friends won't know you. Your mother was my only and dear sister"—here his voice faltered a little. "Perhaps she petted you more than was good for you; but she meant all right. I said when I started for New Hampshire: 'If Rachel's boy needs a helping hand I'll give it to him.'"

So the farm was left in care of the faithful man and woman who had been with Mrs. Wentworth ever since her husband's death, and Paul accompanied his uncle to his western home, where he was doing a thriving business. The change of scene and active employment acted like an elixir. At the end of four years the tall, slender stripling developed into a strong, broad-shouldered, full chested young man, with only the dark, handsome eyes and broad, white brow remaining to identify the Paul Wentworth of yore. All this time he had cherished the memory of Irene. They had kept up a correspondence in a cousinly fashion, but no words of love had been spoken. They exchanged pictures. Her face was the same mild, lovely one he had remembered seeing four years ago in the glass on that well-remembered night, but his was so changed, and for the better, that with a cry of delight she hastened to show it to Grace, now a wife of one year.

"Would you have thought he would have grown so strong-looking and handsome, Grace?"

"Yes, I should, as soon as he got out of leading strings. I never believed he was in a decline any more than I was."

"He's coming home to visit us," said Irene, with the least little flush on her fair cheek. "He says he has sent this picture as a forerunner."

"I shouldn't wonder if you fell in love with him when he comes," said Grace, mischievously. "You're half in love with that picture now, and I could see that he liked you before he went away. He must be intended for you, for you've given all your beaux the mitten, which I guess you must be doing to leave the coast clear for him."

* * * * *

"I have loved you, Irene, ever since you and Grace visited me at the old farm, after mother's death."

"I liked and pitied you then," said Irene, "but I never thought of love, at least I don't think I did."

"I don't know as I should, indeed I don't think I should, or have been living now only for a violent shock I received while you were there."

"What was it?" questioned Irene, eagerly.

"Do you remember a talk you and Grace had on Valentine eve about trying experiments to find out who was your true lover?"

"I think I do—about walking down cellar at dead of night with a looking-glass. We were sitting by the firelight. Yes, that evening is distinct in my memory."

"Well, you know how morbid and fanciful I was. I thought it over after you went to bed and at midnight took a lamp and glass and went down cellar. I expected to see my coffin. What do you think I saw instead?"

"What?" asked Irene, breathlessly.

"Your face looked over my shoulder in the glass. It was so unexpected that it frightened me so I had just strength enough left to get back to my room.

"Why, that was singular, Paul," said Irene, with her blue eyes fixed on his handsome face. "Of course I was in bed asleep. It seems folish to attribute such things to any other cause than our own imaginations, and yet a belief in the supernatural clings to me, though Grace is always laughing at me about it."

"Just in time to explain that mysterious supernatural affair," said the lovely Grace, walking in upon them through the folding doors of the parlor. "I've just been an unintentional listener to your thrilling account of your midnight exploit four years ago."

"Why, what do you know about it?" both asked.

"You saw your lovely cousin's face in the glass and thought it was her spirit which your influence had called away from her body," said Grace in a tone of playful banter. "Well, I'm sorry to spoil your spiritual theories, but the truth is, Irene was in the habit of walking in her sleep occasionally, and on that night she chose the cellar as the scene of her pedestrian feat."

"Why, Grace, you never told me that," said Irene in a surprised tone. "You said I was in the sitting-room, but I never dreamed—"

"I did not intend you should," interrupted Grace. "I knew it would frighten you half to death, it was such a large, cavernous, horribly suggestive old cellar, and you were always so afraid of doing something dreadful in your walking fits. I woke and missed you. I concluded you were at your usual tricks. I could not find the lamp, so supposed you had taken it to light your path. I stole down stairs softly. What was my surprise when I opened the chamber door into the kitchen to see our invalid cousin hurrying from the direction of the cellar door like one pursued. He dropped the glass in haste, which Mary found the next morning and told us about in a stage whisper. As soon as he went out of sight I opened the cellar door. You, Irene, were just ascending the steps serenely with the lamp in you hand. I did not speak, but made way for you and you passed up stairs. I followed. I supposed that Paul had seen you and been half frightened to death, but when he began to improve so fast it seemed that his fright had operated beneficially."

"Well," said Irene, "to think you never told me of this before!"

"I bided my time. Don't you ever say, Paul, that a woman cannot keep a secret. I always said that you were made for each other. When you began to correspond I knew pretty well how it would end." Then the comical aspect of the affair presented itself to the fertile fancy of Grace, and she laughed heartily. The others joined her, too happy to feel anything but amused over it.

"Then it seems, Irene, that the pleasant little fancy of mine which I have cherished so long has been rudely swept away by this terribly matter-of-fact cousin of ours," said Paul.

"Yes," said she, "and I feel sort of sorry."

"I'm glad the illusion lasted till now. It doesn't alter the fact that we were made for each other," said Paul, drawing her fondly towards him and kissing her. "That night I began to live, and you were the unconscious instrument of my salvation."

"So these were wed,
And merrily rang the bells."

"I SURROUNDED THEM."

The most amusing story associated with the war of the Revolution is that of an Irishman who "surrounded" five British soldiers and made them prisoners. The story has been dressed up in several different styles. One who has seen them all might be pardoned for thinking the patriot army prolific in smart Irishmen, each of whom could "surround" five Britishers.

The original Irishman, however, seems to have been unearthed by Dr. Draper, the author of "King's Mountain and its Heroes." He locates the incident in South Carolina, and names Samuel Clowney as the "surrounding" hero.

Sam was a bright Irishman, whose devotion to the Whig cause made him a resolute foe of the Tories. One day, while he and a negro named Paul were watching Kelso's Creek, five Tories appeared on the opposite bank.

In a moment Clowney laid his plans to capture the party. Whispering directions to Paul, Sam waited till the Tories were in the middle of the stream, and then in a tone of command shouted:

"Cock your guns, boys, and fire at the word."

The Tories, dumbfounded, halted, and Sam, appearing on the bank, rifle in hand, called out "who are you?"

"Friends to the King," answered the Tory leader, not dreaming that any armed Whigs were in the vicinity.

"Every one of ye will be instantly cut to pieces," exclaimed Sam, aiming his rifle, "if ye don't come up to this bank and lay down your arms in a jiffy."

The Tories hesitated.

"Make ready, boys, and blow them out of the water!" shouted Sam, taking aim at the foremost. The Tories, believing that a superior force was concealed in the woods, advanced, laid down their arms and surrendered.

Paul gathered up the guns, Sam gave orders to his "force" to follow in the rear and to shoot the first man who tried to escape. "Right about wheel! march!" he shouted to the Tories, and making them recross the creek, drove them to the Whig camp. There the Tories first learned that an Irishman and an unarmed negro had captured them. They were mortified, but Sam's colonel was incredulous.

"Why, Sam, how did you manage to capture the men?" he asked.

"By my faith, yer honor," he said exultingly, "I surrounded them!"

Long visits, long stories, long exhortations and long prayers, seldom profit those who have to do with them. Life is short. Moments are precious. Learn to condense, abridge, and intensify. We can endure many an ache, an ill if it is soon over, while even pleasures grow insipid and intolerable, if they are protracted beyond the limits of reason and convenience. Learn to be brief. Lop off branches; stick to the main fact in your case. If you pray, ask for what you would receive, and get through; if you speak, tell your message, and hold your tongue; boil down two words into one, and three into two. Learn to be brief.

"You may talk about your mean men," said one rustic to another the other day, "but we've got a woman over there in Alameda who takes the pie." "Kinder close is she?" "Close? Why, last month her husband died—fourth husband, mind—and I'm blamed if she did'nt take the door-plate off the front door, had his age added, and then nailed on to the coffin. Said she guessed likely she'd be wanting a new name on the door soon any way."

Said the speaker to the rural member: "The gentleman is out of order." "Out of order, am I?" indignantly replied the member; "old hoss, if you'll just come back of the building, I'll convince you that I am in as good order as any man in the state! Come on old man!"

It is said that thirty persons in a small town in Michigan were poisoned recently by eating sausages. This comes from having brass collars on dogs.—Elmira Free Press.

A Valentine.

Wind of the Summer! wherefore delay
Blowing the leaves of the roses apart?
For if something of chill can be waited away
From the snowy reserve of my fair lady's heart,
She may look in my eyes and whisper to-day,
Love! stay.

And if aught of the tumult that holds me in sway,
Through its veiling of silence my lady can read,
She will know at her feet the heart that I lay
Has the passionate might of a measureless need;
She may look in my eyes and whisper to-day,
Love! stay.

Ah Sweet! I divine—Love would fain hide away
Its infinite rapture trembling to pain;
But one touch of your hand to my soul would convey
The truth, (were it true!) it were blissful to gain:
Your lips might be mute, but your soft eyes would say,
Love! stay.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF MINING.

"No; no hoisting works—not if I know it. You can fool away a good deal of good, hard coin on the hoisting works." "How in thunder do you run yours?" "On the assessment plan, sir. That's the latest and most approved method. When we have a good map of the lower workings we don't need any work to speak of. I keep a man in Virginia at $60 a month to superintend the location and write weekly letters, and I stay in San Francisco, in my office on Pine street, and levy the assessments every sixty days; that's as often as the law allows. I am the President, Board of Trustees, Secretary, Treasurer and everything—more especially the Treasurer. Of course I draw a salary for all the offices, and when I get through drawing salaries I turn the rest over to the agent in Virginia to pay off the hands. By not employing any hands, he saves enough to pay himself. This is what I call scientific mining, sir. You get the silver out of the pockets of the stockholders and leave the vast argentiferous and auriferous deposits in your claim for your children, who can go right ahead and develop the mine just as soon as the public quit putting up, which isn't at all likely to happen. As long as people are being born in Nevada and California my mine will run like a chronometer clock." "But," said the Utah man, "my style of mining keeps lots of men at work." "So does mine," quoth the Golden Gate chap. "Thousands of men are working night and day to pay the assessments. It keeps the country as busy as a beehive," and the speaker sauntered to the telegraph office to order assessment No. 36.—Denver News.

A gentleman in a village in New York State has a family of three or four little girls. Not long since the children were talking about a pair of twins. One of them, an elder one, turned to her father and said: "Papa, what do they call it when three babies come at once?" A little one, who was much interested in the conversation, and who had heard talk about the small-pox, at once interrupted and said with much animation, "I know, papa." "Well, what do they call it?" said the father. "An epidemic," said the little one, proudly displaying her knowledge.

It is a wise Frenchman who remarks that he who confides in a tattler and lends to a spendthrift will find his secret everywhere and his money nowhere.

A TALK WITH A PHOTOGRAPHER.

"I suppose you photograph some of the children often?"

"Oh, yes. Some mothers bring their children every few months. Why, I've watched a good many children grow up until they got to be 10 or 12 years old. Then I've lost sight of them until they've had children of their own and brought them back here. I had a curious experience the other day. A very cheerful young married couple came with a little boy. A real nice little fellow he was, too. Well, they wanted him photographed, and photograped he was without any trouble. He seemed to take it kind of seriously, and kept very quiet. When I was through the young man said: 'I don't suppose you know us.' Well, I looked at them, but I didn't remember them. Then he pulled out two photographs, one of a little boy and one of a little girl. 'That's my wife,' he said, 'and the other one is myself, and you took them.' They didn't blame me for not remembering them. Hers was taken twenty years ago and his about 25 years back. They never met till a few years before their marriage. When they wanted their boy photographed they wondered if I was still here, and when they found out I was they were greatly pleased with the thought of having the boy taken by me."

"I suppose both the rich and the poor want their children photographed?"

"Yes. I have some of the wealthiest people in New York for customers, and then, again, some who have to save up a long time before they can get the baby's picture. Once a poor woman came to me with a forlorn sick little child, and begged me to take its picture. She said she hadn't any money, but would try and pay me some time. I looked at the child and saw it wasn't long for this world. I knew that when it was gone its features would come like sunshine into that poor mother's life, and I took a picture for her. Well, sir, about two months afterward that woman came to me and paid me, with tears in her eyes. I didn't ask any questions, but just before she went she said: 'She's dead, Mister. My little girl's dead, and oh! how I do love her picture!'"—New York Sun.

THE CARE OF WATER PIPES.

A good way to protect water pipes from frost is to wrap them with old rags—woolen if they can be had. Over this casing of rags should be wrapped several thicknesses of paper, which is one of the best non-conductors, and costs almost nothing. They should be wrapped close and tight and tied every few inches so as to effectually keep out the cold air. Thus treated it will require extraordinarily cold weather to freeze them. If in consequence of a pipe being unprotected it should freeze, it is folly to waste all the hot water in the house by pouring it on the naked pipe. The proper way is to wrap a few old rags around the pipe and then pour on the hot water. The rags will hold the heat long enough to cause the ice to melt. Should a protected pipe freeze, hot water should be applied, but afterward the wet wrapping should be removed and replaced with dry. If this is not done the pipe will freeze up again quicker than before, and every time it freezes the pipe swells a little and gets thinner and thinner till finally it bursts. But a bursted pipe can be mended without much difficulty by almost any one. Shut the water off, and when all that is above the cock has run out rivet the opening down close and even with a hammer; cover it with white lead or thick shellac varnish; over this wrap a piece of thick muslin; then put on another coat of white lead or shellac and then wind strong twine closely and evenly from end to end of the patch, extending an inch or more over the break each way. Repeat this treatment four or five times, and if it is well done there will be a joint which will stand a greater strain than the original pipe.—Philadelphia Record.

After the advent of Gen. Logan's corps at Huntsville Ala., the rooms at the principal hotels were in great demand. A beautiful and accomplished actress had been staying for a while at the Huntsville hotel, and in a short time after she had been compelled to vacate her room, a well-known cavalry general was assigned to it by the landlord. The general, on examining his bed before retiring, found a snowy robe de nuit under his pillow, marked in delicate characters with the name of the fair owner. The chambermaid was called and asked by the general, as he held up the pretty garment in his hand: "Do you know Miss ——?" "Yes," answered the bewildered chambermaid. "Then carry this to her with my compliments, and say that Gen. O. —— is not in the habit of sleeping with empty night gowns."

He was a country young fellow, a little awkward and bashful, but of sterling worth of character. She was a Cincinnati belle and had sense enough to appreciate his worth despite his awkwardness and bashfulness, and was his fiancee. On a gloomy Sunday evening last winter they were standing in front of the window in the parlor of her home on East Walnut Hill, watching the snowflakes rapidly falling outside. He was not up in society small talk, and being hard up for something to say, remarked as he watched the snow falling: "This will be hard on the old man's calves and sheep." "Never mind, dear," said she, slipping her arm around him, "I will take care of one of them."—Cincinnati Commercial.

The winter is so mild at the North that the ice crop will have to be replanted. Last year the ice dealers gave as a reason for high prices that the crop had been eaten up by the grasshoppers. We are not supposed to know any better down South here.—Texas Siftings.

Teacher—"John, what are your boots made of?" Boy—"Of leather." "Where does the leather come from?" "From the hide of the ox." "What animal, therefore, supplies you with boots and gives you meat to eat?" "My father."

A clothier has excited public curiosity by having a large apple painted on his sign. When asked for an explanation, he replied, "If it hadn't been for an apple, where would the ready-made clothing stores be to-day?"

A Mormon in Utah has timed his marriage so nicely that he can now celebrate his china wedding annually during the next seventeen years, and before the last one is reached, his annual silver wedding will commence.

It is more honorable to acknowledge our faults than to boast of our merits.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1882.

THERE is a pleasant flavor of civil service reform in the information that Special Agent N. M. Curtis of the New York custom house is to be removed for making political assessments during the last campaign. Let the good work go right along.

ONE thing which Congress should do at an early date is to remove the stamp tax on bank checks. The amount which the government receives from it is small anyway, and is as nothing compared to the annoyance it causes. It is a war measure which should have been repealed long ago.

A BILL has been reported in the House at Washington providing for postal savings banks, under which deposits are to be received in sums ranging from 10 cents to $100, on which 2 per cent interest will be paid, no person being allowed to have more than $500 on deposit at one time.

JUDGE EZRA WILKINSON, of the superior court, died at his home in Dedham Monday, at the age of 79 years. Judge Wilkinson was a bachelor, and devoted himself wholly to his profession. He was one of the original members of the superior court, and was a just judge. His death adds another to the unusually large number of judicial vacancies which it has fallen to the lot of Gov. Long to fill.

THOMAS C. PLATT, who resigned his seat in the United States Senate at Conkling's bidding, recently wrote to the Grant club at Albany that he would rather be "one of the glorious 306 at Chicago, even after the storm came and the stampede raged, or one of the Spartan band who at Albany last spring and summer for many weeks faced the fury of a crazy press and people, than be a senator." This is well, and both sides would seem to be suited, for "a crazy press and people" certainly feel happier with Platt in the private walks of life rather than attempting to fill a responsible public office. The people show their craziness when they put such echoes as he into office.

THERE was a brutal prize fight, Tuesday, at Mississippi City, Miss., between John L. Sullivan, of Boston, and Patrick Ryan, of Troy, N. Y., in which Ryan was badly beaten by Sullivan, to the delight of an immense crowd of roughs and sports from all parts of the country. The ruffians had to go to the shore of the Gulf of Mexico to find a place where they could indulge in their pommeling without danger of arrest, which is a cause for gratitude. The public looks upon such exhibitions of brutality with much greater abhorrence than it did 20 years ago, unquestionably, but there is still an unpleasantly large number of men, young and old, who manifest a deep interest in such affairs.

ADVANTAGE was taken of a thin and inattentive House at Washington, Monday, to secure the passage of a bill providing that no bigamist or polygamist shall be eligible to a seat in Congres as a delegate from a territory. The bill is aimed, of course, at Cannon, the Mormon delegate who is after his old seat again, and its passage seemed to be regarded as a good joke, a burst of laughter following, when it was found that the Democratic opponents of the measure had been outwitted. To people outside of Congress it looks like no laughing matter. The principle of the bill is good, and every member of Congress, without regard to party, ought to be in favor of it.

JUDGE COX overruled the motion for a new trial of Guiteau last Saturday, and sentenced him to be hanged June 30. Guiteau was as insolent and abusive as ever, and told the Judge, "God will punish you," while he charged Scoville with convicting him by his "jackass theories and consummate nonsense." He still professes to be hopeful, and says the court in banc will reverse the decision. Now that the trial is ended and the assassin convicted, it is a genuine relief to have the assurance that he will be treated as a condemned felon, being closely guarded, and allowed to see no one but his relatives. The country has already had too much of his blasphemous egotism, and will rejoice to know that his mouth is finally shut.

JUSTICE moves slowly in the halls of Congress. Both houses have just passed a bill which has been before Congress for several years, providing for the payment of $85 which was unjustly taken from a New Hampshire man for duties on a pair of steers which he bought in Canada in 1870, and on which he had already paid the duties. The steers have cost the country about $1000. Still a worse case of delay is shown by the favorable report of the House foreign affairs committee, the other day, of a bill for the relief of the owners of the brig Armstrong, destroyed by the British fleet in the war of 1812. The owners of the vessel themselves are not likely to be benefitted much by any action Congress may now take, though their heirs may be.

THE Legislature on Tuesday elected M. D. Spaulding, of Boston, J. N. Dunham, of Pittsfield and J. H. Chadwick, of Hyde Park, State directors of the Boston & Albany Railroad for the ensuing year. The Senate has engrossed a bill to incorporate the Warren ...gs Bank at Warren. A bill has been ... in the House providing that the ... Council may order a new copy ... when those sent are incor... The estimate of county ...ear shows that the ...ty are $77,000, ...ire $65,000, ...embers of ... of an ...een ... cases were ... city.

THE railroad war is supposed to be at an end, but Boston is still enjoying the $5 rate to Chicago over the Central Vermont and Grand Trunk lines, in consequence of the still-existing difficulty between this line and the Boston & Albany, in regard to Montreal rates. Under the new arrangement the Grand Trunk line was allowed to sell Chicago tickets at $2 less than the price by the Boston & Albany road. The Boston & Albany claim the same discount for themselves on Montreal tickets, but the Grand Trunk folks hold that if this is allowed, then for the longer distance to Chicago they should be permitted to discount $5 from the Boston & Albany rate. How long the roads will stand out no one knows, but there is a feeling that the revised rates will not be maintained by any of the roads for any great length of time.

The snow storm last Saturday and Sunday extended over New England, the Middle States, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and along some parts of the coast it was the heaviest snow storm for many years, causing many minor disasters among the shipping. At Boston some nine inches fell, and, added to the heavy fall the first of last week, it made many of the narrow streets absolutely impassable. At Brattleboro, Vt., 22 inches of snow fell, making three feet on a level in that vicinity. Railroad trains were blockaded quite generally Saturday night, but by the energetic use of snow plows on Sunday the tracks were mostly cleared during the day.

The German carp, the valuable food-fish recently introduced to this country, is making its way to all parts of it with great rapidity. A man at Griffen, Ga., who started with two or three dozen of the carp three years ago, now has a million in his pond, and has sold over 5000 at $20 per hundred. They grow so rapidly one can almost see the increase in size from day to day. Seth Green asserts that with them an acre of water can be made as profitable as an acre of land, and it does not cost much to make the experiment.

They are having a remarkable mild winter out in Dakota, that home of blizzards and the coldest of cold weather. The thermometer was up to 71 one day last week at Bismark, and there has been but one inch of snow in the Missouri valley this winter, and but a few days of cold weather. It is the mildest season ever known. Farmers are jubilant and some have already done some plowing.

A. M. Soteldo, clerk of the Senate committee on railroads, and formerly managing editor of the Republican of Washington, was fatally shot Thursday evening in a quarrel in the office of that paper with C. M. Barton, the news editor. Barton was also shot, but not seriously injured. It is not known whether the fatal shot was fired by Barton or Soteldo's brother, as both used revolvers.

A Port Chester clergyman who recently petitioned the directors of the New York, New Haven and Hartford road to be allowed to read a portion of the Scriptures, sing and engage in prayer in the rear car of each morning train going into New York, has been denied that privilege.

A snow plow and two engines on the Boston & Albany Railroad were smashed up at the Allston car shops Monday morning, the plow being thrown from the track by encountering a big drift. The main tracks were blockaded for some three hours.

Rev. E. C. Milne, a well-known Chicago clergyman, pastor of Unity church, where Robert Collyer fomerly officiated, announced in his sermon last Sunday morning that he abandoned his belief in a personal Deity and in the immortality of man.

A curious undertaking is on the carpet at Batavia, N. Y. A monument to William Morgan, supposed to have been murdered by the Masons, is to be erected there, and over 2,000 persons have already contributed to its cost.

The familiar experiment of trying to encourage a fire with kerosene resulted in the fatal burning of Mrs. Yetter, her infant daughter and a 14-years-old girl at Turners Falls last week Friday.

Forepaugh seems to be ahead of Barnum on the baby elephant business, his agent having just purchased a pair of twin baby elephants which were born on shipboard, on the passage from Africa.

Boston's new and elegant Oriental coffee house, designed to draw men away from the tippling shops, was opened last Saturday evening, 8000 cups of coffee with cream being given away.

Only 650 miles of the Northern Pacific Railroad remain to be built, and it is expected that the entire line between St. Paul and Duluth and Puget Sound will be opened in 1884.

A miserable speculator in human life has taken out a policy of $5000 in an Ohio graveyard insurance company, on the life of the elder Mrs. Garfield, who is more than eighty years old.

A little girl at Clinton, Me., was given a clove the other day to allay the toothache, but it fell into her windpipe and could not be removed, and she died after four days of agony.

A bridge now nearly completed near Acton, Pa., 301 feet from the bottom of the ravine it crosses, is the highest in the world. It is 2051 feet long.

The Boston & Albany Railroad during the month of January received from the New York Central at Albany 12,662 freight cars and delivered to them 12,465.

Berthold Auerbach, the distinguished Ger... novelist, died on Thursday at Cannes.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Sexagesima Sunday to-morrow.

Read Mrs. L. E. Carpenter's advertisement in another column.

M. W. French has sold his pair of driving horses to Boston parties.

There will be a session of the probate court in this place next Tuesday.

Rev. Walter Barton, of Lynn, will preach at the Congregational church to-morrow.

Rev. J. S. Gledhill, of Conneautville, Pa., is to preach to-morrow at St. Paul's church.

There is to be a masquerade party at the roller skating rink in Wales Hall, probably the last of next week.

H. P. Holden has bought Mrs. Albert Burleigh's house on North Main street for about $8000, and will take possession April 1st.

The morning train from Boston was three-quarters of an hour late Wednesday, owing to the pulling out of a draw-bar near Charlton.

The new wire company has bought of M. W. French the land and buildings recently purchased by him west of the village, for $4000.

There was an exhibition of spirit power at Wales Hall Tuesday evening, but the power was not equal to drawing out an audience of any size.

The Guy Family Opera House Co. appear at Wales Hall next Monday evening in an original nautical drama entitled "U. S. M. S. Osprey."

J. M. Converse has bought a wood lot of 150 acres in Greenwich, and will next month move his Thorndike street saw mill to his new purchase.

Conductor Downer, of the New London Northern road, is again doing legislative work at Hartford, and Charles Bentley is running his train in the meantime.

The JOURNAL office is now connected with the telephone exchange, and is prepared to receive news items or orders for advertising and job work by telephone.

Mail Agent Whitcomb, of the Ware River Railroad, has been confined to his house for a few days past by sickness, and his work is being done by J. F. Karcher.

The rain Thursday afternoon gave promise of a terribly slushy time, but the weather took a turn the other way during the night, and gave indications of a freeze yesterday.

The agricultural society will build over about half of their old fence on the back side of the park the coming season, and they advertise for proposals in another column.

The store on Central street recently occupied by Cross's picture framing business is being refitted, and will be opened about the 1st of March, by J. T. Danforth, as a first-class restaurant.

The engine "Benj. Stark," Wm. Ham engineer, has gone into the shop for a general overhauling, after having run for ten years, rarely missing its regular trip between here and Brattleboro.

The parish meeting of the Universalist society was without result Monday evening, action on the question of calling a pastor being postponed to an adjourned meeting next Wednesday evening.

Lawyer Strong talks of building a new residence before long on his land opposite the park, setting it back some distance from the street where it will command a fine view of the valley to the south.

About the usual number of Boston & Albany stockholders availed themselves of the privilege of a free ride to Boston Wednesday, on the occasion of the annual meeting, and the ladies had a fine day for their shopping.

Next Tuesday St. Valentine will hold sway, and Uncle Sam's mail bags will be loaded with missives of all sorts, tender and tough, sweet and sour, serious and comic, loving and hateful. The stores are full of them, and "you pays your money and takes your choice."

The Congregational church voted at their meeting Tuesday evening to extend a call to Rev. A. F. Newton, of Townsend, to become their pastor, the vote standing 42 to 24. J. B. Shaw, H. R. Stoughton and O. P. Allen were appointed a committee to confer with the parish on the subject.

A wedding party from North Wilbraham, filling three or four sleighs, bravely drove to this place last Sunday afternoon, hiring W. M. Green to go before and prepare the way with his horses, sled and equipment of shovels. That party did not intend to be fooled out of an expected sleigh-ride by a mere snow storm.

Landlord Weeks had a large sleigh-ride party to entertain from Monson last Saturday night, and one from Ware Wednesday night. Another party from Ware were coming down Thursday afternoon, but the rain caused them to postpone their trip until yesterday. Still another party from Monson are expected before the week is over.

The masquerade and fancy dress ball at Wales Hall Wednesday evening was the most successful affair of the kind ever held here. The floor was filled with dancers, and some 50 couples were arrayed in costumes of various descriptions, many of them being ... usually elegant and handsome, while the gallery was full to overflowing of those who went to see.

The directors of the agricultural society decided at their meeting on Monday to have the next farmers' institute at the Weeks House on the 21st inst. In the forenoon the subject for discussion will be, "How can we best increase the winter feed of our stock; how to make the most of what we now have?" In the afternoon "The growing and feeding of forage crops" will be discussed.

Marshall Olds of Mendota, Ill., a former resident of Three Rivers and South Belchertown, was burned out of house and home last week Tuesday morning. The hired girl attempted to start the fire with kerosene when she arose in the morning, and in doing so was badly burned herself, while the flames set fire to the house and destroyed it, spreading so rapidly that Mr. and Mrs. Olds had barely time to escape with what little clothing they could put on, nothing being saved from the house.

The local telephone exchange, which was started last May with 38 subscribers, has grown until it now numbers 72, while additions are constantly being made to the list. Of this number Palmer has 33, Monson 26, Brimfield 5, Wales 5, Ware 2, and Three Rivers 1. The business of the exchange has already grown to such proportions that it has been decided to have a night service, and E. W. Plumley, of the Springfield exchange, formerly in the office here, is expected to return next week to this office, where he will be ready to answer calls during the night.

The trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank at their meeting last Saturday appointed S. S. Taft, C. B. Fisk and Col. Gardiner Tufts a committee to receive and consider applications for the treasurership of the bank, made vacant by the resignation of W. C. Dewey, who has accepted the cashiership of the national bank. The trustees meet again at 2 p. m. to-day, and it is probable that they will fill the vacancy by the appointment of Mr. L. E. Moore, teller of the Ilion National Bank, at Ilion, N. Y., to the position. Mr. Moore has had a number of years' experience in the banking business, and his qualifications for the position are attested by the highest of testimonials.

At the monthly session of the probate court in Springfield, Tuesday, administration was granted on the estates of Sarah F. Carter, of Palmer, H. M. Coney administrator; Caroline Bennett, of Brimfield, David A. James administrator; Edwin Booth, of Ludlow, Henry S. Jones administrator; Ralph S. Chapin, of Hampden, William R. Sessions administrator; Marcus Tupper, of Monson, James B. Tupper administrator. The will of John Ward, of New Britain, Ct., formerly of Palmer, was approved, Edwin B. Lyon executor. Inventories were filed on the estates of Marcus Tupper, of Monson, $1460; Alvin Hastings, of Palmer, personal, $348, real, $6,200. Accounts were filed on estates of Orestes O. Ruggles, of Palmer, and Horatio Lyon, of Monson.

Another big snow storm, which began last Saturday afternoon and continued into Sunday forenoon, added a foot or more of snow to the large quantity already on the ground, while the wind drifted it pretty badly and made traveling decidedly difficult, and on some roads next to impossible. In the village snow shovels and horse plows were put to work at an early hour, and the walks were in very passable shape by church time. The audiences were pretty small, however, many people doubtless finding it necessary to wield their snow shovels nearly all the forenoon. One milkman brought his supply of lacteal fluid into the village with a pair of oxen, while all were pretty late in getting around. Snow plows were run through on all the railroads to keep the tracks clear, but the morning owl and modoc trains for Boston were from three to four hours late.

It has been thought that the New York & New England Railroad might at some time in the near future extend a branch to this place, over the route mapped out several years ago for the proposed Southridge and Palmer railroad, and then continue its line to the northern part of the town to connect with the Massachusetts Central. The New England managers desire to make this connection, but it seems they do not propose to come this way to do it, as in presenting their wishes to the railroad committee at Boston this week they ask for authority to extend their Southbridge branch through Sturbridge, Brookfield, North Brookfield, Oakham and New Braintree, connecting with the Central in the last-named town. However, even if the New England folks do not care to build a line from Southbridge to Palmer, it will doubtless be undertaken by somebody else before so very many years.

BONDVILLE.

The young people of the Bondville Methodist church will give an entertainment at the vestry next Thursday evening, to consist of charades, music by local talent, and the farce, "Humors of the Strike." The renowned Mrs. Jarley will also be present, with her "wax works," and the entertainment will close with a "C. C. C." supper, witeout extra charge.

THORNDIKE.

There were no services at the Methodist church last Sunday.

The exhibition of spiritualism did not take place at Murdock's Hall as advertised last Saturday night.

Rev. F. M. Sprague, of Indian Orchard, is expected to preach at the Congregational church next Sunday, by exchange.

There was a large social gathering at James O. Hamilton's last Wednesday evening, composed of friends and neighbors from both sides of the river. There was another one of equal size and interest at Frank Smith's Thursday afternoon and evening. This portion of the town is second to no other in point of social life.

WARREN.

The Hibernians have a dance at the town hall to-night.

The Universalists are soliciting funds for the repairing of their church.

A large sleigh-ride party from Hardwick came to town the other evening.

The railroad receipts at this station last month were $4262, of which $3536 were for freight.

The railroad gates on Southbridge street have gone into winter quarters, being frozen up so they cannot be used.

T. B. Wentworth of Cambridgeport has the contract for furnishing the pews in the Methodist church. They will be made of ash, with black walnut trimmings.

BRIMFIELD.

The snow storm on Sunday was a damper for the church-going people, the attendance at the town hall being reported at 9; at the church 28.

On Monday a sleigh-ride of 37 couples from Monson visited the Brimfield House, and after supper danced to music furnished by Webster Brothers and Mr. Feathers of Wales, Willie Thompson, prompter. On Thursday some 75 couples came from Warren, accompanied by the Warren Band, to furnish music for the occasion. Yesterday another sleigh-ride of anywhere from 50 to 100 couples was expected from Monson; and still there is room.

We shall publish next week a letter written in 1854 by Mrs. Tabitha Brown, widow of Rev. Clark Brown, who preached in Brimfield in the beginning of the present century, in which she gives a thrilling account of the hardships she endured when, at the age of 66 years, she made a perilous journey to Oregon. Mrs. Brown was a daughter of Dr. Joseph Moffatt of this town, and our citizens will find the letter a deeply interesting record of her experiences. Extra copies of the JOURNAL containing the letter can be procured at the post office.

MONSON.

The small barn owned by the town near the cemetery lot was burned Wednesday noon.

There is quite a revival interest in both the Congregational and the Methodist churches.

Sleigh-rides are quite the go now-a-days, and Brimfield seems to be the point mostly visited.

Rev. E. H. Byington will deliver the address at the dedication of the new library building.

At the auction sale of J. C. Harris on Thursday, stock brought good prices, one cow selling for $73.

The farmers and neighbors have been public spirited, and helped each other breaking roads this week.

There are about 90 students at the academy this term. There will be a graduating class of five in June.

An electric watchman's record has been put into Mr. Reynolds's office, connecting with his two mills and straw shop.

The children of J. C. Maguire presented him with an easy-chair and other mementoes on Thursday evening of last week, it being his 45th birthday.

A large party of Methodists made a surprise visit to their chorister, E. O. Knowlton, the other evening, and gave him substantial proof of their estimation and appreciation of his services.

While out driving the other day in the west part of the town, C. R. Dudley and another young man came upon a mink and a large rabbit in a deadly combat, and succeeded in catching the rabbit.

WALES.

Our roads were badly drifted during the recent heavy snow storm, but the large amount of travel has given us very good roads.

Constable Farrington has gone into the stock business, having recently bought a fine specimen of Jersey grade. He indignantly repudiates the idea of its being a goat when joked by his friends.

The ice men are happy that the snow storm held off until they got their ice houses filled. W. J. Thompson is putting in 200 tons, W. E. White 150 tons, and many smaller houses are filled with ice 10 inches thick.

When small parties from adjoining towns take a sleigh-ride in future for pleasure, they will be apt to find out whether the whole's worth the trouble before they dodge around the snow drifts, and not be looking across the fields to see larks before shoveling out.

The dramatic entertainment in the M. E. church vestry Wednesday evening was largely patronized, the seats and every available part of standing room being taken. The drama was presented in a manner to reflect credit on the club of amateurs, and was highly appreciated.

"You dare not jump into that snow bank," said a little boy to his father the other day, as he beheld him standing on the veranda some 15 feet from the ground. "I dare," was the reply, and off he came, but found the snow so light as to allow him to plank his feet square on the frozen ground, making him think how nice it would be to put a shingle on that boy where it would do the most good.

WILBRAHAM.

The ladies of the Glendale church are preparing for a festival shortly.

Edwin B. Brewer was quite severely hurt the other day by a fall on a slippery sidewalk.

The public schools will close next Friday, a week earlier than usual, the school money being used up.

A festival, with a number of new features, is being arranged for by the ladies of the Congregational society.

There is to be a gymnastic exhibition this evening at Fisk Hall under the direction of Prof. Raymond, with music by the academy glee club.

The selectmen have been petitioned to put an article in the warrant for the annual town meeting to see if the town will vote to give women the right of suffrage.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was held last Saturday with Mrs. Dr. Steele. The society has a membership of 35, and has raised $127 during the past year. A Bible reader has been supported by the society for several years at Yokohama, Japan. Mrs. Orrin Daggett, Mrs. J. E. Fuller and Miss J. E. Bosworth were made life members of the society.

The academy has had ten principals since its organization, their terms of service being as follows: Rev. Wilbur Fisk six years, Rev. William Bangs one year, Rev. John Foster two years, Rev. David Patten seven years, Rev. Charles Adams four years, Rev. Robert Allen four years, Rev. Miner Raymond sixteen years, Rev. Edward Cooke ten years, Rev. Nathaniel Fellows five years. Dr. Steele, the present incumbent, has nearly finished his third year. There have been 21 different preceptresses and about 50 different instructors. There are now 12 instructors and over 200 students.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. W. A. McKillop, of Newton, will preach again at the Baptist church to-morrow.

Robert Hayes, a little son of James Hayes, was quite severely injured by being run into by two boys while coasting the other day.

Owing to the deep snow the congregations were quite small last Sunday morning, only 13 persons being present at the Baptist church and 40 at the Union.

Rev. W. L. Noyes of Ashland, N. H., preached at the Union church again last Sunday. A number of members of the church have expressed a desire that Mr. Noyes be invited to become pastor of the church, and a meeting will be held next Tuesday evening to consider the matter.

The Y. M. C. A. reading room is supplying a want long felt in this village. It is filled each evening with the young men of the village, who seem to appreciate it. The leading New York and Boston dailies, Springfield Republican and Union, the Palmer JOURNAL and a large number of other weeklies, both secular and religious, Harpers' and Frank Leslie's illustrated papers and the leading magazines, with a number of mechanical journals, may be found on file in the room. The use of the room is free to all who will come and read.

The breaking of the crown gear on one of the water wheels in the Palmer Mill, Monday afternoon, made it necessary to shut down for repairs. The mill did not start up again until Wednesday morning. While men were at work repairing the damage Tuesday morning, some Babbitt metal, that was being used on the "yoke," coming in contact with some water or snow, as is supposed, exploded and flew into the faces of the men, and it is found that Ezra Forte will lose one of his eyes. The eye was filled with the hot metal, and when the metal was removed by Dr. Ruggles it was found to be about as thick as heavy wrapping paper, and just the shape of the eyeball. Two other men had their eyes injured, but not as badly.

Last Saturday evening the house of Mrs. L. K. Adams was found to be on fire, between 7 and 8 o'clock. The girl had been to a chamber closet for a book, and while there some clothing took fire from the lamp. The fire burned after she had left until it reached a belt holding some cartridges, when one of them exploded, giving the alarm to the family. The flames were extinguished in a few minutes, but not until two new suits of clothes, an overcoat, valise, some books and a few other articles were burned. The chamber and hall were somewhat damaged by smoke and water, and a carpet spoiled, the total damage being about $100. But for the explosion of the cartridge, the fire would have destroyed the house, without doubt.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The pawnbrokers gave a dance at Fireman's Hall Monday evening.

Cone & Kelley's local amateur minstrels are booked for Music Hall the 20th.

The town assessors at their recent session abated nearly $375 of taxes.

C. W. Eddy gave a round-table miroscopical entertainment Wednesday evening at Brimfield.

Washington Council, R. & S. M., will hold, an important meeting next Tuesday evening. Work is expected.

Mrs. Fitzpatrick, a resident of the top of Ware, has recovered from the severe scalding of a fortnight since.

The county commissioners seem to think that a grade crossing near the house of Samuel Morse will be best for all concerned.

Station Agent Knox, who for some weeks has been seriously ill with erysipelas in the head, resumed his labors on Tuesday last.

The spirits didn't come to time at the seance to be given at Music Hall Sunday evening, by C. A. Mansfield. No one is very sorry.

Samuel Morse has received $7,000 for the land sold to the Mass. Central R. R., lying between the Ware River road and the river.

A magnificent crayon portrait of William Cullen Bryant, the artist being Miss Jean Miner, now hangs on the walls of the library room.

A careless fellow drove a valuable pair of horses belonging to Bond, the ice dealer, into Snow's pond recently, and they were with difficulty rescued.

The young ladies' reading club, under the direction of Rev. Dr. Perkins, will at their next assembly discuss the "Life and Writings of Martin Luther, and Goethe's Faust."

Jerome Gates was taken while at his work on Thursday with a partial paralytic shock. He was helped to his home, and on Thursday evening was in about the same condition.

Landlord Jennison, of the Hampshire House, has leased the old Morse ice house from the Mass. Central R. R., and will lay in 800 tons of first-class ice for his own and public supply.

The Otis Hose Company at a meeting Feb. 8, elected the following officers: E. H. Bassett, foreman; Eugene Shea, first assistant; Edward Stafford, clerk; Willie Volk, treasurer; Dominique Dugan, first pipeman; Henry J. Maher, hydrant man.

The grammar school has been closed for two weeks, owing to the continued illness of Principal E. W. Vaughn. Mr. Vaughn is at the house of Henry Warner, and is doing nicely, the attack of typhoid fever having been broken up, but he is still very weak.

Robinson & Richardson have between them bought out the shoe business of John T. Fitzgerald. H. O. Robinson has leased Fitzgerald's old store for three years, and it is now being thoroughly renovated, preparatory to being reopened with a new stock of goods on the 15th.

William C. Marsh has been confined to the house for a week from the effects of a severe bite from John Connor's dog. Mr. Marsh was driving along Main street with horse and sleigh, his foot hanging over the side, when the dog, with no provocation, rushed out, fastening on his instep, biting through the boot and stocking.

Gen. John L. Swift, of Boston, will lecture at Music Hall the 22d, upon "Tadpoles, or the Coming Yankee," under the auspices of the Young Mens' Library Association. Our citizens should liberally patronize this lecture, if they duly appreciate the thoughtfulness of the association in thus providing useful and interesting literary treats. Gen. Swift last winter spoke at Gilbertville and gave universal satisfaction.

The officers-elect of Crusade Lodge, I. O. G. T., were installed on Monday evening, visitors from Palmer being present. The officers of Rescue Degree Temple were installed Wednesday evening. A jubilee will be held by the Ware lodge next Monday evening. Several new members will join. Palmer and Greenwich lodges are invited to be present, and a banquet will be served. The templars are increasing weekly in our midst, and though quiet are in their way doing a good work for the cause of morality and temperance.

Another snow-storm, rivaling those of 1847 and 1867, visited us on Saturday last. The wind howled unmercifully, and on Sunday morning all signs of former paths were obliterated. The sleigh-riders that came from Spencer the night before were snow-bound at the hotel, and when they left broke a track through Main street. A load to Gilbertville shoveled their way home the same morning. Church attendance was slim, as many men of family were trying to find access to the streets. Five ventured out at Ware town; 40 wended their way to the Methodist, while the average of the day at the East Congregational church was 100 nearly. The back roads were badly filled up and schools on Monday in some of the outlying districts were effectually closed. Freight was scarce at the depot for a few days, and all admit that we have enough, as now there is over two feet of solid snow on the level. A photograph taken of Main street this week looks like a line of fortifications in time of war.

A CARD.—The undersigned desires to express his heartfelt thanks and gratitude to his friends and neighbors for their many acts of thoughtful kindness during the fatal illness of his wife.

TIMOTHY F. FULLER.

Palmer, Feb. 8, 1882.

THE LOST JEANNETTE.—We are getting the story of the Jeannette bit by bit, and it is likely that when the whole of it is known it will be found to be one of the most terrible tales of suffering and privation which has ever come from the Arctic seas. Helplessly adrift in the ice fields for twenty-one months; compelled to work the pumps for eighteen months; leaving the ship at last in boats in a desperate endeavor to reach the shore, and soon hopelessly parted from each other—these courageous and much enduring men passed through perils which would have crushed less dauntless spirits. Some of them died wretchedly; some went mad, and some were blinded; and some after terrible sufferings, found their way to succor and communication with the world. The fate of one boat's crew is a total blank from the time of leaving the ship; the fate of the brave De Long and the men with him is a mystery rapidly deepening into a certainty of their death; and of the other boat's crew some will always be wrecks of what they were, by reason of what they have undergone. It is a pitiful story; the courage of these men and the devotion of the survivors to their comrades touch the heart with admiration; but after all, has not the discovery of two or three islands far up in the polar seas been purchased at a somewhat heavy cost?—Boston Journal.

"The men and women of America are splendid," says Oscar Wilde, "but there is a broad chasm between them and the newspapers. I think the newspapers are simply outrageous."

An explosion of gas in the Midlothian coal mines, near Coalfield, Va., last week Friday, imprisoned and killed 32 men. The disaster left 27 widows and 108 orphan children.

The Westfield cigar manufacturers sold 1,000,000 cigars last month. This is a large number for January, and exceeds the same month of 1881 by nearly 80,000.

Miss Ella Wallace, of New Concord, Ohio, drowned herself during a fit of insanity last week, and her father, mother and two sisters have become raving maniacs.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1882.

THERE is a pleasant flavor of civil service reform in the information that Special Agent N. M. Curtis of the New York custom house is to be removed for making political assessments during the last campaign. Let the good work go right along.

ONE thing which Congress should do at an early date is to remove the stamp tax on bank checks. The amount which the government receives from it is small anyway, and is as nothing compared to the annoyance it causes. It is a war measure which should have been repealed long ago.

A BILL has been reported in the House at Washington providing for postal savings banks, under which deposits are to be received in sums ranging from 10 cents to $100, on which 2 per cent interest will be paid, no person being allowed to have more than $500 on deposit at one time.

JUDGE EZRA WILKINSON, of the superior court, died at his home in Dedham Monday, at the age of 79 years. Judge Wilkinson was a bachelor, and devoted himself wholly to his profession. He was one of the original members of the superior court, and was a just judge. His death adds another to the unusually large number of judicial vacancies which it has fallen to the lot of Gov. Long to fill.

THOMAS C. PLATT, who resigned his seat in the United States Senate at Conkling's bidding, recently wrote to the Grant club at Albany that he would rather be "one of the glorious 306 at Chicago, even after the storm came and the stampede raged, or one of the Spartan band who at Albany last spring and summer for many weeks faced the fury of a crazy press and people, than be a senator." This is well, and both sides would seem to be suited, for "a crazy press and people" certainly feel happier with Platt in the private walks of life rather than attempting to fill a responsible public office. The people show their craziness when they put such echoes as he into office.

THERE was a brutal prize fight, Tuesday, at Mississippi City, Miss., between John L. Sullivan, of Boston, and Patrick Ryan, of Troy, N. Y., in which Ryan was badly beaten by Sullivan, to the delight of an immense crowd of roughs and sports from all parts of the country. The ruffians had to go to the shore of the Gulf of Mexico to find a place where they could indulge in their pommeling without danger of arrest, which is a cause for gratitude. The public looks upon such exhibitions of brutality with much greater abhorrence than it did 20 years ago, unquestionably, but there is still an unpleasantly large number of men, young and old, who manifest a deep interest in such affairs.

ADVANTAGE was taken of a thin and inattentive House at Washington, Monday, to secure the passage of a bill providing that no bigamist or polygamist shall be eligible to a seat in Congres as a delegate from a territory. The bill is aimed, of course, at Cannon, the Mormon delegate who is after his old seat again, and its passage seemed to be regarded as a good joke, a burst of laughter following, when it was found that the Democratic opponents of the measure had been outwitted. To people outside of Congress it looks like no laughing matter. The principle of the bill is good, and every member of Congress, without regard to party, ought to be in favor of it.

JUDGE COX overruled the motion for a new trial of Guiteau last Saturday, and sentenced him to be hanged June 30. Guiteau was as insolent and abusive as ever, and told the Judge, "God will punish you," while he charged Scoville with convicting him by his "jackass theories and consummate nonsense." He still professes to be hopeful, and says the court in banc will reverse the decision. Now that the trial is ended and the assassin convicted, it is a genuine relief to have the assurance that he will be treated as a condemned felon, being closely guarded, and allowed to see no one but his relatives. The country has already had too much of his blasphemous egotism, and will rejoice to know that his mouth is finally shut.

JUSTICE moves slowly in the halls of Congress. Both houses have just passed a bill which has been before Congress for several years, providing for the payment of $85 which was unjustly taken from a New Hampshire man for duties on a pair of steers which he bought in Canada in 1870, and on which he had already paid the duties. The steers have cost the country about $1000. Still a worse case of delay is shown by the favorable report of the House foreign affairs committee, the other day, of a bill for the relief of the owners of the brig Armstrong, destroyed by the British fleet in the war of 1812. The owners of the vessel themselves are not likely to be benefitted much by any action Congress may now take, though their heirs may be.

THE Legislature on Tuesday elected M. D. Spaulding, of Boston, J. N. Dunham, of Pittsfield and J. H. Chadwick, of Hyde Park, State directors of the Boston & Albany Railroad for the ensuing year. The Senate has engrossed a bill to incorporate the Warren Savings Bank at Warren. A bill has been reported in the House providing that the Governor and Council may order a new copy of election returns when those sent are incorrect in any way. The estimate of county taxes for the ensuing year shows that the figures for Hampden county are $77,000, Hampshire $38,000, Berkshire $65,000, Franklin $28,000. Some of the members of the Legislature are apparently hopeful of an early adjournment, and a committee has been appointed to consider the subject, but there is no likelihood of its accomplishing anything.

THE railroad war is supposed to be at an end, but Boston is still enjoying the $5 rate to Chicago over the Central Vermont and Grand Trunk lines, in consequence of the still-existing difficulty between this line and the Boston & Albany, in regard to Montreal rates. Under the new arrangement the Grand Trunk line was allowed to sell Chicago tickets at $2 less than the price by the Boston & Albany road. The Boston & Albany claim the same discount for themselves on Montreal tickets, but the Grand Trunk folks hold that if this is allowed, then for the longer distance to Chicago they should be permitted to discount $5 from the Boston & Albany rate. How long the roads will stand out no one knows, but there is a feeling that the revised rates will not be maintained by any of the roads for any great length of time.

The snow storm last Saturday and Sunday extended over New England, the Middle States, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and along some parts of the coast it was the heaviest snow storm for many years, causing many minor disasters among the shipping. At Boston some nine inches fell, and, added to the heavy fall the first of last week, it made many of the narrow streets absolutely impassable. At Brattleboro, Vt., 22 inches of snow fell, making three feet on a level in that vicinity. Railroad trains were blockaded quite generally Saturday night, but by the energetic use of snow plows on Sunday the tracks were mostly cleared during the day.

The German carp, the valuable food-fish recently introduced to this country, is making its way to all parts of it with great rapidity. A man at Griffen, Ga., who started with two or three dozen of the carp three years ago, now has a million in his pond, and has sold over 5000 at $20 per hundred. They grow so rapidly one can almost see the increase in size from day to day. Seth Green asserts that with them an acre of water can be made as profitable as an acre of land, and it does not cost much to make the experiment.

They are having a remarkable mild winter out in Dakota, that home of blizzards and the coldest of cold weather. The thermometer was up to 71 one day last week at Bismark, and there has been but one inch of snow in the Missouri valley this winter, and but a few days of cold weather. It is the mildest season ever known. Farmers are jubilant and some have already done some plowing.

A. M. Soteldo, clerk of the Senate committee on railroads, and formerly managing editor of the Republican of Washington, was fatally shot Thursday evening in a quarrel in the office of that paper with C. M. Barton, the news editor. Barton was also shot, but not seriously injured. It is not known whether the fatal shot was fired by Barton or Soteldo's brother, as both used revolvers.

A Port Chester clergyman who recently petitioned the directors of the New York, New Haven and Hartford road to be allowed to read a portion of the Scriptures, sing and engage in prayer in the rear car of each morning train going into New York, has been denied that privilege.

A snow plow and two engines on the Boston & Albany Railroad were smashed up at the Allston car shops Monday morning, the plow being thrown from the track by encountering a big drift. The main tracks were blockaded for some three hours.

Rev. E. C. Milne, a well-known Chicago clergyman, pastor of Unity church, where Robert Collyer fomerly officiated, announced in his sermon last Sunday morning that he abandoned his belief in a personal Deity and in the immortality of man.

A curious undertaking is on the carpet at Batavia, N. Y. A monument to William Morgan, supposed to have been murdered by the Masons, is to be erected there, and over 2,000 persons have already contributed to its cost.

The familiar experiment of trying to encourage a fire with kerosene resulted in the fatal burning of Mrs. Yetter, her infant daughter and a 14-years-old girl at Turners Falls last week Friday.

Forepaugh seems to be ahead of Barnum on the baby elephant business, his agent having just purchased a pair of twin baby elephants which were born on shipboard, on the passage from Africa.

Boston's new and elegant Oriental coffee house, designed to draw men away from the tippling shops, was opened last Saturday evening, 8000 cups of coffee with cream being given away.

Only 650 miles of the Northern Pacific Railroad remain to be built, and it is expected that the entire line between St. Paul and Duluth and Puget Sound will be opened in 1884.

A miserable speculator in human life has taken out a policy of $5000 in an Ohio graveyard insurance company, on the life of the elder Mrs. Garfield, who is more than eighty years old.

A little girl at Clinton, Me., was given a clove the other day to allay the toothache, but it fell into her windpipe and could not be removed, and she died after four days of agony.

A bridge now nearly completed near Acton, Pa., 301 feet from the bottom of the ravine it crosses, is the highest in the world. It is 2051 feet long.

The Boston & Albany Railroad during the month of January received from the New York Central at Albany 12,662 freight cars and delivered to them 12,465.

Berthold Auerbach, the distinguished German novelist, died on Thursday at Cannes.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Sexagesima Sunday to-morrow.

Read Mrs. L. E. Carpenter's advertisement in another column.

M. W. French has sold his pair of driving horses to Boston parties.

There will be a session of the probate court in this place next Tuesday.

Rev. Walter Barton, of Lynn, will preach at the Congregational church to-morrow.

Rev. J. S. Gledhill, of Conneautville, Pa., is to preach to-morrow at St. Paul's church.

There is to be a masquerade party at the roller skating rink in Wales Hall, probably the last of next week.

H. P. Holden has bought Mrs. Albert Burleigh's house on North Main street for about $8000, and will take possession April 1st.

The morning train from Boston was three-quarters of an hour late Wednesday, owing to the pulling out of a draw-bar near Charlton.

The new wire company has bought of M. W. French the land and buildings recently purchased by him west of the village, for $4000.

There was an exhibition of spirit power at Wales Hall Tuesday evening, but the power was not equal to drawing out an audience of any size.

The Guy Family Opera House Co. appear at Wales Hall next Monday evening in an original nautical drama entitled "U. S. M. S. Osprey."

J. M. Converse has bought a wood lot of 150 acres in Greenwich, and will next month move his Thorndike street saw mill to his new purchase.

Conductor Downer, of the New London Northern road, is again doing legislative work at Hartford, and Charles Bentley is running his train in the meantime.

The JOURNAL office is now connected with the telephone exchange, and is prepared to receive news items or orders for advertising and job work by telephone.

Mail Agent Whitcomb, of the Ware River Railroad, has been confined to his house for a few days past by sickness, and his work is being done by J. F. Karcher.

The rain Thursday afternoon gave promise of a terribly slushy time, but the weather took a turn the other way during the night, and gave indications of a freeze yesterday.

The agricultural society will build over about half of their old fence on the back side of the park the coming season, and they advertise for proposals in another column.

The store on Central street recently occupied by Cross's picture framing business is being refitted, and will be opened about the 1st of March, by J. T. Danforth, as a first-class restaurant.

The engine "Benj. Stark," Wm. Ham engineer, has gone into the shop for a general overhauling, after having run for ten years, rarely missing its regular trip between here and Brattleboro.

The parish meeting of the Universalist society was without result Monday evening, action on the question of calling a pastor being postponed to an adjourned meeting next Wednesday evening.

Lawyer Strong talks of building a new residence before long on his land opposite the park, setting it back some distance from the street where it will command a fine view of the valley to the south.

About the usual number of Boston & Albany stockholders availed themselves of the privilege of a free ride to Boston Wednesday, on the occasion of the annual meeting, and the ladies had a fine day for their shopping.

Next Tuesday St. Valentine will hold sway, and Uncle Sam's mail bags will be loaded with missives of all sorts, tender and tough, sweet and sour, serious and comic, loving and hateful. The stores are full of them, and "you pays your money and takes your choice."

The Congregational church voted at their meeting Tuesday evening to extend a call to Rev. A. F. Newton, of Townsend, to become their pastor, the vote standing 42 to 24. J. B. Shaw, H. R. Stoughton and O. P. Allen were appointed a committee to confer with the parish on the subject.

A wedding party from North Wilbraham, filling three or four sleighs, bravely drove to this place last Sunday afternoon, hiring W. M. Green to go before and prepare the way with his horses, sled and equipment of shovels. That party did not intend to be fooled out of an expected sleigh-ride by a mere snow storm.

Landlord Weeks had a large sleigh-ride party to entertain from Monson last Saturday night, and one from Ware Wednesday night. Another party from Ware were coming down Thursday afternoon, but the rain caused them to postpone their trip until yesterday. Still another party from Monson are expected before the week is over.

The masquerade and fancy dress ball at Wales Hall Wednesday evening was the most successful affair of the kind ever held here. The floor was filled with dancers, and some 50 couples were arrayed in costumes of various descriptions, many of them being unusually elegant and handsome, while the gallery was full to overflowing of those who went to see.

The directors of the agricultural society decided at their meeting on Monday to have the next farmers' institute at the Weeks House on the 21st inst. In the forenoon the subject for discussion will be, "How can we best increase the winter feed of our stock; how to make the most of what we now have?" In the afternoon "The growing and feeding of forage crops" will be discussed.

Marshall Olds of Mendota, Ill., a former resident of Three Rivers and South Belchertown, was burned out of house and home last week Tuesday morning. The hired girl attempted to start the fire with kerosene when she arose in the morning, and in doing so was badly burned herself, while the flames set fire to the house and destroyed it, spreading so rapidly that Mr. and Mrs. Olds had barely time to escape with what little clothing they could put on, nothing being saved from the house.

The local telephone exchange, which was started last May with 38 subscribers, has growu until it now numbers 72, while additions are constantly being made to the list. Of this number Palmer has 33, Monson 26, Brimfield 5, Wales 5, Ware 2, and Three Rivers 1. The business of the exchange has already grown to such proportions that it has been decided to have a night service, and E. W. Plumley, of the Springfield exchange, formerly in the office here, is expected to return next week to this office, where he will be ready to answer calls during the night.

The trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank at their meeting last Saturday appointed S. S. Taft, C. B. Fisk and Col. Gardiner Tufts a committee to receive and consider applications for the treasurership of the bank, made vacant by the resignation of W. C. Dewey, who has accepted the cashiership of the national bank. The trustees meet again at 2 p. m. to-day, and it is probable that they will fill the vacancy by the appointment of Mr. L. E. Moore, teller of the Ilion National Bank, at Ilion, N. Y., to the position. Mr. Moore has had a number of years' experience in the banking business, and his qualifications for the position are attested by the highest of testimonials.

At the monthly session of the probate court in Springfield, Tuesday, administration was granted on the estates of Sarah F. Carter, of Palmer, H. M. Coney administrator; Caroline Bennett, of Brimfield, David A. James administrator; Edwin Booth, of Ludlow, Henry S. Jones administrator; Ralph S. Chapin, of Hampden, William R. Sessions administrator; Marcus Tupper, of Monson, James B. Tupper administrator. The will of John Ward, of New Britain, Ct., formerly of Palmer, was approved, Edwin B. Lyon executor. Inventories were filed on the estates of Marcus Tupper, of Monson, $1460; Alvin Hastings, of Palmer, personal, $348, real, $6,200. Accounts were filed on estates of Orestes O. Ruggles, of Palmer, and Horatio Lyon, of Monson.

Another big snow storm, which began last Saturday afternoon and continued into Sunday forenoon, added a foot or more of snow to the large quantity already on the ground, while the wind drifted it pretty badly and made traveling decidedly difficult, and on some roads next to impossible. In the village snow shovels and horse plows were put to work at an early hour, and the walks were in very passable shape by church time. The audiences were pretty small, however, many people doubtless finding it necessary to wield their snow shovels nearly all the forenoon. One milkman brought his supply of lacteal fluid into the village with a pair of oxen, while all were pretty late in getting around. Snow plows were run through on all the railroads to keep the tracks clear, but the morning owl and modoc trains for Boston were from three to four hours late.

It has been thought that the New York & New England Railroad might at some time in the near future extend a branch to this place, over the route mapped out several years ago for the proposed Southridge and Palmer railroad, and then continue its line to the northern part of the town to connect with the Massachusetts Central. The New England managers desire to make this connection, but it seems they do not propose to come this way to do it, as in presenting their wishes to the railroad committee at Boston this week they ask for authority to extend their Southbridge branch through Sturbridge, Brookfield, North Brookfield, Oakham and New Braintree, connecting with the Central in the last-named town. However, even if the New England folks do not care to build a line from Southbridge to Palmer, it will doubtless be undertaken by somebody else before so very many years.

BONDVILLE.

The young people of the Bondville Methodist church will give an entertainment at the vestry next Thursday evening, to consist of charades, music by local talent, and the farce, "Humors of the Strike." The renowned Mrs. Jarley will also be present, with her "wax works," and the entertainment will close with a "C. C. C." supper, witeout extra charge.

THORNDIKE.

There were no services at the Methodist church last Sunday.

The exhibition of spiritualism did not take place at Murdock's Hall as advertised last Saturday night.

Rev. F. M. Sprague, of Indian Orchard, is expected to preach at the Congregational church next Sunday, by exchange.

There was a large social gathering at James O. Hamilton's last Wednesday evening, composed of friends and neighbors from both sides of the river. There was another one of equal size and interest at Frank Smith's Thursday afternoon and evening. This portion of the town is second to no other in point of social life.

WARREN.

The Hibernians have a dance at the town hall to-night.

The Universalists are soliciting funds for the repairing of their church.

A large sleigh-ride party from Hardwick came to town the other evening.

The railroad receipts at this station last month were $4262, of which $3536 were for freight.

The railroad gates on Southbridge street have gone into winter quarters, being frozen up so they cannot be used.

T. B. Wentworth of Cambridgeport has the contract for furnishing the pews in the Methodist church. They will be made of ash, with black walnut trimmings.

BRIMFIELD.

The snow storm on Sunday was a damper for the church-going people, the attendance at the town hall being reported at 9; at the church 28.

On Monday a sleigh-ride of 37 couples from Monson visited the Brimfield House, and after supper danced to music furnished by Webster Brothers and Mr. Feathers of Wales, Willie Thompson, prompter. On Thursday some 75 couples came from Warren, accompanied by the Warren Band, to furnish music for the occasion. Yesterday another sleigh-ride of anywhere from 50 to 100 couples was expected from Monson; and still there is room.

We shall publish next week a letter written in 1854 by Mrs. Tabitha Brown, widow of Rev. Clark Brown, who preached in Brimfield in the beginning of the present century, in which she gives a thrilling account of the hardships she endured when, at the age of 66 years, she made a perilous journey to Oregon. Mrs. Brown was a daughter of Dr. Joseph Moffatt of this town, and our citizens will find the letter a deeply interesting record of her experiences. Extra copies of the JOURNAL containing the letter can be procured at the post office.

MONSON.

The small barn owned by the town near the cemetery lot was burned Wednesday noon.

There is quite a revival interest in both the Congregational and the Methodist churches.

Sleigh-rides are quite the go now-a-days, and Brimfield seems to be the point mostly visited.

Rev. E. H. Byington will deliver the address at the dedication of the new library building.

At the auction sale of J. C. Harris on Thursday, stock brought good prices, one cow selling for $73.

The farmers and neighbors have been public spirited, and helped each other breaking roads this week.

There are about 90 students at the academy this term. There will be a graduating class of five in June.

An electric watchman's record has been put into Mr. Reynolds's office, connecting with his two mills and straw shop.

The children of J. C. Maguire presented him with an easy-chair and other mementoes on Thursday evening of last week, it being his 45th birthday.

A large party of Methodists made a surprise visit to their chorister, E. O. Knowlton, the other evening, and gave him substantial proof of their estimation and appreciation of his services.

While out driving the other day in the west part of the town, C. R. Dudley and another young man came upon a mink and a large rabbit in a deadly combat, and succeeded in catching the rabbit.

WALES.

Our roads were badly drifted during the recent heavy snow storm, but the large amount of travel has given us very good roads.

Constable Farrington has gone into the stock business, having recently bought a fine specimen of Jersey grade. He indignantly repudiates the idea of its being a goat when joked by his friends.

The ice men are happy that the snow storm held off until they got their ice houses filled. W. J. Thompson is putting in 200 tons, W. E. White 150 tons, and many smaller houses are filled with ice 10 inches thick.

When small parties from adjoining towns take a sleigh-ride in future for pleasure, they will be apt to find out whether the whole's worth the trouble before they dodge around the snow drifts, and not be looking across the fields to see larks before shoveling out.

The dramatic entertainment in the M. E. church vestry Wednesday evening was largely patronized, the seats and every available part of standing room being taken. The drama was presented in a manner to reflect credit on the club of amateurs, and was highly appreciated.

"You dare not jump into that snow bank," said a little boy to his father the other day, as he beheld him standing on the veranda some 15 feet from the ground. "I dare," was the reply, and off he came, but found the snow so light as to allow him to plank his feet square on the frozen ground, making him think how nice it would be to put a shingle on that boy where it would do the most good.

WILBRAHAM.

The ladies of the Glendale church are preparing for a festival shortly.

Edwin B. Brewer was quite severely hurt the other day by a fall on a slippery sidewalk.

The public schools will close next Friday, a week earlier than usual, the school money being used up.

A festival, with a number of new features, is being arranged for by the ladies of the Congregational society.

There is to be a gymnastic exhibition this evening at Fisk Hall under the direction of Prof. Raymond, with music by the academy glee club.

The selectmen have been petitioned to put an article in the warrant for the annual town meeting to see if the town will vote to give women the right of suffrage.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was held last Saturday with Mrs. Dr. Steele. The society has a membership of 35, and has raised $127 during the past year. A Bible reader has been supported by the society for several years at Yokohama, Japan. Mrs. Orrin Daggett, Mrs. J. E. Fuller and Miss J. E. Bosworth were made life members of the society.

The academy has had ten principals since its organization, their terms of service being as follows: Rev. Wilbur Fisk six years, Rev. William Bangs one year, Rev. John Foster two years, Rev. David Patten seven years, Rev. Charles Adams four years, Rev. Robert Allen four years, Rev. Miner Raymond sixteen years, Rev. Edward Cooke ten years, Rev. Nathaniel Fellows five years. Dr. Steele, the present incumbent, has nearly finished his third year. There have been 21 different preceptresses and about 50 different instructors. There are now 12 instructors and over 200 students.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. W. A. McKillop, of Newton, will preach again at the Baptist church to-morrow.

Robert Hayes, a little son of James Hayes, was quite severely injured by being run into by two boys while coasting the other day.

Owing to the deep snow the congregations were quite small last Sunday morning, only 13 persons being present at the Baptist church and 40 at the Union.

Rev. W. L. Noyes of Ashland, N. H., preached at the Union church again last Sunday. A number of members of the church have expressed a desire that Mr. Noyes be invited to become pastor of the church, and a meeting will be held next Tuesday evening to consider the matter.

The Y. M. C. A. reading room is supplying a want long felt in this village. It is filled each evening with the young men of the village, who seem to appreciate it. The leading New York and Boston dailies, Springfield Republican and Union, the Palmer JOURNAL and a large number of other weeklies, both secular and religious, Harpers' and Frank Leslie's illustrated papers and the leading magazines, with a number of mechanical journals, may be found on file in the room. The use of the room is free to all who will come and read.

The breaking of the crown gear on one of the water wheels in the Palmer Mill, Monday afternoon, made it necessary to shut down for repairs. The mill did not start up again until Wednesday morning. While men were at work repairing the damage Tuesday morning, some Babbitt metal, that was being used on the "yoke," coming in contact with some water or snow, as is supposed, exploded and flew into the faces of the men, and it is found that Ezra Forte will lose one of his eyes. The eye was filled with the hot metal, and when the metal was removed by Dr. Ruggles it was found to be about as thick as heavy wrapping paper, and just the shape of the eyeball. Two other men had their eyes injured, but not as badly.

Last Saturday evening the house of Mrs. L. K. Adams was found to be on fire, between 7 and 8 o'clock. The girl had been to a chamber closet for a book, and while there some clothing took fire from the lamp. The fire burned after she had left until it reached a belt holding some cartridges, when one of them exploded, giving the alarm to the family. The flames were extinguished in a few minutes, but not until two new suits of clothes, an overcoat, valise, some books and a few other articles were burned. The chamber and hall were somewhat damaged by smoke and water, and a carpet spoiled, the total damage being about $100. But for the explosion of the cartridge, the fire would have destroyed the house, without doubt.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The pawnbrokers gave a dance at Fireman's Hall Monday evening.

Cone & Kelley's local amateur minstrels are booked for Music Hall the 20th.

The town assessors at their recent session abated nearly $375 of taxes.

C. W. Eddy gave a round-table miroscopical entertainment Wednesday evening at Brimfield.

Washington Council, R. & S. M., will hold, an important meeting next Tuesday evening. Work is expected.

Mrs. Fitzpatrick, a resident of the top of Ware, has recovered from the severe scalding of a fortnight since.

The county commissioners seem to think that a grade crossing near the house of Samuel Morse will be best for all concerned.

Station Agent Knox, who for some weeks has been seriously ill with erysipelas in the head, resumed his labors on Tuesday last.

The spirits didn't come to time at the seance to be given at Music Hall Sunday evening, by C. A. Mansfield. No one is very sorry.

Samuel Morse has received $7,000 for the land sold to the Mass. Central R. R., lying between the Ware River road and the river.

A magnificent crayon portrait of William Cullen Bryant, the artist being Miss Jean Miner, now hangs on the walls of the library room.

A careless fellow drove a valuable pair of horses belonging to Bond, the ice dealer, into Snow's pond recently, and they were with difficulty rescued.

The young ladies' reading club, under the direction of Rev. Dr. Perkins, will at their next assembly discuss the "Life and Writings of Martin Luther, and Goethe's Faust."

Jerome Gates was taken while at his work on Thursday with a partial paralytic shock. He was helped to his home, and on Thursday evening was in about the same condition.

Landlord Jennison, of the Hampshire House, has leased the old Morse ice house from the Mass. Central R. R., and will lay in 800 tons of first-class ice for his own and public supply.

The Otis Hose Company at a meeting Feb. 8, elected the following officers: E. H. Bassett, foreman; Eugene Shea, first assistant; Edward Stafford, clerk; Willie Volk, treasurer; Dominique Dugan, first pipeman; Henry J. Maher, hydrant man.

The grammar school has been closed for two weeks, owing to the continued illness of Principal E. W. Vaughn. Mr. Vaughn is at the house of Henry Warner, and is doing nicely, the attack of typhoid fever having been broken up, but he is still very weak.

Robinson & Richardson have between them bought out the shoe business of John T. Fitzgerald. H. O. Robinson has leased Fitzgerald's old store for three years, and it is now being thoroughly renovated, preparatory to being reopened with a new stock of goods on the 15th.

William C. Marsh has been confined to the house for a week from the effects of a severe bite from John Connor's dog. Mr. Marsh was driving along Main street with horse and sleigh, his foot hanging over the side, when the dog, with no provocation, rushed out, fastening on his instep, biting through the boot and stocking.

Gen. John L. Swift, of Boston, will lecture at Music Hall the 22d, upon "Tadpoles, or the Coming Yankee," under the auspices of the Young Mens' Library Association. Our citizens should liberally patronize this lecture, if they duly appreciate the thoughtfulness of the association in thus providing useful and interesting literary treats. Gen. Swift last winter spoke at Gilbertville and gave universal satisfaction.

The officers-elect of Crusade Lodge, I. O. G. T., were installed on Monday evening, visitors from Palmer being present. The officers of Rescue Degree Temple were installed Wednesday evening. A jubilee will be held by the Ware lodge next Monday evening. Several new members will join. Palmer and Greenwich lodges are invited to be present, and a banquet will be served. The templars are increasing weekly in our midst, and though quiet are in their way doing a good work for the cause of morality and temperance.

Another snow-storm, rivaling those of 1847 and 1867, visited us on Saturday last. The wind howled unmercifully, and on Sunday morning all signs of former paths were obliterated. The sleigh-riders that came from Spencer the night before were snow-bouud at the hotel, and when they left broke a track through Main street. A load to Gilbertville shoveled their way home the same morning. Church attendance was slim, as many men of family were trying to find access to the streets. Five ventured out at Ware town; 40 wended their way to the Methodist, while the average of the day at the East Congregational church was 100 nearly. The back roads were badly filled up and schools on Monday in some of the outlying districts were effectually closed. Freight was scarce at the depot for a few days, and all admit that we have enough, as now there is over two feet of solid snow on the level. A photograph taken of Main street this week looks like a line of fortifications in time of war.

A CARD.—The undersigned desires to express his heartfelt thanks and gratitude to his friends and neighbors for their many acts of thoughtful kindness during the fatal illness of his wife.

TIMOTHY F. FULLER.

Palmer, Feb. 8, 1882.

THE LOST JEANNETTE.—We are getting the story of the Jeannette bit by bit, and it is likely that when the whole of it is known it will be found to be one of the most terrible tales of suffering and privation which has ever come from the Arctic seas. Helplessly adrift in the ice fields for twenty-one months; compelled to work the pumps for eighteen months; leaving the ship at last in boats in a desperate endeavor to reach the shore, and soon hopelessly parted from each other—these courageous and much enduring men passed through perils which would have crushed less dauntless spirits. Some of them died wretchedly; some went mad, and some were blinded; and some after terrible sufferings, found their way to succor and communication with the world. The fate of one boat's crew is a total blank from the time of leaving the ship; the fate of the brave De Long and the men with him is a mystery rapidly deepening into a certainty of their death; and of the other boat's crew some will always be wrecks of what they were, by reason of what they have undergone. It is a pitiful story; the courage of these men and the devotion of the survivors to their comrades touch the heart with admiration; but after all, has not the discovery of two or three islands far up in the polar seas been purchased at a somewhat heavy cost?—Boston Journal.

The fifth annual artists' exhibition is now being held at Gill's art galleries in Springfield. The collection embraces ninety-two pictures, from the studios of fifty-seven leading artists of America, and the opportunity to select from these will undoubtedly be appreciated and improved by those wishing to adorn their homes with fine paintings. During the four preceding exhibitions Mr. Gill has shown 329 pictures and sold 150 of them. Should he sell half of those in the present collection, he will in the Fall take charge of a loan exhibition, feeling that it can be creditably and successfully done with nearly two hundred of these pictures to select from. The proceeds of the exhibition will be divided between the Home for the Friendless and the Art Association.

The recent cold snap is believed to have insured the safety of the Delaware peach crop, which is always endangered by an open mild winter, which forces on the buds prematurely only to be killed by severe frosts in the spring. So far the indications are favorable for a good crop next season.

Henry W. Longfellow, who will reach his seventy-fifth birthday on the 27th inst., has felt compelled on account of an attack of nervous prostration to decline a public reception tendered him by his native city of Portland. The day will be observed in many schools by recitations of Mr. Longfellow's poems.

The people of Big Stone City and Millbank, in Grant county, Dak., are having a lively war over the possession of the county seat. Millbank has nearly all the county offices, but the Big Stoners are holding on to the records with a death grip, and have 300 or more armed men on duty to keep them.

Bed-Time.

What do grown folks do, mamma,
After we children go?
Do they light up all the candles,
And set them along in a row,
And dance, and play sweet music?
Oh! I wish that I could know.

Do they tell delightful stories,
Which we should like to hear,
And bring out oranges and nuts,
Making no noise, for fear
The children in bed should waken
And come down when they hear?

It must be so very pleasant
To stay down stairs and be
Like the rest of the grown-up people,
For it always seems to me
That it is the very best time of all;
But I never stayed to see.

Once when I was very little,
And Nursey had gone to sleep,
I stole down stairs in my nightgown,
As softly as I could creep,
And put my eye to the keyhole,
Just to get one little peep.

But some one opened the door then
And saw me in the hall,
And caught and carried me back to bed,
And waked up Nurse with a call;
And she scolded and scolded like fury,
And I saw nothing, after all.

When shall I be big enough, mamma—
Do tell me exactly when—
To stay up as late as you do,
Or as late as I like? For then
I will sit up all night, and never,
Never go to bed again.

BICYCLE RAILROADING.

Mr. E. M. Boynton, an inventor in Brooklyn, recently turned his attention to rapid transit. The result of his meditation was the patenting of what he terms a "bicycle railroad." He said to a reporter yesterday that his invention will revolutionize the present system of railroads, and he explained how. Mr. Boynton, though from Massachusetts, has the appearance of a Louisianian. He is dark, of medium height, with black hair, sharp, penetrating black eyes, quick motions, and a rapid and voluble utterance. He showed the reporter the letters-patent of the "bicycle railroad."

"Here," he said, "is a row of posts or pillars. They support a V-shaped trough of steel or iron. Twenty feet above this trough is an inverted trough like this, Λ. Iron lattice work or pillars, supported on the row of posts below, support in turn this Λ at the edges and connect its edges with the edges of the V, and we get an elevated tunnel.

"One rail lies in the bottom of the V, and the other, reversed, is fixed under the apex of the Λ. The locomotive to run in this tunnel will be sixteen feet high, made of Bessemer steel, elliptical in its vertical cross section, with two driving wheels, one at each end, fifteen feet in diameter, or about three times the diameter of the ordinary locomotive wheel. Running on the upper rail or track will be two guide or traction wheels, opposite the drivers. The wheels will be grooved to fit the tracks. Each car will be four feet wide in the center, shaped like the locomotive, and sixteen feet high. The cars are grooved in the part opposite the lower rail.

"I propose to treble the speed attained by the present locomotives by the same piston stroke. I will reduce the weight of trains to one fifth of their present weight. I will reduce the cost of construction one-fifth, and the friction one-fifth, by employing one-eighth of the number of wheels and axles. As the wheels are three times the diameter of ordinary locomotive drivers, three times the speed, or 150 miles an hour, can be attained with precisely the same amount of friction on the axles and boxes. By running the train on elevated tracks upon single posts the necessity for bridging is done away with. By traction wheels, that may be pressed against the upper rail, the trains can ascend, or, without danger, go down the steepest grades. If a wheel breaks, or is loosed, the cars, which are grooved underneath to fit the track, fall down upon it and slide along until stopped by the friction. They are so constructed as to be light, narrow, and to afford little reistance to the air.

The tracks will not shade or obstruct the streets. Snow drifts are avoided, because we go above the snow. The passenger capacity will be greater than that of the present palace car, weighing twenty tons. The necessity for sleeping cars will be avoided between points one thousand miles apart. Business within a radius of one thousand miles of New York may be transacted personally by a merchant in a day. Grain and coal can be transported at one-fifth of the present cost. I will run a train on an air line from New York to Sitka, about 3500 miles. From Sitka, by water, I will take one of Lorillard's steel cigar steamboats to the Asiatic coast. Then I will jump on my elevated train again and traverse China, India, the valley of the Euphrates, Turkey, through Europe, to Paris; and all in less than a week! North and South America would be within forty-eight hours' travel of each other. Resting upon iron posts, my cars would traverse the narrowest canon, the boldest cliff and the densest forest. There will be no baggage smashing, for the depth of the cars will permit the passenger to store his baggage beneath his feet. What a blessing it will be for the tired business men of New York when, by taking a train almost before their office door, they can be whisked to Coney Island in five minutes, take a draught of fresh air, swallow a cocktail and return to work, refreshed and satisfied with the world!" —N. Y. Sun.

"Whew! Coming up these stairs takes the wind out of me," remarks the gentleman who climbs to the editorial rooms to give advice about running the paper. "So glad!" says the editor, shaking him by the hand, and the gentleman thinks the editor is delighted to see him.—Boston Globe.

FASHION NOTES.

Lichen green is a new shade.
Stylish fans are of medium size.
The new red is carnation color.
Satin, with jet beads, is the new gimp.
Redingotes and polonaises are revived.
Combination costumes are losing favor.
Double-breasted sacques are out of style.
Eglantine pink is a new shade for Spring.
Worth is bringing plain stuffs into fashion.
Pearl marguerites trim white satin dresses.
New cotton satinettes are as lustrous as silk.

Jersey dresses are fashionable for little girls.

Colored Spanish laces ornament new bonnets.

Spangles are on new silk fans for evening use.

Æsthetic valentines are displayed in the shops.

Gold braid and gold lace trim new black bonnets.

Stained glass designs are copied in new Spring goods.

Watteau tea-gowns are worn by ladies of æsthetic tastes.

Sleeves made of fine flowers are new on evening dresses.

Embroidery patterns, done in feathers, appear on new ball dresses.

India red foulards are made up as Mother Hubbard wrappers.

Moons and large polka spots will be stylish for Spring dresses.

Small mantles of figured India cashmere are worn with black dresses.

Clipped feather rosettes, in pale pink shades, trim newly imported bonnets.

Maiden hair fern is mixed with orange blossoms for brides' dresses.

The "Comets of 1881" is a new design for cambrics and lawn.

New riding habits have narrower and shorter skirts than those hitherto worn.

Foulard handkerchiefs have large balls of three colors on a white ground.

New opera cloaks have appliques of plush all over the satin mantle.

Jasmine and white lilacs are mingled with orange blossoms in bridal wreaths.

Quarter trains are more stylish than either short skirts or demi-trains.

Narrow bands or Greek fillets of silver ribbon are worn on the hair.

Berthas, tabliers and wide flounces of lace are used on full dress toilets.

A pouf just below the back of the waist is on the newest dresses.

Gilt nails, with flat square heads, are used to fasten cloth dresses, instead of buttons.

Lenten costumes will be made of fine black wool, trimmed with braid or with lace.

A hoop of coiled beads is used for gathering up the cashmere drapery of æsthetic costumes.—N. Y. Tribune.

A wife must study never to draw largely upon the small stock of patience in a man's nature, nor to increase his obstinacy by trying to drive him; never, if possible, to have scenes. It is doubtful if a real quarrel, even if made up, does not loosen the bond between man and wife, and sometimes, unless the affection be very sincere, lasting.

Some clocks do not strike. You must look at them if you would know the time. Some men do not talk their Christianity; you must look at their lives if you would know what the gospel can do for human nature. But a clock need not be incorrect because it strikes; a man need not be inconsistent because he speaks as well as acts.

The latest æsthetic slang the ladies use when reproving their admiring gentlemen friends is, "You flatter too awfully perfectly much."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

WOMAN'S TRIUMPH.

A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION—IT IS ENDURED WITHOUT TAKING ETHER—SUBJECT, MRS. EDWARD MEYERS, OF RONDOUT, N. Y.

(From the correspondence of the Kingston. N. Y. Freeman.)

The case of Mrs. Edward Myers, of Rondout, New York, furnishes an apt illustration of woman's power of endurance. This lady had been treated for months in the usual way for Erysipelas of the hand, without benefit. Not until her hand had become a mass of putrified flesh did she turn to Dr. Kennedy, proprietor of the "Favorite Remedy," for help.

He at once informed her that it was impossible to save the hand—it must be amputated. She received this terrible intelligence quietly, declined to take ether, stipulating merely to hold her husband's hand during the operation, and underwent the painful process without moving a muscle or uttering a groan. Dr. Kennedy then gave "Favorite Remedy" freely to cleanse the blood and prevent the return of the disease, and Mrs. Myers now lives and rejoices in her great deliverance.

"Favorte Remedy" is fast becoming a trusted household friend in all cases of Female Weakness and diseases of the blood. One dollar a bottle. Your druggist has it. 4w-43

POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers haue received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

STATEMENT Under Oath!

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D's. Psoriasis, and others Leprosy, commencing on my scalp, and, in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skillful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in the form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor, and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there could be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envolope containing this letter. In the latter part of the winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit, and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. —— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back, across my ribs, arms, hands, feet badly swollen, toe nails came off, finger nails dead and hard as bone, hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. Oh, my God! how I did suffer!

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier), Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures). I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Resolvent three times a day, after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura morning and evening. Result, returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper.

Keep Nothing from Mother.

They sat at the spinning together,
And they spun a fine white thread;
One face was old and the other young—
A silver and golden head.

At times the young voice broke in song
That was wonderfully sweet,
And the mother's heart beat deep and calm,
Her joy was most complete.

There was many a holy lesson,
Inwoven with silent prayer,
Taught to her gentle, listening child,
As they sat spinning there.

"And, of all that I speak, my darling,
From older head and heart,
God giveth me one last thing to say,
With it thou shalt not part.

"Thou wilt listen to many voices—
And, oh, that these must be!—
The voice of praise, the voice of love,
And voice of flattery.

"But listen to me, my little one,
There's one thing thou shalt fear,
Let ne'er a word to my love be said
Her mother may not hear.

"No matter how true, my darling one,
The words may seem to thee,
They are not fit for my child to hear,
If not indeed for me.

"If thou'lt ever keep thy young heart pure,
Thy mother's heart from fear,
Bring all that is told thee day by day
At night to thy mother's ear."

As thus they sat spinning together,
An angel bent to see
The mother and child whose happy life
Went on so lovingly.

A record was made with his golden pen,
This on the page he said:
The mother who counseled her child so well
Need never feel afraid.

For God would keep the heart of the child
With tender love and fear,
Who lisps, at her mother's side at night,
All to her mother's ear.

A BRIMFIELD HEROINE.

HOW A PLUCKY WOMAN FROM HAMPDEN COUNTY MADE HER WAY TO OREGON AND STARTED THE PACIFIC UNIVERSITY. A VIVID ACCOUNT OF TRAVELING THROUGH A WILDERNESS.

The following letter has recently come to light, showing what hardships a company of emigrants from Missouri to Oregon endured in 1846. It was written by Mrs. Tabitha Brown, the widow of Rev. Clark Brown, who preached in Brimfield from 1797 to 1803. Mrs. Brown was a daughter of Dr. Joseph Moffatt, physician in Brimfield, his native place, some forty years.

Mrs. Brown was born in 1780, and was therefore sixty-six years old when she made the journey that she describes. This letter was written in 1854, in her seventy-fifth year. For some time after becoming a widow in 1647, she was a teacher in Maryland and Virginia. Afterwards, in order to improve her situation, and to help her boys, she removed to Missouri, where she lived a good many years. Within this period the other members of her father's family became widely scattered, and their location unknown to her. In 1846 she started for Oregon with her son and a daughter, and their families, with a Capt. John Brown, brother to her deceased husband accompanying them. She was eight months on the way, and the amount of suffering she passed through, and the courage with which she met it, will be seen in the letter itself.

FOREST GROVE, WEST TUALATIN PLAINS, WASHINGTON CO., OREGON TERRITORY, AUGUST, 1854.

MY BROTHER AND SISTER:—It is impossible for me to express to you the unspeakable pleasure and happiness your letter of the 29th of June gave me. Not hearing from you for so great a length of time, I had concluded myself to be the last one of my father's family remaining here a pilgrim in the wide world to complete the work that God intended for me to do. Oh, that I could be present with you and Margaret, and relate in the hearing of your children the numerous vicissitudes and dangers I have encountered by land and by sea, since I parted with you and Margaret in Brimfield! It would fill a volume of many pages. But I will give a few items from the time I left Missouri in April of 1846, for Oregon. I expected all three of my children to accompany me, but Manthano was detained by sickness, and his wife was unwilling to leave her parents. I provided for myself a good ox wagon team, a good supply of what was requisite for the comfort of myself, Capt. Brown and my driver. Uncle John insisted on coming, and crossed the plains on horseback. Orus Brown, with his wife and eight children, Virgil K. Pringle, Pheme Brown, husband and five children, fitted out their separate families and joined a train of forty more for Oregon, in high expectations of gaining the wished for land of promise.

The novelty of our journey, with a few exceptions, was pleasing and prosperous, until after we passed Fort Hall. Then we were within 800 miles of Oregon City, if we had kept on the old road down the Columbia river. But three or four trains of emigrants were decoyed off by a rascally fellow that came out from the settlements in Oregon, assuring us that he had found a new cut-off, that if we would follow him we would be in the settlement long before those that had gone down the Columbia. This was in August. The idea of shortening a long journey caused us to yield to his advice. Our sufferings from that time no tongue can tell. He left a pilot with us who proved to be an excellent man, otherwise we would never have seen Oregon. He said he would clear the road before us so that we should have no trouble in rolling our wagons after him. He robbed us of what he could by lying, and left us to the depredations of Indians, wild beasts, and starvation. But God was with us. We had sixty miles of desert, without grass or water; mountains to climb, cattle giving out, wagons breaking, emigrants sick and dying, hostile Indians to guard against by night and day, to keep from being killed or having our horses and cattle arrowed or stolen. We were carried south of Oregon hundreds of miles into Utah Territory and California. Fell in with the Clamotte and Rogue river Indians, lost nearly all our cattle and passed the Umpquaw mountains, twelve miles through. I rode through in three days at the risk of my life, on horseback, having lost my wagon and all that I had but the horse I was on. Our families were the first that started into the canon, so we got through the mud and rocks much better than those that came in afterwards. Out of hundreds of wagons, but one came through without breaking. The canon was strewn with dead cattle, broken wagons, beds, clothing, and everything but provisions, of which latter we were nearly all destitute. Some people were in the canon two and three weeks before they could get through. Some died without any warning, from fatigue and starvation. Others ate of the flesh of the cattle that were lying dead by the wayside.

After struggling through mud, rocks, and water up to our horses' sides much of the way in crossing this twelve-mile mountain, we opened into the beautiful Umpquaw valley, inhabited only by Indians and wild beasts. We had still another mountain to cross, the Calipose, besides many miles to travel through mud, snow, hail and rain. Winter had set in. We were yet a long distance from any white settlement. The word was, Fly every one that can, from starvation, save those that are compelled to stay by the cattle, to recruit them for further traveling. Mr. Pringle and Pheme insisted upon my going ahead with their uncle John, to try to save our own lives. They were obliged to stay back a few days to recruit their worn-out cattle. They divided the last bit of bacon, of which I had three slices; I had also a cup full of tea. This was the last division of all we had. No bread. We saddled our horses and set off, not knowing that we should ever see each other again. Capt. Brown was too old and feeble to render any assistance or protection to me. I was obliged to ride ahead as a pilot, hoping to overtake four or five wagons that left camp the day before. Near sunset we came up with the families that left camp that morning. They had nothing to eat, and their cattle had given out. We all camped in an oak grove together for the night. In the morning I divided my last morsel with them and left them to take care of themselves. I hurried Capt. Brown to ride fast, so as to overtake the three wagons ahead. We passed beautiful valleys and over high mountains; saw but two Indians, at a distance, during the day. In the afterpart of the day Capt. Brown complained of sickness, and could only walk his horse at a distance behind me. He had a swimming in his head, and a pain in his stomach. In two or three hours he became delirious, and fell from his horse. I was afraid to jump down from my horse to assist him, as it was one that a woman had never ridden before. He tried to rise up on his feet but could not. I rode close to him and set the end of his cane that I had in my hand hard into the ground by him to pull up by. I then urged him to walk a little. He tottered along a few yards and gave out. I then saw a little sunken spot a few steps from me. I led his horse down into that and with much difficulty got him once more raised on his horse. I then requested him to hold fast to the saddle and horse's mane, and I would lead by the bridle. Two miles ahead was another mountain to climb over. As I reached the foot of it he was able to take the bridle in his own hands, and we passed over safely into a large valley, a wide, extensive, solitary place, and no wagons in sight.

The sun was now setting, the wind was blowing, and the rain was drifting upon the side of the distant mountain. Poor me! I crossed the plain to where three mountain spurs met, ravines meandering betwixt the points. Here the shades of night were gathering fast, and I could see the wagon tracks no further. I alighted from my horse, flung off my saddle and saddle bag, and tied the horse fast with a lasso rope to a tree. The captain asked what I was going to do; my answer was, "I am going to camp for the night." He gave a groan and fell to the ground. I gathered my wagon sheet that I had put under my saddle, flung it over a projecting limb of a tree and made me a fine tent. I then stripped the captain's horse and tied him, placed saddles, blankets, bridles and so forth under the tent, then helped up the bewildered old gentleman and introduced him to his new lodging upon the naked ground. His senses were gone. I covered him as well I could with blankets, and seated myself upon my feet behind him, expecting he would be a corpse before morning.

Pause for a moment and consider my situation. Worse than alone in a savage wilderness, without food, without fire, cold and shivering, wolves fighting and howling all around me. The darkness of night forbade the stars to shine upon me; all was solitary as death. But that same kind Providence that ever has been, was watching over me still. I committed my all to Him, and felt no fear. As soon as light had dawned I pulled down my tent, saddled my horses, found the captain so as to stand on his feet. Just at this moment one of the emigrants that I was trying to overtake came to me. He was in search of venison. Half a mile ahead were the wagons I was trying to catch up with, and we were soon there, and ate plentifully of fresh venison. Within eight feet of where my tent was set fresh tracks of two Indians were plainly to be seen, but I did not know that they were there. They killed and robbed a Mr. Newton only a short distance off, but would not kill his wife because she was a woman. The Indians killed another man on our cut-off. The rest of the emigrants escaped with their lives. We then traveled on and in a few days came to the foot of the Calipose mountain. Here we were obliged to wait for more emigrants to help cut a road through. Here my children and my grand-children came up with us, a joyful meeting. They had been near starving. Mr. Pringle tried to shoot a wolf, but he was too weak and trembling to hold his rifle steady. They all cried because they had nothing to eat. Just at this time their son came to them with a supply, and all cried again.

Winter had set in. We were many days in crossing the Calipose mountain, able to go ahead only a mile or two each day. The road had to be cut and opened for us, and the mountain was covered with snow. With much difficulty we crossed over to the headwaters of the Willamette, followed the river down a few days, and gave up the idea of reaching the settlements until spring returned. Provisions gave out, and Mr. Pringle set off on horseback for the settlements for relief, not knowing how long he would be gone, or whether he would get through at all. In a week or so our scanty provisions were gone. We were again in a state of starvation. Much crying; many tears were shed through the day by all but one. She had passed through many trials, sufficient to convince her that tears could avail nothing in our extremity. Through all my sufferings in crossing the plains, I not once sought relief by the shedding of tears, nor thought we should not live to reach the settlements. The same faith and hope that I ever had in the blessings of kind Providence strengthened in proportion to the trials I had to encounter. As the only alternative, or last resort for the present time, Mr. Pringle's eldest son, Clark, shot down one of his father's best working oxen, and dressed it. It had not one particle of fat about it. We then had something to eat, poor bones to pick, without bread or salt.

I must now digress a little. In the year '43, Orus Brown came to Oregon to look at the country. In '45 he returned. When within four or five hundred miles of the United States frontier, he and the three men with him were taken by the Pawnee Indians, and robbed. They got away from them, however, and subsisted on berries and rosebuds until they reached the frontier settlements. Very likely you saw the publication about Dr. White, O. Brown, Chapman, and one other being taken by the Pawnees in 1845. In 1846, when we all started for Oregon, Orus Brown was appointed pilot, having crossed the plains twice before. His company was six days ahead of ours, so he had gone down the old emigrant route, and reached the settlements in September. In six or eight weeks after he heard of the suffering emigrants at the south, and set off in haste with four pack horses and provisions for our relief. He met Mr. Pringle, turned him about; in a few days they were at our camp. We had all retired to rest in our tents, hoping to forget our troubles until daylight should remind us again of our sad fate. In the gloomy stillness of the night, footsteps of horses were heard rushing toward our tents. Directly a halloo! It was the well-known voices of O. Brown and V. Pringle. Who can realize the joy? Orus, by his persuasive perseverance, encouraged us to more effort to reach the settlements. Five miles from where we were camped we fell in with a company of half-breed French and Indians, with pack horses. We hired six of them, and pushed ahead again. Our provisions were becoming short. We were once more on allowance, until we reached the first settlers. There our hardest struggles were ended.

On Christmas day, at 2 o'clock p. m., I entered the house of a Methodist minister, the first house I had set my foot in for nine months. He requested me to take the whole charge of his house and family through the winter. His wife was as ignorant and useless as a heathen goddess. My services compensated for my own board and Captain Brown's through the winter. For two or three weeks of my journey down the Willamette I had felt something in the end of my glove finger, which I supposed to be a button. On examination at my new home in Salem, I found it to be a six-and-a-quarter cent piece. This was the whole of my cash capital to commence business with in Oregon. With it I purchased three needles. I traded off some of my old clothes to the squaws for buckskins, worked them into gloves for the Oregon ladies and gentlemen, which cleared me upwards of $30 extra of boarding.

In May, '47, I left Salem, which is now our seat of government, for Oregon City, thirty miles down the Willamette. I went in an open boat in company with my Methodist minister and family. From thence down the Columbia River to the Pacific Ocean. Here I spent the summer at a settlement south of the bay. At this time there were but ten families residing there. I boarded with a Mr. Pray and lady, missionaries from Ballston, N. Y., a very genteel family. Spent the summer in visiting, and bathing in the ocean. In October I started in an open boat up the river for Salem again—wind and tide against us. Were 13 days in reaching Oregon City. Here I was within 20 miles of Tualatin Plains, Orus Brown's location. It would not do for a mother to pass by. I luckily found a man with an empty wagon going out that lived neighbor to Orus. I gave $2 for my passage, calculating to spend two weeks only with Orus and family, and reach Salem before the winter rains set in. Went to a Presbyterian meeting on Sunday. After meeting, Orus gave me an introduction to Mrs. and Mr. Clark, missionaries from New York, who came here in 1840. They invited me home with them to spend a few days. Winter set in. They pressed me hard to spend the winter with them. I accepted their invitation. Our intimacy ever since has been more like mother and children, than that of strangers. They are about the same age as my own children, and look to me for advice and counsel equally as much.

In October, 1847, came news from the suffering emigrants; much sickness and death on the plains, and many poor orphan children left to be cared for by strangers. I said to Mr. Clark, "Why has Providence frowned on me and left me poor in this world? Had he blessed me with riches, as he has many others, I know right well what I would do." "What would you do?" was the question. "I would establish myself in a comfortable house and receive all poor children, and be a mother to them." He fixed his keen eye upon me, and asked if I was candid in what I said. "Yes, I am." "If so, I will try with you, and see what efforts we can make." Mr. Clark would take an agency, and try to get assistance and establish a school in the plain. I should go into the old log meeting house, and receive all the children, rich and poor. Those parents that were able, were to pay $1 per week for board, tuition, washing and all. I agreed to labor one year for nothing. Mr. Clark and others agreed to assist as far as they were able in furnishing provisions, providing there was not a sufficiency of cash coming in to sustain the poor. The time fixed upon was March, '48.

The last Saturday night in April, after visiting my children in Salem, I arrived at the Plains again. Found everything prepared for me to go into the old meeting house and cluck up my chickens the next Monday morning. The neighbors had collected together what broken knives and forks, tin pans and dishes, they could part with for the Oregon pioneer to commence housekeeping with. A well educated lady from the east, a missionary's wife, for a teacher. My family increased rapidly. In the summer they put me up a boarding house. I now had 30 boarders, of both sexes, and of all ages, from four years old to twenty-one. I managed them and did all my work, except washing; that part was done by the scholars. In the spring of '49 we called for trustees. Had eight appointed. They voted me the whole charge of the boarding house free of rent. I was to provide for myself. Established the price of board at $2 per week. Whatever I made over and above my expenses was my own. In '51 I had forty in my family at $2.50 per week. Mixed with my own hands 3,423 pounds of flour in less than five months. Mr. Clark for the establishment of the school gave over to the trustees a quarter section of land for a town plot. A large and handsome building is upon the spot of ground we selected at the first starting. It has been under town incorporation two years, and at the last session of the legislature a charter was granted for a university, to be called Pacific University, with a limitation of $50,000. The president and professor are already here from Vermont. The teacher and his lady in the academy are from New York.

You must excuse my troubling you with such a lengthy narrative. I have endeavored to give general outlines of what I have done. You must be your own judges, whether I have been doing good or evil. I have labored hard for myself and the public and the rising generation. But I now have quit hard work, and live at my ease. I am independent as to worldly concerns. I own a very nicely finished white framed house on a lot in town within a short distance from the public buildings. That I rent for $100 per year. I have eight other town lots with outbuildings worth $150 each. I have eight cows and a number of young cattle. The cows I let out for their milk and one-half the increase. I have rising $1100 cash due me; $400 of it I have donated to the university, besides $100 I gave to the academy three years ago. Thus much I have accumulated by my own industry and good management independent of my children, since I drew six-and-a-quarter cents from my glove finger.

Now I must give you a short description of the beautiful scenery of this delightful and healthy country. The whole of Oregon is delightful, especially the plains, of which there are many. But this West Tualatin is the most beautiful of all others. The outskirts of the plain are circled around with hills a few miles distant, covered to their summits with fine bunch grass, fir, and oak timber. Near to the edge, the plain is circled clear around with beautiful fir trees, green all the year, standing three hundred feet high. In front of them, in contrast with the green, there are large spreading oaks, casting their shades over the farmers' white houses, as there are many in full view. Grass is green here all winter, and cattle get their living without being fed. Snow seldom lies on the ground longer than a few days. Large improvements extend out into the plain in every direction. You may see at all times large bands of cattle, horses, and people passing in every direction morning and evening. We have a cool refreshing breeze from the sea. The nights are cool and pleasant. We sleep under almost as much clothing in summer as in winter. I wish you could see this beautiful, healthy country. We have no prevalent diseases. Most of the deaths that occur here are of emigrants, whose systems were diseased before leaving the States. It is very seldom that we hear of a child's dying that was born in Oregon. I have not time or space to give you the Oregon prices current. Everything in the farming line has been very high, and merchandise very low. But at this time all is low. Horses last spring were valued at from $200 to $300; American cows, $100. Last spring I could have taken $800 for my eight, now I could not get more than $60 per head. Adieu for the present.

TABITHA BROWN.

SIMPLE REMEDIES FOR EMERGENCIES.

Very few young mothers are able to control their nerves so completely as to keep from being startled when confronted with a cut finger with dripping blood, and the loud cries which announce a catastrophe. Sometimes she cannot collect her thoughts sufficiently to recall any of the good remedies with which she is acquainted. One way to avoid this is to write out a list of helps in trouble, and tack it upon the door of your room, after the manner of hotel regulations. There is nothing better for a cut than powdered rosin. Get a few cents worth of rosin, pound it until it is fine, and put in an empty, clean pepper or spice box with perforated top; then you can easily sift it out on the cut; put a soft cloth around the injured member and wet it with cold water once in a while. It will prevent inflammation and soreness. In doing up a burn the main point is to keep the air from it. If sweet oil and cotton are not at hand, take a cloth and spread dry flour over it, and wrap the burned part in it. It is always well to have some simple remedies in the house where you can get them without a moment's loss of time; a little bottle of peppermint, in case of colic; chlorate of potash for sore throat, pepsin for indigestion, and a bottle of brandy. Have them arranged so that you could go to them in the dark and reach the right remedy, but be sure you never do it, even if you know they have not been disturbed; always light a lamp or gas, and make sure you have what you are after. Remember that pistols are always loaded, and that poison may be put in place of peppermint.

People should avoid, as far as possible, being run over by railroad cars. An empty platform car weighs 18,000 pounds; an empty box car 20,000 pounds; a passenger car 36,000 pounds, and sometimes more; and an average locomotive 80,000 pounds. A single pair of car wheels weighs 5000 pounds.

"Does it pay to steal?" asks the Philadelphia Times. It does, esteemed contemporary, it does. It doesn't always pay the thief, but just think of the large number of criminal lawyers to whom it furnishes a fat living.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

In one of the Switzerland land slides a whole tract of wood slipped down a hillside and spread over some meadows without uprooting or even injuring the trees, thus converting at one stroke a tract of pasturage into a piece of forest land.

In Portland in 1881 about 4.7 per cent of the inhabitants were arrested for drunkenness. In Boston the percentage of arraignments for all crimes was about 5½. In 1880 the percentage of arrests for drunkenness in that city was 4.8.

A burglar broke into the house of a country editor the other night. After a terrible struggle, the editor succeeded in robbing him.

No one should be ashamed of the size or shape of his pedal extremities. "There's a divinity that shapes our ends."

Courtship.

It chanced they say upon a day,
A furlong from the town,
That she was strolling up the way
As he was strolling down—
She humming low, as might be so,
A ditty sweet and small;
He whistled loud a tune, you know,
That had no tune at all.
It happened so—precisely so—
As all their friends and neighbors know.

As I and you perhaps might do,
They gazed upon the ground;
And when they'd gone a yard or two,
Of course they both looked 'round.
They both were pained, they both explained
What caused their eyes to roam;
And nothing after that remained
But he should see her home.
It happened so—precisely so—
As all their friends and neighbors know.

Next day to that 'twas common chat,
Admitting no debate;
A bonnet close beside a hat
Was sitting on a gate.
A month, not more, had bustled o'er,
When, braving nod and smile,
One blushing soul came through the door,
Where two went up the aisle.
It happened so—precisely so—
As all their friends and neighbors know.

CARBONIC ACID GAS.

This gas, or choke damp, as it is vulgarly called, is the source of infinite mischief. No other single agency injures the health of men so widely and seriously. This gas comes principally from the lungs of men and animals, and from combustion. A load of wood, weighing a ton, is drawn to the door. It takes a span of horses to do it. It is burned in the stove, and all that is left of it is in the form of ashes, and may be carried away on a man's shoulder. Perhaps the weight is about fifty pounds; the nineteen hundred and fifty pounds which have disappeared have all gone up the chimney and out into the atmosphere in the form of carbonic acid gas.

A candle weighs four ounces, but when it is burned, there is almost nothing left. It has disappeared in the form of carbonic acid gas. Put a man in a pork-barrel, head him up tight, and drive in the bung. Wait a few minutes. Now loosen the bung, take it out, and peep in. If you happen to look in the man's face you will find it nearly black. The man is dead. He was suffocated. You see the way it happened was this. The man at first could breathe well enough, and unless he knew about such things, he said to himself, "Well, this is a little cramped, but it is not so bad after all." But pretty soon he began to feel dizzy, and then came a terrible pressure on his head, then a few struggles and all was over. Just take a good look in his face, if you have the stomach for it, and you will see how terrible was his agony during the last moments. What killed that man? The carbonic acid gas which he produced in his own lungs. If when you first opened the bung-hole you had put your mouth to it and tried to breathe the air you would have found out at once what killed him. We take pure air into our lungs, and when we breathe it out it contains three or four per cent of this poisonous gas. Now, if we take this same air back into the lungs and breathe it over again, when it comes out of our lungs the second time it is so poisonous that it can't be taken back the third time without mischief.

In a room twelve feet square, if three persons are sitting and they have one gas burner, which will consume the oxygen and create carbonic acid gas about as fast as three pairs of lungs, the air will become poisonous in a few minutes, unless there is an opening to let the poisoned air out, and the pure air in. The air in most churches and theatres is simply abominable. Babies in the bottoms of cradles, ladies under thick veils, passengers in sleeping rooms, nine-tenths of our people in their bedrooms, are poisoned with this carbonic acid gas. Now, does not the statement with which I began, namely, that "carbonic acid gas is the source of infinite mischief," seem reasonable?—Dr. Dio Lewis in Golden Rule.

DON'T TELL MY WIFE.

A well-known judge in one of the Southern States, speaking of his younger days, says that some seventy years ago he had become skeptical, and that Mr. H., a noble, whole-souled man, but who was a confirmed Deist, though he had a Christian wife, soon found him out and endeavored to instill in his mind his own deistical notions. "But he charged me," says the judge, "not to let his wife know that he was a Deist or that I was skeptical. I asked him why? To which he replied that if he were to marry a hundred times he would marry only a pious woman. Again I asked him why? 'Because,' he said, 'if she is a Christian it makes her a better wife, a better mother, a better mistress, and a better neighbor. If she is poor it enables her to bear adversity with patience and fortitude. If she is rich and prosperous it lessens her desire for mere show. And when she comes to die, if she is in error, she is as well off as you or I; and if we are in error, she is a thousand times better off than we can be.' I asked him if he knew of any other error or system of error, attended with so many advantages. His reply was evasive. But what he had said led me to examine the subject for myself. And I often look back to that conversation as one of the most important incidents of my life, and to it I trace my determination to study the Bible carefully and to examine the evidences of the Christian religion for myself, the result of which has led me to a full and living faith in the Saviour."

It is said by jailors that when husbands are incarcerated, no matter what their crime may have been, they are constantly visited by their wives, while women who are under sentence are very rarely visited by their husbands.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1882.

GOV. LONG'S wife, long an invalid, died on Thursday of consumption.

THE question of an amendment to the constitution providing for biennial elections is again before our Legislature. It ought to pass, together with a provision for biennial sessions of the Legislature.

HO KUN HUA, the Chinese professor at Harvard University, died on Tuesday. He was the first and only collegiate professor of Chinese in the country, and was a gentleman of culture and large intellectual powers.

THE New York & New England Railroad managers want to buy the $3,000,000 and more of stock owned by the State, and offer to pay 50 for it. The stock has recently been up to 80, and would seem to be worth more to the managers than they offer to pay.

THE Boston & Albany and the Vermont Central railroads have settled their differences at last, and the latter road has accordingly advanced its price for Chicago tickets to $20. This puts an end to the cheap fares which have prevailed so long, and there will probably be no more $5 rates to Chicago for a good while to come.

GOV. LONG has filled the vacancy on the bench of the superior court, caused by Judge Wilkinson's death, by appointing to the position Albert Mason of Brookline, chairman of the harbor and land commissioners, and a lawyer of recognized ability. Ex-Speaker Sanford of Taunton takes the new judge's place on the harbor and land commission.

THE Senate at Washington on Thursday passed the strong anti-polygamy bill prepared by Senator Edmunds, which must put an end to this evil if it becomes a law. The House voted to fix its membership under the new apportionment at 325. This gives Massachusetts an additional member, and takes one each from Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

THE Vermont supreme court has just rendered a decision of considerable interest to mill owners and riparian proprietors in that State. The court decides that a manufacturer or mill owner has no right to dump into the stream sawdust or any kind of waste, to the injury of other mill owners, manufacturers or riparian owners below him on the same stream. It has always been the custom among wood-working manufacturers on the Vermont streams to dump their sawdust and refuse into the streams, regardless of consequences and the rights of others, until many streams have become practically useless from the filling up of their beds. This decision is likely to result in numerous suits for damages.

THE members of the Massachusetts Press Association, with their wives and invited guests, numbering in all 130, held their annual winter reunion and banquet at the Revere House in Boston Wednesday, and enjoyed "the feast of reason and the flow of soul" (without the "friendly bowl," however) which usually appertain to these gatherings. President Baldwin of Worcester declined further service, and Francis Proctor, of the Cape Ann Advertiser, was elected his successor. After disposing of a capital dinner interesting remarks were made by Rev. Mr. Horton of Lynn, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Col. T. W. Higginson and several others, and letters of regret were read from Gov. Long, Henry W. Longfellow, Carl Schurz and George W. Curtis.

SENATOR DAWES made quite a notable speech in the Senate Monday, on the civil service question, in advocacy of his bill for reforming the service, as against that of Senator Pendleton. Mr. Dawes proposes to adopt the plan which has made the New York post office the model office in the country, filling vacancies by competitive examinations and promotions, under the supervision of the heads of the departments where the vacancies occur; while Mr. Pendleton's bill provides for a commission of five persons, to superintend a system of competitive examinations for all the departments. Mr. Dawes's address was listened to with close attention, and his bill certainly has one great advantage over Mr. Pendleton's, in that the plan he proposes has been tried, and works well.

FATHER MCCOSKER, a Catholic priest at Rahway, N. J., has stirred up quite an excitement in quite an unusual way. He does not believe in parochial schools, and says so, frankly telling his people that they can learn more in the public schools. He disbanded the parochial school at Newton, N. J., where he was stationed for many years, and when he went to Rahway a couple of years ago his advice sent nearly all the children in the parochial school to the public schools, and he would have closed the former but for the bishop, who wanted it kept open. Last week there was some trouble in the school over a sleigh-ride, in which the priest did not agree with the sisters in charge, and the school was temporarily closed. The bishop ordered it reopened, however, and seems to have put a big flea in Father McCosker's ear at the same time, for the priest "flops" square around and now tells the Catholics he wishes they would send their children to the parochial school in the future! The only surprising feature of the case is that he should have taken and been permitted to maintain such an independent stand for so many years. The free American air has evidently had a liberalizing influence upon the priest's mind, but, as in many other cases, its effects are short-lived, when they conflict with the interests of the church whose servant he is.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Spring-like.

And getting muddy.

Shrove Sunday to-morrow.

The ice has gone out of the river.

Venus will be evening star after next Monday.

Ash Wednesday and Washington's birthday are in conjunction next week.

The trustees of the State Primary School spent Monday night at that institution.

Rev. Sumner Ellis, D. D., of Cambridge, wil preach at St. Paul's church to-morrow.

Judge Robinson has just opened his silo of corn fodder, and finds it in excellent condition.

The pulpit of the Congregational church will be occupied, to-morrow, by Rev. I. O. Rankin, of Nassau, N. Y.

Mrs. Georgie S. Gilchrist is ready to give instruction on the piano forte, as will be seen by her card in another column.

Palmer has not sent out a single sleigh-ride party this winter, and is not likely to, now that the sleighing has vanished.

The ladies of the Congregational society had a social Thursday afternoon and evening, at the residence of Mrs. J. S. Holden.

C. L. Saunders, a harness maker from Boston, has opened a harness shop in the rear of Hitchcock's shoe shop on Main street.

Mrs. C. C. Shaw and Mrs. Shumway entertained the social union of St. Paul's society, in the parlors of their church, Wednesday evening.

The Guy family ave a fair entertainment at Wales Hall Monday evening, but the rain was not in their favor, and they had a very small audience.

A prominent citizen dumped his family in the snow in driving up to the door of the Congregational church last Sunday, but no particular damage was done.

Grasshoppers are around a'ready. M. C. Morey showed us a lively specimen Wednesday from a quantity he found hopping about, as though spring had come.

O. P. Allen and E. J. Wood attended the Golden Rule convention at Boston, Wednesday, as delegates from Mizpah chapter, Golden Rule Alliance, of this place.

The officers and teachers of the State Primary School entertained the children at the school last evening by presenting the drama, "The Only Young Man in Town."

There has been a vast amount of mail matter through the post office this week for which St. Valentine is wholly responsible, and it still continues with but little diminution.

William Wellman cut his foot badly while chopping, Tuesday. The ax went through the foot, from the toes nearly to the instep, and one toe was cut off, but it is hoped to save the foot.

About 60 feet of roof on the bleachery at Mr. Goddard's hat shop was crushed in by the snow last week Thursday night. No particular damage was done, aside from the damage to the roof.

F. L. Sanderson, mail agent on the Palmer and Brattleboro route for a number of years past, has sent in his resignation, to take effect April 1st, when he proposes to go to farming in Petersham, where he owns a fine farm.

A. H. Proctor and wife, who formerly had charge of the poor farm in this town, and have had charge of the Warren farm for the past year, have been reengaged by the Warren selectmen for another year, at an advanced salary.

Town Clerk J. B. Shaw has been confined to his house this week with an inflammatory affection of the bowels, and E. S. Gibbons, the Tockwotton House shoe dealer, has been quite sick with scarlet fever, but is now improving.

The next farmers' institute will be held at the Weeks House next Tuesday, with a discussion of the questions, "How can we best increase the winter feed of our stock; how to make the most of what we now have?" and "The growing and feeding of forage crops."

If the Father of our Country had lived until next Wednesday he would have been 150 years old. Although the day is a legal holiday, the anniversary of his birth is not likely to be much observed hereabouts, except by the banks, which will close as usual.

James McLynn was before the district court Thursday for drunkenness, and was assessed a fine and costs amounting to $4.85. James Ryan of Wales, up the same day for an assault, was fined $3 and costs $11.05. Both were committed for want of funds.

The bluebird has come, his cheerful notes having been heard Thursday morning by Dr. Stowe. We fear the happy songster has been deceived by the transient mildness of the air, and hope his toes won't be frozen off in consequence of his putting in so early an appearance.

The snow has melted rapidly the past week, under the influence of a warm sun, aided by Monday's rain, which put an end to the sleighing, and runners have given way to wheels altogether. The white mantle which covered the ground so deeply only a week ago has disappeared almost as quickly as it came.

Hitchcock's skating rink at Wales Hall was open Wednesday and yesterday, and will also be open on Monday, afternoon and evening. Mr. Hitchcock goes to Monson to-day and next Wednesday, and on Friday evening of next week will have a masquerade party in that place. On the following Monday Mr. Hitchcock will open at Northampton.

The Springfield Republican stated in its Palmer items, Thursday, that "a Main street merchant has been recently detected in contemptible frauds upon his customers." Will the Republican please be a little more explicit in its statement? An indefinite charge like this comes very near being itself contemptible, in the wholesale injustice done to our honest and fair-dealing merchants.

Louis E. Moore, of Ilion, N. Y., was unanimously elected treasurer of the Palmer Savings Bank, at the meeting of the trustees last Saturday. Mr. Moore is a native of this State, and began his banking experience in a savings bank at Lawrence some ten years ago, but for nearly seven years has been teller of the national bank at Ilion. He is expected to assume his duties in this place about the 1st of March.

It seems that the New York & New England Railroad managers have not abandoned all thought of building a branch to this place from Southbridge, but are still considering the question, having this route, with one or two others, before them in their plans for making a connection with the Massachusetts Central road. They do not seem to have settled it in their own minds, yet, as to which route they prefer.

One of our shoemakers recently received a letter from an old customer, saying that the boots he made for him seven years ago were about worn out, and he wanted another pair. He accordingly made some and shipped them this week, and he is of the opinion that they are the largest boots ever made in this town. They are 12 inches long inside, and 5 inches across the ball, and weigh within 2 ounces of 7 pounds. It is quite evident that there must be a good many square inches of wear to such a pair of boots.

John Milor of Chester, a brakeman who had been employed on Conductor Warner's train on the Ware River road for a couple of weeks, was fatally injured at Gilbertville last week Friday noon. He was coupling the milk and passenger cars, when the link shot over, and he was badly squeezed between the cars. He was able to walk with assistance, and was taken to his home, but probably received internal injuries, as he failed gradually and died on Monday morning. He had been brakeman on the west end of the Boston & Albany road for some years, and leaves an aged father and mother who were dependent on him for support.

Mr. Editor :—It is now several weeks, I believe, since a lot of new books was received at the library, and they are not yet catalogued. The librarians tell me that it is not their business to catalogue them, and so week after week goes by and the books remain idle on the shelves, and no one has a chance to read them. Now, as the town makes an appropriation every year for the benefit of the library, is it any more than fair to ask that the books should not wait two or three months, or even longer, before they are put into circulation? It must be the duty of some one to see that they are catalogued, and the public given a chance to read them before they are out of date. ONE WHO DRAWS BOOKS.

The following business was transacted at the session of the probate court held in this place on Tuesday: Administration granted on the estates of Horace Hills of Longmeadow, George W. Converse, administrator; Carrie Livermore of Brimfield, Samuel S. Livermore, administrator. Wills were proved of Austin Newell, Everett H. Converse, executor; Lucy Ann Newport of Monson, Erastus Newport, executor; Samuel B. Sheldon of Ludlow, Chauncey L. Buell, executor; Henry Humason of Agawam, Charles C. Wright, executor; Michael Ryan of Holyoke, Patrick F. Ryan, executor; Hannah Charter of Springfield, Lehman M. Charter, executor. Accounts were rendered on estates of George W. Stacy and Emeline A. Rising of Monson and Dennis Shea of Agawam.

Our churches will be again supplied with pastors, if the action taken this week is completed by the acceptance of the candidates called. On Wednesday evening the members of the Universalist parish, after enjoying the cheering effects of the appetizing supper provided by the ladies, met to take action in regard to calling a pastor, and an informal ballot showed 38 votes for Rev. E. A. Perry of Quincy, and 16 scattering. A formal ballot resulted in 48 votes for Mr. Perry and 10 scattering, and the vote for Mr. Perry was then made unanimous. The Congregational parish had a meeting Thursday afternoon to consider the question of uniting with the church in calling Rev. A. F. Newton of Townsend to the pastorate, and voted so to do, 36 to 18, with a salary of $1500 and the parsonage. J. S. Loomis, Dea. James Cowles and A. E. Park were appointed a committee to concur with the church in extending the call to Mr. Newton, and to make all necessary arrangements for his settlement, provided he accepts the call.

The Sunday school institute of the Congregational churches in the Hampden conference will be held at the Congregational church in this place next Wednesday, beginning at 1.30 p. m. Rev. E. H. Byington of Monson will deliver the address of welcome, and Hon. T. W. Bicknell of Boston will speak on "The Teacher and Superintendent," followed by a discussion, opened by Rev. L. D. Calkins of West Springfield. "The Teacher and his Class" will then be considered by Frank R. Young of Springfield, the following discussion being opened by Maj. Edward Ingersoll of Springfield. Rev. W. L. Gaylord of Chicopee will then speak on "The Teacher and the Parents," and E. A. Hubbard of Springfield on "The Teacher and his Work," James L. Johnson of Springfield and Rev. M. S. Howard of Wilbraham opening the discussions which follow. After the adjournment at 5 there will be a collation in the vestry, and at 6.45 there will be a short praise meeting, conducted by Rev. F. M. Sprague of Indian Orchard. Rev. A. E. Dunning of Boston will then take up the subject of "The Teacher's Inspiration," and Rev. D. A. Reed of Springfield "The Teacher and the Harvest," the after discussions being opened by Rev. L. H. Blake of Westfield and Rev. L. H. Cone of Springfield. A general and cordial invitation is extended to all who are interested in Sunday school work, to be present at the meetings.

LUDLOW.

The scholars in district No. 3 visited their teacher, Miss Fannie Ray, at her home last Friday evening, and presented her with two beautiful vases. The presentation speech was made by one of the graduates of the school, and was very elaborate, perhaps more in quantity than quality. It was very neatly responded to by the recipient.

BONDVILLE.

Silas Collis lost a valuable 'coon dog by the cars recently.

Query: Wonder what that valentine was that the boss finisher enjoyed so much?

Our genial coal distributor has started for Northern New York with his bride to spend the honeymoon. We wish "Bert" a pleasant time.

P. H. Potter has sold his house and lot to Chas. Holden of Three Rivers. Mr. Potter will soon remove to Springfield, where he is engaged in the lumber business on the Hill, and where he can "smoke" without interruption.

WARREN.

The cantata "Esther" comes off next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. James Blair Tuesday evening.

The Village Improvement Society met Thursday evening in the vacant room under the town hall.

The Misses Bell & Mather have leased the vacant store in the town hall building, and will open a millinery store.

Miss Savage's reading was listened to by an appreciative audience, though rather small, on account of the stormy evening.

Gen. Stephenson will give the next lecture Thursday evening on "The Battle of Gettysburg," with stereopticon illustrations.

James Mahon of this town was knocked down, beaten and robbed in Worcester Tuesday night by Jack Ryan, who was arrested.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

J. E. Palmer returned from Northern Dakota Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cutler returned from Chicago Wednesday morning.

Miss Eliza Aiken fell on the ice this week, injuring her hip, which will confine her to the house for a week or two. Will her friends please note?

At the meeting of the Ladies' Benevolent Association of Grace Chapel the following officers were elected: Mrs. Henry Cutler, president; Mrs. Phineas Knowlton, vice-president; Mrs. E. W. Wall, secretary and treasurer. The amount expended during the year was $30 toward the church debt, leaving a balance in the treasury of $35.15. The meeting was held at the chapel, Mrs. T. C. Bradway providing, and there was a large attendance.

BRIMFIELD.

Rev. S. V. McDuffee has accepted the invitation of the First Church and society to become their pastor, and expects to commence his pastorate the first Sabbath in March.

Those who arose with the sun Thursday morning had the pleasure of listening to the song of the bluebirds. Four were seen—whether the harbingers of spring, or an embassy to the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Hitchcock that day, was a query.

B. G. Webster and wife, who have acceptably served the town as warden and wardeness at the almshouse for six years, have resigned their positions, to take effect April 1st. The selectmen have contracted with John A. Rice and wife, who have held a like position at Sturbridge for four years, to take the position at that time.

THORNDIKE.

A performance entitled "Excursion to Ireland" was presented at Murdock's hall, Wednesday evening.

The train due here at 10.30 narrowly escaped collision with a load of brick that was set on Whitney's crossing Monday forenoon.

A sociable was held at the vestry of the Congregational church Thursday afternoon and evening. These gatherings are very popular, and are largely attended.

There was considerable disturbance on our streets Wednesday night, occasioned by poor rum. One of the participants is now wanting in teeth and portions of jaw-bone.

At the annual meeting of the Thorndike Co. stockholders in Boston, Tuesday, the following directors were chosen: Francis J. Humphrey, Charles H. Fiske, George F. Fabyan, A. T. Perkins and Samuel Haines.

WALES.

Auctions are in vogue this spring.

Constable Farrington arrested James Ryan Wednesday for an assault while drunk.

C. M. Thompson sold the personal property of W. A. Thompson, deceased, last Saturday.

Jasper Lyon sold his personal property last Tuesday, having disposed of his farm two months ago.

O. Crawford sells his personal property today, preparatory to taking his family to Texas, where he has been for a year.

Frank Green and J. F. N. Gouly left home Tuesday to see the world, without leave. Mr. Gouly has advertised his son, forbidding any one harboring him or paying him his wages should he earn anything.

The ladies of the Baptist society held their annual fair and festival on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, with the best of results, by which their treasury was well replenished. Their fancy table was excellent, containing many nice articles, and the supper, as usual, was well provided.

THREE RIVERS.

The Union Sunday school will give a temperance concert next Sunday evening, commencing at 7 o'clock.

Ezra Forte's eyes, injured so badly by hot Babbitt metal last week, are much improved, and it is now thought that both may be saved.

The last entertainment in the Y. M. C. A. lecture course for 1881–82 was a concert by the Amherst College Glee Club last evening, in the Baptist church.

W. A. McKillop of Newton, who supplied the Baptist pulpit last Sunday, gave a very interesting lecture on temperance in the Y. M. C. A. rooms Monday evening.

R. E. Knowlton and A. A. Milliken were delegates from Bethel chapter, Golden Rule Alliance, to the Supreme Parliament, which convened in Boston last Wednesday.

The stockholders of the Otis Co. met at Boston Tuesday and chose these directors: Charles H. Fiske, F. W. Welch, F. J. Humphrey, John Collomore and George F. Fabyan.

At a meeting of the Union Evangelical church Tuesday evening, it was decided by a unanimous vote to invite Rev. W. L. Noyes, of Ashland, N. H., to become pastor of the church.

Rev. John Ricketts of Wales, who preached in the Union church last Sunday, will preach for the Baptists next Sunday, and his son, Rev. C. H. Ricketts of Thorndike, will supply the Union pulpit.

Rev. Charles Chinique, for 25 years a Roman Catholic priest, but for the past 23 years a Protestant minister, and who is soon to hold revival meetings with the French Protestants in Springfield, is expected to visit this village and hold some meetings here before long.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

This year's crop of valentines was by no means short, as our postmaster can attest.

If the chap who wrote "Beautiful Snow" had to get about in our streets in their present condition, he would sing a different tune.

Rev. F. M. Sprague exchanged pulpits with Rev. Chas. Ricketts of Thorndike last Sunday. Mr. Ricketts was much liked by the congregation.

The employes of the Chapman Valve Manufacturing Co. held a meeting last Saturday night, with the object of forming a benefit association. A committee of three was chosen to draft a constitution and by-laws, and report at a meeting subject to their call.

The fellowship meeting at the Evangelical church last Wednesday was a very pleasant affair, and every one seemed to enjoy it. A few of "us girls," assisted by a number of matrons, were as careful during the noon hour in providing the good things for the inner man as is their wont.

A party of spiritualists held forth in Wight's hall Sunday night, and had a slim audience. Only one person present recognized any of the spirits, but some mischief-making disembodied spirit set a guitar sailing round the head of a young skeptic who ventured inside the cabinet, and nearly smashed his "specs" by letting it drop on his arms a trifle too close to his face for pleasure.

The local land league will present the Irish drama "Eily O'Connor" in Wight's hall on the evening of the 21st, when John Lynch will sing Irish patriotic songs, and it is expected that the Columbia Quartette will be secured to sing also. The entertainment will close with the roaring Ethiopian sketch, "Jumbo Jum," with J. E. Stone as Jumbo. Field and Gardner's orchestra will furnish music, and a good time may be expected.

MONSON.

The monster whale is summering in New Orleans this winter.

William H. King has bought J. Moulton's foundry at Brookfield.

G. H. Newton has his auction rooms completed, and is ready for business in that line.

Richardson's Orchestra of Worcester gave a concert at Central hall Thursday evening.

An order for about 300 carloads of paving stones for Chicago is now being filled by W. N. Flynt & Co.

The sleigh-ride party to Brimfield last week was not intended for political effect, yet it was plainly to be seen that the majority were in favor of the "Munroe Doctrine."

John A. Orcutt, Jr., broke his leg by a slip on the ice when returning from church last Sabbath evening. This should be a warning to all church-goers not to fall—out by the way.

There is talk of making telephonic connections with Stafford Springs. The Massachusetts Telephone Co. offer to furnish and put on the wire, if the Stafford company will set the poles.

L. A. Shaw of this town has ten sheep, from which he has raised 20 lambs the past year, the total income from the flock for the year being $95. He is now anxious to hear that some other Monson farmer, "or any other man," has done better than this.

Norcross Bros. have opened the south store in Central Block, and display a fine line of hardware, groceries, paints and oils, fruits, etc. The store has been improved somewhat in its internal arrangement, and is one of the pleasantest in this section. Their stock is all new and fresh and the proprietors propose to keep the best that the market affords in all their departments. It will be worth any one's while to take a look into the store and see their fine display.

The former residents of Ware are dropping away. Mrs. Asenath Goodwill, aged 72, a native of Ware, and mother of Mrs. Daniel Sanford, died in Prescott, Iowa, Feb. 6th. Jason Thayer, 83, father of Mrs. William Cummings, died at South Amherst the 1st inst.

Work is progressing rapidly on the Massachusetts Central between here and Gilbertville. It is expected that cars will be running here early in June. There are about 3 1-2 miles of land damages that have not been settled yet, within the limits of the town of Ware. Some of our farmers seem to want to get for a few acres of land more than half the valuation of their whole farms including buildings.

FIRES.—A locomotive spark set fire to some pools of oil in the low ground near Olean, N. Y., last Sunday evening, and the flames soon communicated to three iron tanks, containing 105,000 barrels of oil, which was burned, at a loss of $100,000.——A piano case factory in New York was burned Sunday night. Loss $130,000.

There is talk at Hartford of replacing the high school building recently burned by a structure but one story high, with a large and well-lighted hall in the center, surrounded by rooms with ample exits and thorough ventilation. There will be no stairs to climb, and the advantages of such a building will be numerous.

VACCINATION.

Correspondence of the Journal.

There sometimes occurs epidemically among cattle a disease known as vaccinia, or cow-pox. Cows which become affected have an eruption developed upon the surface of their bodies, which is mostly confined to the teats and udder; for this reason those employed in milking them sometimes become inoculated in the hands. It was noticed many years ago that people who had been inoculated in this way enjoyed remarkable immunity from small-pox.

About the middle of the last century a farmer named Benjamin Jessy, living in Gloucestershire, England, is said to have purposely inoculated his family with the virus of cow-pox. His act was looked upon with abhorrence by his neighbors, and he was severely condemned for poisoning the blood of his children with a vile cattle disease which it was thought might even transform them into beasts.

About that time there lived in this same county of Gloucester a physician, Edward Jenner, who thought much on the subject of cow-pox and its relation to small-pox. He became convinced that the cow-pox, when it was artificially induced in man, destroyed the individual's susceptibility to small-pox. In 1798 he made public his discoveries and published a remarkable work upon the cow-pox.

He was met by opposition on every hand; by physicians, as well as the laity; by clergymen and the press. He was ridiculed and caricatured; but his discoveries triumphed and vaccination became popularized. It was one of the glories of American science that the United States was among the first nations to accept the inestimable benefits of the discovery. In 1799, only a year after the publication of Jenner's work, Dr. Benjamin Waterhouse, the first professor of medicine in Harvard University, introduced the practice in Boston.

But vaccination has not outlived all opposition. Notwithstanding it is probably the greatest boon conferred by science on mankind; notwithstanding it has saved millions of lives and prevented a frightful amount of disfigurement, there is still enough fanaticism, superstition and ignorance among civilized communities to prevent its universal employment.

That vaccination, properly performed, and with sufficient frequency, does insure against small-pox in the vast majority of cases, there is not the shadow of a doubt. The possible dangers arising from the operation have been grossly exaggerated, and are mostly bugbears of superstition. Fanaticism and charlatanism can always appeal to ignorance with more overpowering arguments than science and reason, and are ever ready to circumvent the most benevolent and disinterested labors of philanthropists. So it is with respect to vaccination; Bergh raves on one side, and Lydia Pinkham peers with her familiar visage out of the advertising columns of the daily and weekly press and raises a warning cry on the other. But truth is invincible, and vaccination remains the safeguard of society against a most lotahsome and terrible disease.

The greatest danger to be apprehended in vaccination is the possibility that the operation be improperly performed, and the individual rest with a false idea of security. Only properly qualified persons should assume the responsibility of performing the operation and pronouncing upon its success. Blood-poisoning has undoubtedly occurred when the vaccine lymph has been taken from a diseased person, but such unfortunate occurrences are exceedingly rare, and can be prevented by always using virus taken directly from the heifer. It is also desirable to use bovine virus for another reason, as there is good evidence that long humanized virus may have its protective powers impaired.

The researches of Pasteur, a brief account of whose work the writer published in a recent issue of the JOURNAL, indicate an extensive application of the principle of vaccination to the prevention of other contagious diseases.

At the present time small-pox is unusually prevalent in the United States. The periodical occurrence of these epidemics indicates the necessity of constantly guarding against them by a system of thorough vaccination. No one has a right to neglect the employment of this means of prevention. Everybody owes it as a duty to society to thoroughly protect himself in this way, for every case of small-pox may become the starting point of an epidemic. It is incumbent on every one to remember and honor the name of the illustrious man who first introduced vaccination to the world, Edward Jenner.

MEDICUS.

Monson, Feb. 16th, 1882.

There is to be a meeting of the Hampden County School Committees' Association in the vestry of the First Baptist church at Springfield next Tuesday, beginning at 10 a. m., when these interesting topics will be discussed: "What can School Committees do to Make their Schools more Efficient?" "How shall we Educate our Pupils so as to fit them for the Practical Duties of Life, such as Farming and the Various Industrial Pursuits?" "What can be done by School Committees and Teachers to Promote Morals, Manners, and the Development of Character?" "Are the Studies in the Schools of the Smaller Towns Sufficient to Meet the Demands of the Age?" Among those who will speak on these topics are Secretary Dickinson and Agent Hubbard of the board of education, Rev. W. H. Eaton of Westfield, Supt. Stone of Springfield, Rev. Washington Gladden, and others.

The Scientific American, whose office was burned out in the recent fire at New York, has secured new and commodious quarters at 261 Broadway, corner of Warren street, and fronting towards the City hall. Messrs. Munn & Co. have suffered no interruption of business, as their printing was done in another building, and their books, subscription lists, etc., were preserved in safes, and they are prepared to attend to all branches of the patent business as promptly as ever.

Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden of Springfield makes this interesting statement: "I wish to record my own conviction, drawn from a pretty extensive knowledge of journalists and of clergymen, that the average editor is a little more fair and Christian in his dealings with truth and in his treatment of those who differ from him than the average parish minister."

Mormonism is advancing into Arizona. Some of its most valuable land has been taken up by Mormon settlers and stocked with large herds of cattle.

Our Book Table.

Harper's Magazine for March comes to hand some days earlier than usual, and is a welcome guest, its attractions being fully up to its ordinary standard of excellence. The frontispiece, a quaint picture from a drawing by E. A. Abbey, is very pleasing and contains a story in its suggestiveness. The opening article, "Old New York Coffee Houses," by John Austin Stevens, describes the mercantile and public life of that city before the Revolution, and is graphically illustrated by Pyle and Hosier. The biographical sketch of Paul Bert, Gambetta's Minister of Instruction, is accpanied by an excellent portrait. W. H. Bishop concludes his Mexican series, and Prof. Simon Newcomb has a popular article on "Small Telescopes," how they are made and may be used, each contribution having seventeen illustrations. A historical paper of interest, entitled "Washington's Acceptance of the First Presidency," is from the pen of George Ticknor Curtis. The serials increase in interest, "Anne" taking hold of the reader's attention and feelings, while "Prudence" promises to be an interesting love story as well as a faithful delineation of London society. There are several fine poems, some of them illustrated, the editorials are filled with entertaining matter, while the drawer contains contributions from well-known and popular authors.

The publication is announced of a "Hand-Book on Mormonism," by J. M. Coyner, who for seven years resided at Salt Lake City as principal of the Salt Lake Collegiate Institute, and thus had opportunity to collect facts on the subject possessed by very few. It is a collection of articles touching upon every phase of the "great public shame" existing in our fair land, selected from the best publications and best writers of the present time as well as eyewitnesses. It is a book of 100 pages, and contains much valuable information in a small compass on a subject of vital importance to every American citizen. Price, postage paid, 50 cents a single copy; 5 copies for $2. Address, J. M. Coyner, or Rev. R. G. McNiece, Salt Lake City, Utah.

The North American Review for March presents a striking array of articles, every one of which possesses the characteristic of contemporaneous interest. First we have a contribution from Senator George F. Edmunds, on "The Conduct of the Guiteau Trial." Ex-Minister Edward F. Noyes communicates the results of his observations of political affairs in France under the title, "The Progress of the French Republic," "In Trial by Jury," Judge Edward A. Thomas describes the social condition under which our jury system had its origin, and notes its defects in view of the altered relations of modern life. John Fiske makes an able and ingenious analysis of that great intellectual movement, the Reformation, deducing therefrom the "True Lesson of Protestanism." In "Law for the Indians," Rev. William Justin Harsha endeavors to demonstrate that the one rational and effectual cure for our Indian troubles is to extend the jurisdiction of the civil and criminal courts over all the social relations of the red man. Prof. A. B. Palmer writes on the "Fallacies of Homeopathy." Finally, Hon. Neal Dow contributes an article on the "Results of Prohibitory Legislation," demonstrating the success of the efforts to suppress the liquor traffic in Maine.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

A JOURNAL FOR MECHANICS!

The publishers of the "MECHANICAL NEWS," an illustrated, practical mechanical Journal, for eleven years published at Springfield, Ohio, have decided to remove their paper to their eastern office, No. 110 Liberty street, New York, on or about the 1st of March. The "MECHANICAL NEWS" is one of the best journals of its class published, and it is the intention of the proprietors to still further improve it. In order to do this economically and in the best possible manner, they find that it is essential to remove the same to the Metropolis of the United States, where they can make the paper first-class in every respect. The "NEWS" is a handsome sixteen-page Journal, printed on fine paper, with engravings of the latest mechanical devices, and subjects that cannot fail to interest every reader. They propose not only to make it popular with the artisan, but a welcome visitor to every mechanic's household. The publishers send a specimen copy and premium list free on application. Their subscription price is very low, only ONE DOLLAR per year, and a useful premium included.

Ben Bosen.

Ben Bosen was a sailor man,
But not a main assailer,
Therefore he could not whale a man,
He'd only man a whaler.

He'd sail the seas and seize the sail,
And when he'd heave the lead
He would be led to heave, and pale,
Throw up the sponge, most dead.

He'd eye his pipe and pipe his eye
When smoking was forbidden;
When wet he'd say that he was dry,
And search for liquor hidden.

Sometimes he'd see a ship; sometimes
He'd only ship a sea.
The climes he saw were mostly climbs
Upon the mast to see.

Ben's hard-tack was to tack the ship;
Yet never man was sooner
Than he, when in the slip, to slip
And quick attack a schooner.

He was aboard when on the sea;
When on the shore a boarder;
Though not a boarding pirate, he
Was then a pie rate boarder.

Though Ben could not direct at sea,
At sea he could die wrecked;
His resurrection day would be
The day they'd raise her wrecked.

One day a shark went swimming by
And Ben, alas, he filled him.
No shark, they said, could make him die,
Unless the shock first killed him.

SAVED BY AN ALBATROSS.

A singular story has been related to us by the master of the barque Gladstone, which arrived from London last Saturday. On the 22d of last month, while the vessel was in latitude 42° south and longitude 90° east, a seaman fell overboard from the starboard gangway. The barque was scudding along with a rough sea and moderate wind, but on the alarm "man overboard" being given, she was rounded to, and the starboard life-boat was lowered, manned by the chief officer and four men. A search for the unfortunate man was made, but owing to the roughness of the sea he could not be discovered, but the boat steered to the spot where he was last seen. Here they found him floating, but exhausted, clinging for bare life to the legs of a huge albatross. The bird had swooped down on the man while the latter was struggling with the waves and attempted to peck him with his powerful beak. Twice the bird attacked his prey unsuccessfully, being beaten off by the desperate sailor, battling with two enemies—the water and the albatross—both greedy and insatiable. For the third time the huge white form of the bird hovered over the seaman preparatory to a final swoop. The bird, eager for its meal, fanned its victim with its wide-spread wings. Suddenly a thought occurred to him that the huge form so close to his face might become his involuntary rescuer. Quick as thought he reached up and seized the bird, which he proceeded to strangle with all his might. The huge creature struggled with wings and paddles to free itself. In the contest the sailor was beaten black and blue, and cruelly lacerated, but he held his own, and slowly the bird quivered and died. The carcass floated lightly on the waves, the feathers forming a comfortable support for the exhausted man, who had so narrowly escaped a lingering death. But another danger awaited him. He was not much of a swimmer, and the excitement of the extraordinary conflict began to tell on him. He was faint and grew giddy. But with one arm around the albatross's body under the wing, and the hand clutching the bird's feet, the sailor awaited his chance of rescue. Presently he heard his comrades shout from the boat, and in a few minutes more was safe on board the barque, though a good deal shaken and exhausted.—Sidney Telegraph, Nov. 22.

Tommy was a little rogue, whom his mother had hard work to manage. Their house in the country was raised a few feet from the ground, and Tommy, to escape a well-deserved whipping, ran from his mother and crept under the house. Presently the father came home, and hearing where the boy had taken refuge, crept under to bring him out. As he approached on his hands and knees, Tommy asked, "Is she after you, too?"—Baptist Weekly.

A correspondent of the Ohio Farmer has discovered a remedy for the worms that play so great havoc among currant bushes. The ordinary black ant is an inveterate enemy of the currant worm. He encourages ant colonies near the bushes, and the result has been that while his neighbors had few or no currants, his crop was abundant.

"Happy New Year, Mr. Miggs," exclaimed a neighbor, as he encountered that estimable man trudging along with a most resolute expression of countenance. "Happy New Year," returned Miggs. "Made up your mind to turn over a new leaf, eh?" "Yes. Ever since I've been married Mrs. Miggs has bullied me. Hereafter I'm going to bully Mrs. Miggs."

Texas Siftings tells of a card-playing clergyman who, on a recent Sunday, just before divine service began, was approached by the organist, who asked, "what shall I play?" referring to the opening hymn. "What kind of a hand have you got?" was the absent-minded response.

"Make Somebody Glad," urges a recent poem. Hundreds of young men can comply with this request by simply bidding her goodnight two or three hours earlier on Sunday nights.—Norristown Herald.

GEOGRAPHY FOR ADULT CLASSES.

"Of what is the surface of the earth composed?"

"Of corner lots, mighty poor roads, railroad tracks, base ball grounds, cricket fields and skating rinks."

"What portion of the globe is water?"

"About three-fourths. Sometimes they add a little gin and nutmeg to it."

"What is a town?"

"A town is a considerable collection of houses and inhabitants, with four or five men who 'run the party' and lend money at fifteen per cent interest."

"What is a city?"

"A city is an incorporated town, with a mayor who believes that the whole world shakes when he happens to fall flat on a crosswalk."

"What is commerce?"

"Borrowing $5 for a day or two and dodging the lender for a day or two."

"Name the different races."

"Horse race, boat race, bicycle race and racing around to find a man to indorse your note."

"Into how many classes is mankind divided?"

"Seven; being enlightened, civilized, half civilized, savage, too utter, not worth a cent and Indian agents."

"What nations are called enlightened?"

"Those which have the most wars, the worst laws and produce the worst criminals."

"How many motions has the earth?"

"That's according to how you mix your drinks and which way you go home."

"What is the earth's axis?"

"The line passing between New York and Chicago."

"What causes day and night?"

"Day is caused by night getting tired out. Night is caused by everybody taking the street car and going home to supper."

"What is a map?"

"A map is a drawing to show the jury where Smith stood when Jones gave him a lift under the eye."

"What is a mariner's compass?"

"A jug holding four gallons."—Detroit Free Press.

A SENSIBLE GIRL.

Some months ago a young English woman came to New York to marry a young man to whom she was affianced in England, and who had come to this country two years before to engage in business. She was to marry him at the home of a friend of her mother, with whom she was stopping. During the time she was making up her wedding outfit, he came to see her one evening when he was just "full" enough to be foolish. She was shocked and pained beyond measure. She then learned for the first time that he was in the habit of drinking frequently to excess. She immediately stopped her preparations, and told him she could not marry him. He protested that "she would drive him to distraction," promised her he would never drink another drop, etc.

"No," said she, "I dare not trust my future happiness with a man who has formed such a beastly habit. I came three thousand miles to marry a man I loved, and now, rather than to marry a drunkard, I will go three thousand miles back again." And she went.

Let all respectable women imitate her example, and all men who love law and order, and see if the passengers who are on the road to ruin won't conclude to take the temperance route.

It is one of the unexplainable things of moral ethics how people decide so promptly as to how little rain and bad weather it takes to keep them away from prayer meeting and how much is required to keep them away from a good show.

The dust heap is absolutely necessary for fowls. It cleanses their feathers and skin from vermin and impurities, promotes the curicular or skin secretions, and is materially instrumental in preserving their health.

"Ike has an irritating skin disease," Mrs. Partington says: "Charlotte russe broke out all over him, and if he hadn't worn the Injun beads as an omelet, it would doubtless have culminated fatally."

Add a little glycerine to the grease applied to harness, and it will be kept in a soft and pliable state, in spite of the ammonia exhaled from the stable, which tends to make it brittle.

STONES in the KIDNEYS

AND BLADDER EXPELLED—LONG SUFFERING OF ONE OF TROY'S BEST PEOPLE—A LUCKY MAN.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr. Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-Dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case, and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 7-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers.

Yours truly, JAMES ANDREWS.
No. 10 Marshal St., Ida Hill.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in like fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers haue received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

STATEMENT Under Oath!

"I have been afflicted for twenty years with an obstinate skin disease, called by some M. D's. Psoriasis, and others Leprosy, commencing on my scalp, and, in spite of all I could do, with the help of the most skillful doctors, it slowly but surely extended until a year ago this winter it covered my entire person in the form of dry scales. For the last three years I have been unable to do any labor, and suffering intensely all the time. Every morning there could be nearly a dustpanful of scales taken from the sheet on my bed, some of them half as large as the envolope containing this letter. In the latter part of the winter my skin commenced cracking open. I tried everything, almost, that could be thought of, without any relief. The 12th of June I started West, in hopes I could reach the Hot Springs. I reached Detroit, and was so low I thought I should have to go to the hospital, but finally got as far as Lansing, Mich., where I had a sister living. One Dr. —— treated me about two weeks, but did me no good. All thought I had but a short time to live. I earnestly prayed to die. Cracked through the skin all over my back, across my ribs, arms, hands, feet badly swollen, toe nails came off, finger nails dead and hard as bone, hair dead, dry and lifeless as old straw. Oh, my God! how I did suffer!

"My sister, Mrs. E. H. Davis, had a small part of a box of Cuticura in the house. She wouldn't give up; said 'We will try Cuticura.' Some was applied on one hand and arm. Eureka! there was relief; stopped the terrible burning sensation from the word go. They immediately got the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier), Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures). I commenced by taking one tablespoonful of Resolvent three times a day, after meals; had a bath once a day, water about blood heat; used Cuticura Soap freely; applied Cuticura morning and evening. Result, returned to my home in just six weeks from the time I left, and my skin as smooth as this sheet of paper.

THE BEST AND THE RICHEST

BLOOD, BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

CAREFULLY PREPARED,
THOROUGHLY TESTED,
ACCEPTABLE & RELIABLE

The Phosphates of the Wheat are its most valuble food property, and are, when properly prepared, the most acceptable nutriment with which to build up the system.

The Blood, Brain and Nerves are the forces which bear the strain of every day work and life, and in order to save sickness it is wise to

BUILD FOR HEALTH.

Wheat Bitters are prepared, not by fermentation, but by solution, and are richest in the Phosphates, while the starch and impure matter are eliminated. These make in themselves a basis, to which is added the best and choicest medicinal qualities, necessary to make it a tonic and bitter. It is at once healthful, pleasant to the taste and must not be confounded with the thousand and one cheap alcoholic bitters which are sold as cure-alls. Medicine is doubly effective when used with food, so as to nourish while it corrects.

AN EAST BLOW.

The summer hotel among the mountains was almost deserted. Half a dozen of the late-staying guests were gathered in the little parlor for their last evening. A high September wind turned their thoughts to the desolateness of the winter months in the White Hills. Maud Wellington, always a leader in talk and action, called to the landlord:

"Come here, please, Mr. Little; tell us how you ever live through the winter?"

"Wa'al, you jest come up here and try one of our east blows! I tell you, you don't know anything about the maountings. You only come up here when it's warm and nice, and Mr. George he drives his team around, what d'ye call it?"

"Tandem," suggested George.

"Yes, tantrum; and he takes you girls to drive, and it's all very pretty. Jest let him be here in the winter, and he'd drive tantrum, sure enough."

"Wouldn't it be fun?" asked Maud. "Would you really take us in, if we came up next winter?"

"I guess most likely I could. You'd have to kinder put up with things, though. I'd be real glad to see you, naow; the winters is awful lonely!"

"I am in earnest, and I will come if the rest will. I think it would be very jolly," said Maud.

"Yes, quite too awfully ghastly jolly," murmured her brother George, whose slang was overwhelming.

The others all promised they would join her if she formed a party, and the next morning they separated, and forgot all about the plan and the promise, as people do.

It was late in December. The holidays were approaching. Maud Wellington was restless and dissatisfied. The season had been very disappointing. Everybody was dull and stupid; Germans were tiresome, dinners more so and she was tired of Boston and every one in it. And all this was because a certain Thomas Sedgwick Thornton had not appeared in the city, as she had expectd. It was none the less true because she would have denied it, and that she had always laughed at him, and professed to hold him in the most perfect contempt. She knew perfectly well that he was a hard-working lawyer in New York, with little time for holiday-making, but she was quite unreasonable enough to think that such trifles as business made no difference. He ought to have admired her enough to have made any sacrifices, and have made haste to continue the summer's acquaintance. It made no difference to her, also, that there were many others as assiduous in their devotion as he was remiss. He was the Mordecai at the gate, and she was unhappy. The wind howling round the corner of the house took her thoughts back to the last evening in the mountains, and a sudden resolve made her spring to her feet.

"Mother," she cried, rushing into the warm library, where her mother sat dozing before the fire, "I have made up my mind. We will go up to the mountains, and see how they look with the snow on them."

"You crazy girl! we won't do anything of the sort."

Mrs. Wellington always made a point of seeming to oppose her daughter's plans, but she always did what her children told her to do. Maud wasted no words in entreaty, but coolly told her that she must go, without more ado.

With Maud to decide was to act. George was delighted with the prospect of such a "lark;" he had not known what to do with the holidays. Notes were immediately sent to those who had been with them when the proposition was made, and to several others who might be congenial spirits. When they had written nearly all, Maud said with perfect carelessness:

"I suppose you will have to write to that Mr. Thornton. I don't think he would add much to the general hilarity, but I am afraid it won't do to leave him out and ask all the rest who were there."

"Right you are!" said George. "I'll send an invite to the old duffer; he's not half a bad fellow after all. Of course he won't put in an appearance."

But it is the impossible which happens. For some occult reason, Mr. Thornton chose to join this wild expedition, and presented himself at the appointed time at the rendezvous. With the exception of himself and poor Mrs. Wellington, who looked already victimized, it was as gay a party as Boston could furnish.

As usual, it was Maud who was leader and prime favorite. But she was admirably seconded by three of her friends, only a little less brilliant and daring than she. Then there were two or three society men, who would have gone anywhere that Maud and her set proposed. Little did they care for the grandeur of mountain scenery in its severe winter dress, but the trip promised much fun and unlooked for opportunities for carrying out certain intentions. Last and noisiest of all came George Wellington, a Harvard sophomore, with an equally reckless and hair-brained classmate, whom the young ladies alternately petted, snubbed, and used as foils in their more serious schemes.

Mr. Thornton felt out of his element, as he had done so many times during the summer. He was not keyed to the same pitch of high spirits and unceasing gayety. He was grave, quiet—a man who was terribly in earnest about everything that he did. From the first moment that he saw her he became fascinated with Maud, against his will and better judgment. Her beauty, wit, caprices, would not let themselves be forgotten. He was angry with her, he heartily disapproved of her, a dozen times a day; and then, when he was indignant with her, he discovered that he loved her with a love which he could not reason away nor live down. He was more bitterly enraged with her than ever, to-day, as the cars rapidly bore them toward the mountains. He cursed himself and his folly in having joined them. No one seemed to want him. Maud, with her usual perverseness, had given him a careless greeting, and turned away to lavish her brightest smiles and merriest speeches on Gilbert Livingston, one whom he cordially hated and despised. Mrs. Wellington alone seemed to need him. She was nervous, weak, and timid, dreading the journey, and unable to control her children's madness, so she clung to Thornton with instinctive trust in his sober strength. He never dreamed, being blind as men are, that Maud saw every motion that he made, that she had so placed herself as to hear every word he spoke. He only saw, with wrath and shame, that she was flirting openly, desperately, with that soulless, brainless Livingston.

But even Thornton shook off his gloom when they came among the hills. The highest peaks were white with snow, reflecting the setting sun with dazzling brilliancy against the marvelous blue of the sky. It was very cold, but clear and still, when they left the cars for their drive of a few miles. Mr. Little met them with his six-horse stage; the wind had not left enough snow on the rising ground for sleighing, to Maud's regret. It was an exhilarating drive. The air was like wine, and made each inhalation an increasing joy. The laughter and the sweet, ringing voices of the girls no longer jarred upon him; he was a boy again himself, and startled them by his wit and gayety. Maud was delighted. She warmed toward him, and left poor Livingston shivering out of the sunlight of her favor. It was all going to be a perfect success, she thought, and blessed herself for the inspiration.

The hotel, when they reached it, after the stars had come out superbly in the clear air, looked as if prepared for a siege. It was closed, except a few rooms on the ground floor of the west and south sides. On the north and east every blind was securely fastened.

"Have you had any east blow yet?" asked Maud, as they dashed up to the door.

"No, miss, not yet," said the landlord. "I guess we will hev, pretty quick though. The maountings hev kinder looked like it all day."

"I hope it will come. I should consider our whole trip a failure if it does not."

Mr. Little shook his head and smiled doubtfully. "I guess when you've seed one, you won't be likely to want to see another very quick."

The next day was gloriously clear. There was no wind stirring as yet. It was this stillness that roused the forebodings of the landlord. His guests had a magnificent walk, they said; they climbed part way up Starr King, and had a view a hundred times more superb than they ever imagined it could be. It had been hard work climbing over the slippery rocks, and they came back to the house delightfully tired and in undiminished spirits. The general hilarity flagged not during the cozy evening round the open fire, and one and all pronounced their satisfaction and delight—all except Mrs. Wellington, who had not stirred from the fire all day, and who grew more and more nervous as the talk about the expected east blow continued.

In the morning Mr. Little's predictions were verified. The city people's ears were startled by what he had so often described as the "roaring of the maountings." This strange, steadily increasing roar, which seemed so inexplicable, filled some with alarm, some with most enjoyable excitement. Mr. Little called them to see the "churning of the clouds up the chasm," and, looking they forgot to smile because he pronounced the "ch" of the last word as he did the first. It was a sight, as the angry clouds came up, rolling over and over, as it seemed, through the gap which opened out toward the east.

Within the house there were hurried preparations. Mrs. Little and her sons went about making everything as fast as possible, while her husband and his two men went to the barns to give the cattle and horses food and water to last them till the storm had passed; for when it reached its height, neither man nor beast could stand against it. Thornton, George, and his classmate prepared to go down to the barn and help them, for the time seemed very short. Every moment the tempest increased in violence. Quick as thought Maud wrapped herself in her fur cloak, and said she would go with them. Her mother was so distressed that she would have desisted, but that she caught Thornton's look of disapproval and disgust, she thought, and then nothing could have prevented her. Seizing her brother's hand, she rushed out of the house. The barns were west of the hotel, some little distance down the hill. The wind carried them on as if they were straws, and drove them breathless against the building. Maud had never dreamed of its force. When they were inside the barn, and the door had been closed with difficulty, Thornton said to her sternly:

"This is perfect folly. If you do not go back to the house instantly, you will not be able to go at all."

Mr. Little said the same; the storm roared so that they could scarcely hear each other even then. Maud was bitterly ashamed of her folly, bnt not one whit afraid. Even Thornton could not help admiring even while he blamed her. He asked Little to take her and "the boys" back to the house. He himself, being strong and large, would stay and help the men. It was the best plan. The four had a hard fight to return. Holding each other's hand, one keeping behind the other as much as possible, they struggled up the hill. Once they fell flat to the earth, but regaining their feet after a moment, they toiled on, and reached the protection of the house. Little said he had never seen the "blow come on so fast." There was no use in trying to go back to the barn; the men would do what was necessary, and his strength was half used up by his efforts already. After Maud had regained her breath she went to the window, and would not stir or speak. Her eyes were fixed on the barns. The others gathered around the fire in awed silence. The terror of the storm was upon them. It seemed as if nothing could stand against its violence. Mrs. Wellington was nearly fainting with fright. She was certain that the house would go. Once Maud turned and said, in a strained, hard voice:

"Mr. Little, how long does this sort of thing generally last?"

"Wa'al, it begins abaout noon to be the worst, and it keeps it up till next morning."

"Ought not the men to come up pretty soon?" she asked again, with ill-concealed anxiety.

"Oh, yes, they will be up directly, I guess."

But they did not come. Once Maud saw three figures creep around the partially sheltered side of the building, but when they reached its front they were struck down, and she saw them crawl on their hands and knees back into the sheds. The full horror of the circumstance struck her. Calling Mr. Little, she told him what she had seen.

"Then they must stay there till it is over?" she said, in a low, unnatural voice.

"Do try to help them," she pleaded, so earnestly that the men all resolved to try, though it was of little use. Taking a rope, Little tied all the volunteers firmly together; even the "howling swell," Livingston, as George called him, offered to help. When all was ready, they crept along the western side of the house with little difficulty. But when they reached the corner, they went down like planks. They tried again and again, and then came back into the house tired and disheartened.

The short afternoon had passed; the early darkness made the terror of the storm more awful. Maud still strained her eyes through the deepening gloom. The storm at that moment was at its height. Clutching the window-frame tightly with her fingers, she pressed her dilated eyes against the pane, and saw with speechless horror the roof of the large barn swept off as if it had been paper. It was all the more terrible because not a sound of the falling timbers could be heard above the ceaseless roaring of the wind.

It was an awful night. No one thought of sleeping. They clustered together about the fire in silent terror. From time to time Mr. Little spoke reassuringly. There was no danger for themselves, he said; the house was firmly built; large beams passed diagonally from floor to ceiling through the partition walls; it was not possible that they could give way. But the awed hearts were not easily assured. Maud alone had no thoughts for herself or the safety of the house. She had seen the roofless barn, and she strove to picture the fate of Thornton, and the two men with him, without food, without fire, with no roof to shelter them, and perhaps crushed by falling timbers, for it had been too dark to see the extent of the disaster. She told no one of the sight which she had witnessed. Only she and Little knew what had happened. All that was best in her came to the surface that long, agonizing night. Never again could she silence her better, nobler self. Very base and contemptible seemed all her wiles, her caprices, her coquetries. It had been her wild folly that had placed Thornton in this danger. If she had not delayed the men they could have returned to the house before it was too late. If he were alive when morning dawned he should know how bitterly she had repented.

She remembered how she had trifled with him when once, the summer before, he had told her that he loved her more than he had ever loved any being before or ever could again. She had not meant to drive him away from her; she had only meant to tease him for a little. But he had taken it all in earnest, and now, of course, he had ceased to think of her except to despise her. If he had continued to love her, would he have been so long silent? She little knew that the man who was all sincerity could not understand the insincere.

He would never care for her now, of course, and she loved him with all the force of her strong, ungoverned heart. After that night of agony she could never be the same.

The pale daylight dawned upon her white face. The wind died slowly down as the sun came up the troubled sky. The ruin of the night was revealed to the weary watchers.

Three men came slowly up the hill, tired, hungry, half-frozen, but safe. They made a comparatively warm nest for themselves in the hay, where they had passed the sleepless night. The part of the barn which had sheltered them and the cattle and horses had been uninjured, and not a man or beast had been hurt by the falling beams.

Mrs. Wellington could not be induced to remain an unnecessary moment in the terrible place, and late in the afternoon the subdued party were in the cars returning to Boston. Thornton confessed that it was the most uncomfortable night he had ever passed, but that he would cheerfully have undergone far greater hardships for the reward that it brought him. Before they reached the city he had learned of the agony which the night's suspense had been to Maud, and she had acknowledged her love for him in answer to the passionate reiteration of his devotion to her. And this was the work of an East Blow!

WHAT IT COSTS.

A gentleman was walking in Regent's Park in London, and he met a man whose only home was in the poor-house. He had come out to take the air and excited the gentleman's interested attention.

"Well, my friend," said the gentleman, getting into conversation, "It is a pity that a man like you should be situated where you are!"

The man said he was eighty years of age.

"Had you any trade before you became penniless?"

"Yes, I was a carpenter."

"Did you use intoxicating drink?"

"No, O no. I only took my beer, never anything stronger; nothing but my beer."

"How much did your beer come to a day."

"Oh, a sixpence a day, I suppose."

"For how long a time?"

"Well, I suppose for sixty years."

The gentleman had taken out his notebook, and he continued figuring with his pencil while he went on talking with the man.

"Now let me tell you," said he, as he finished his calculations, "how much that beer cost you, my man. You can go over the figures yourself." And the gentleman demonstrated that the money, at sixpence a day for sixty years, expended in beer, would, if it had been saved and placed at interest, have yielded him nearly eight hundred dollars a year, or an income of fifteen dollars a week for self support.

De people dat do de bigges' talking at home is apt to do de mos' whettin' in de harves'-fiel'.

Pride.

'Tis a curious fact as ever was known—
But often in human nature shown,
Alike in castle and cottage—
That pride, like pigs of a certain breed,
Will manage to live and thrive on feed
As poor as a pauper's pottage.

Of all the notable things on earth,
The queerest is the pride of birth
Among our "fierce democracy!"
A bridge across a hundred years,
Without a prop to save it from sneers—
Not even a couple of rotten piers—
A thing of laughter, flings and jeers,
Is American aristocracy!

Depend upon it, my snobbish friend,
Your family thread you cannot ascend,
Without good reason to apprehend
You may find it waxed at the other end
By some plebeian vocation;
Or, worse than that, your boasted line
May end in a loop of stronger twine,
That plagued some worthy relation.

Because you flourish in worldly affairs,
Don't be haughty and put on airs,
With insolent pride of station.
Don't be proud and turn up your nose
At poorer people in plainer clothes;
But learn for the sake of your mind's repose,
That all proud flesh—wherever it grows,
Is subject to irritation.

A BEAR STORY.

A lively bear story comes from Cattaraugus county, N. Y. Ike Hiller, a lumberman, tracked a bear to its den, and then informed some mill hands in the vicinity, two of whom, George and Tom Quaintance, started with him to capture bruin. One carried a shot gun, another an ax and the third a pistol. The den was a triangular enclosed by the trunks of three large trees which had blown down. The three men approached from different directions. On reaching the spot George Quaintance said in a whisper:

"Stand still, boys! I see his eyes!"

"No you don't," whispered Ike Hiller; "'cause I see his eyes lookin' plumb at me."

"What's the matter with you fellers?" said Tom Quaintance. "Here he is lookin' at me right from under this log."

George put his gun up and took aim. "Don't shoot!" said Ike. "You won't hit him in a vital part, aud he'll come tearin' out on top o' me?"

"He'll come plungin' on to me, you better say," insisted Tom.

"Well, I see his eyes and I'm goin' to shoot all the same," said George.

Bang went the gun. The next minute out from under the log next to Tom rushed an immense bear. It made direct for him. He dropped his ax. "Didn't I tell you so?" He howled, and away he went toward the mill, with the bear after him. He hadn't made ten jumps before another bear sprang out from under the tree next to Ike Hiller. It started for Ike. He threw his revolver at it.

"What did I tell you?" he yelled to George, and away he went, with the bear close behind.

When George Quaintance recovered from his astonishment he made up his mind to investigate. He was sure he had seen the eyes of a bear when he fired. He looked over into the inclosure. There lay a big bear, stone dead, with a hole between his eyes as big as a walnut. George returned to the mill. Ike and Tom had been there some time. Their bears had given up the race. The carcass of the dead bear was taken away.

Silence has a kindly influence when rightly used. What an incalculable portion of domestic strife and dissension might have been prevented; how often the quarrel which by mutual aggravation, has perhaps terminated in bloodshed, might have been checked in its commencement by a well-timed and judicious silence. Those persons only who have experienced it are aware of the beneficial effects of that forbearance which to the exasperating threat, the malicious sneer, or the unjustly imputed culpability, shall answer never a word. And there are not wanting instances where the reputation, the fortune, the happiness, nay, the life of a fellow-creature, might be preserved by a charitable silence, either by the suppression of some condemning circumstances, or by refusing to unite in the defamatory allegation. In silence, too, there is safety always.

A great many quarrels arise from bargains being imperfectly understood, or not plainly and fully expressed when they are entered into. This can be and should be guarded against. When you have made a bargain orally, write it down in brief and plain terms. Read it over aloud to make certain that both contracting parties understand it alike. If there are any doubtful points discuss them frankly, even at the risk of breaking off the transaction, for if there is bound to be a difference about it, far better to have it in the beginning, when it is harmless, than at a later period, when no one can measure the damages that may arise.

"Sam, I want to borrow fifty cents," he said, and there was an appealing look in his eye like the gaze of a dying antelope. "I don't mind letting you have it if—" "Don't make any conditions, Sam; it's a crisis in my life." "What sort of a crisis?" "I'm going to get married to-morrow." "You had better take seventy-five cents then," remarked the heroic friend, and he dropped three silver quarters into a palm that closed around them like an elastic rat-hole.

Indians get their queer names in the following manner: When an Indian baby is born the medicine man or some one of the family looks out of the door and casts his eye upon some object. The first thing that he sees furnishes the child's name. Hence, "Sitting Bull," "Red Cloud," etc. If this rule was followed by the whites, most of the children would be called "Hoop-skirt-in-the-yard," or "Man-Going-into-a-Saloon."

One of the legends upon the wall of the room in which the Wisconsin dairymen association held its recent meeting was: "Talk to your cow as you would to a lady." We suppose when milking time comes the dairyman politely says to the bovine: "Will you honor me with a teat-a-teat?"

During the late war, a little girl, whose father was chaplain, was heard praying one night, "Oh God, bless my dear papa and don't let him die, but if he is sick you needn't be troubled, because he has got 'Hall's Journal of Health' with him!"

Plaster scattered over the floors of the fowl houses is a powerful absorbent, preventing the smell which arises from the droppings.

"We both scratch for a living," said the old hen to the editor. He told her to shear off.

THE EFFECT OF CULTURE.

A few months ago the daughter of a Rockland man, who has grown comfortably well off in the small grocery line, was sent away to a "female college," and last week she arrived home for the holiday vacation. The old man was in attendance at the depot when the train arrived, with the old horse in the delivery wagon, to convey his daughter and her trunk to the house. When the train had stopped, a bewitching array of dry goods and a wide-brimmed hat dashed from the car, and flung herself into the elderly party's arms.

"Why, you superlative pa!" she exclaimed; "I'm ever so utterly glad to see you!"

The old man was somewhat unnerved by the greeting, but he recognized the seal-skin cloak in his grip as the identical piece of property he had paid for with his bay mare, and he sort of squat it up in his arms, and planted a kiss where it would do the most good with a report that sounded above the noise of the depot. In a brief space of time the trunk and its attendant baggage were loaded into the wagon, which was soon bumping over the hubbles towards home.

"Pa, dear," said the young miss, surveying the team with a critical eye, "do you consider this quite excessively beyond?"

"Hey?" returned the old man with a puzzled air; "quite excessively beyond what? Beyond Warren? I consider it somewhat about ten miles beyond Warren, countin' from the Bath way, if that's what you mean?"

"Oh, no, pa, you don't understand me," the daughter explained; "I mean this wagon and horse. Do you think they are soulful? Do you think they could be studied apart in the light of a symphony, or even a single poem, and appear as intensely utter to one on returning home as one could express?"

The old man twisted uneasily in his seat and muttered something about he believed it used to be used for an express before he bought it to deliver pork in, but the conversation appeared to be traveling in such a lonesome direction that he fetched the horse a resounding crack on the rotunda, and the severe jolting over the frozen ground prevented further remarks.

"Oh, there is that lovely and consummate ma!" screamed the returned collegiatess as they drew up at the door, and presently she was lost in the embrace of a motherly woman in spectacles.

"Well," said the old man at the supper table, as he nipped a piece of butter with his own knife, "an' how do you like your school?"

"Well, there, pa, now you're shou—I mean, I consider it far too beyond," replied the daughter. "It is unquenchably ineffable. The girls are so sumptuously stunning—I mean grand—so exquisite—so intense. And then the parties, the balls, the rides—oh, the past weeks have been one sublime harmony."

"I s'pose so—I s'pose so," nervously assented the old man as he reached for his third cup "half full"—"but how about your books—readin', writin', grammar, rule o' three—how about them?"

"Pa, don't!" exclaimed the daughter reproachfully; "the rule of three! grammar! It is French and music and painting and the divine art that have made my school life the boss—I mean that have rendered it one unbroken flow of rhythmic bliss—incomparably and exquisitely all but."

The grocery man and his wife looked helplessly at each other across the table. After a lonesome pause the old lady said:

"How do you like the biscuits, Maria?"

"They are too utter for anything," gushed this accomplished young lady, "and this plum preserve is simply a poem in itself."

The old man arose abruptly from the table, and went out of the room, rubbing his head in a dazed and benumbed manner, and the mass convention was dissolved. That night he and his wife sat alone by the stove until a late hour, and at the breakfast table the next morning, he rapped smartly on his plate with the handle of his knife and remarked:

"Maria—me an' your mother have been talking the thing over, an' we've come to the conclusion that this boardin' school business is too utterly all but too nonsense. Me an' her consider that we haven't lived sixty odd consummate years for the purpose of raisin' a curiosity, an' there's goin' to be a stop put to this unquenchable foolishness. Now after you have finished eatin' that poem of fried sausage, an' symphony of twisted doughnut, you take an' dust up stairs in less'n two seconds, an' peel off that fancy gown an' put on a caliker, and then come here an' help your mother wash dishes. I want it distinctly understood that there ain't goin' to be no more rythmic foolishness in this house, so long's your superlative pa an' your lovely an' consummate ma's runnin' the ranche. You hear me, Maria?"

Maria was listening.

THE EDITOR'S WORK.—The editor has a mixed and often confused mass of material from which to gather every week what is to crystalize into his columns. The result of the process rarely reaches his ideal of that which should be attained. The necessities of the case in the amount to be done, and the short time allowed for its right doing,—this, too, amid unavoidable drawbacks of ill health or interruption,—are inevitably great. Yet the revolution of the paper with each recurring date must be made. There is no such easement to the editor as is granted the minister, who under almost any given temporary disability can bridge over the Sabbath—more than one, if need be—to the entire satisfaction of his people. It must hence be clear that the journalist of our day has no rose-bed to repose upon,—that, hard-working and conscientious as he may be, he fulfills his exacting round of duty with less ease than is too commonly supposed. It is well if facility in his case from experience and habitude make it feasible for him to execute faithfully what he is called upon to perform.—Watchman.

Many an opportunity is lost, and golden ones, because the spirit lacked the "dare" to a certain point. Few honors, purposes or fortunes are gained unless a risk is run and one dares to make the venture. It needs a spirit of daring in young or old, to always keep in the straight and narrow path.

None but the faint-hearted cease to hope. Hope is one of our guardian angels, given to lead us higher up, and brighten every step as we climb the journey of life. Burdens lose their weight, sorrows their sting, and the way is plain when we allow hope to be our guiding star.

Hope and daring will not accomplish a great deal unless toil is their hand-maid. Duties and toil may not be sought; they are always near at hand, if our eyes will only see them. Well directed toil will insure success in every walk of life, high or low.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1882.

THE United States Senate on Thursday voted, 35 to 17, to put Gen. Grant on the retired list of the army. The House will undoubtedly concur with the Senate, and Gen. Grant will have an additional annual income of $12,757.

RUMOR has it that President Arthur has tendered to Senator Edmunds of Vermont the vacant position on the bench of the supreme court, and that he will probably accept it. The appointment would be a most admirable one, but would leave a large vacancy in the Senate for somebody to "rattle around" in.

IN the Senate at Boston on Thursday there were formal ceremonies and addresses on the occasion of the presentation to that body, by ex-Mayor Cobb of Boston, of the portrait of his grandfather, Gen. David Cobb, who was president of the Senate from 1801 to 1805. The Legislature has done little of general interest this week. The committees are busy with hearings. The banking committee has reported a bill providing for publishing the names of the members of boards of investment of savings banks, which is a good idea.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY was observed in a quiet way, Wednesday, in most of the large cities, but in the smaller communities less attention was paid to the day than there should have been. In this age of activity and progress we are too apt to forget, as a people, how much we owe to the wisdom and forethought of our fathers in laying so well the foundations of our present prosperity and grandeur. It is therefore well on these anniversary days to call again to mind the patriotic character and life of that master builder, Washington, and especially to impress upon the young the lessons of his noble career.

THE Democratic State Committee had a dinner at Parker's, in Boston, Wednesday, to which they had invited Gen. Hancock, Mr. Tilden, Senators Bayard and Pendleton, and other distinguished members of their party. None of the notables put in an appearance, however, and they had to depend upon home talent for their eloquence, even Butler being absent. Over one hundred were present, speeches being made by C. P. Thompson, Albert Palmer, and others, and their dinner, spiced with denunciation of Republican corruption, made them so happy and hopeful that their views of the future were brightened with delightful visions of numerous and sweeping Democratic victories.

WHEN men meet nominally to do honor to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, and talk as Emory Storrs, the Chicago lawyer, did at such a meeting in New York last week, they not only do not honor Lincoln, but they befoul themselves in a most indecent manner. Alluding to the administrations of Hayes and Garfield, Storrs declared that a thousand years of conflict would be better than "four such years of foul, sneaking, lying, blustering, nasty hypocrisy as we have passed through." Storrs and Rev. Dr. Newman both glorified stalwartism, and the latter would have Conkling's name placed beside those of Washington, Lincoln and Grant. He should have included Guiteau's name in the list, also. Gen. Grant is really most unfortunate in some of his friends. If his reputation survives their slobbering, it will be so as by fire.

Mrs. Scoville sent a lengthy letter to Mrs. Garfield last week, pleading with her to use her influence in behalf of the pardon of Guiteau, whom his sister fully believes to be insane. In reply J. H. Rhodes of Cleveland, secretary of the Garfield monument committee, and a near friend of Mrs. Garfield, informed an Associated Press correspondent that he was authorized to say in her behalf that toward the slayer of her husband she cherishes no malice; he must answer only to his God and the American people. For his sister and all members of his family she feels only profound pity. Further than this she asks to be left alone with her sorrow and to be spared being dragged into useless and torturing publicity. Mrs. Garfield will not answer the letter.

One of the most atrocious murders of recent date is that which has just come to light at Charlton. A young man named Geo. H. Richardson carried a gun about for two days awaiting a favorable opportunity to assassinate his father, and while riding on a sled last week Wednesday shot him in the back. It was at first reported a case of accidental shooting, but the murderer has confessed. The fact that he was the only heir was probably the incentive for the crime.

Governor Cameron of Virginia last week sent a military expedition against some oyster pirates who have long been in the habit of stealing oysters along the shores of the Rappahannock, and captured six schooners and a sloop with their crews, numbering 61 men. The penalty is one to three years' imprisonment, and confiscation of the vessels and cargoes.

The occupation of the male population of Nevada is chiefly mining in silver ore. The silver is, however, so largely associated with lead that nine-tenths of the medical cases reported from that locality are of lead poisoning. It takes the forms of half-paralysis, palsy and wrist-drop.

A blast in Weehawken Tunnel on the Ontario and Western Railway in New Jersey was prematurely exploded Wednesday evening by a flash of lightning, seriously injuring six men.

The bays on the south side and east end of Long Island are literally alive with game, and sportsmen are having good shooting.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Lent.

More coasting.

Has your arm worked?

This wintry weather makes the venturesome bluebird doubly blue.

There's a chance now to get up that sleigh-ride party we haven't had yet.

Rev. Dr. Flanders, of Lowell, will preach at the Universalist church to-morrow.

The band went to Monson Wednesday evening, to furnish music at the skating rink.

Rev. Charles H. Ricketts of Thorndike will be the preacher at the Congregational church to-morrow.

Ezra Greenleaf has been re-engaged by the selectmen to take charge of the town farm for another year.

Several of our young people went to Monson last evening, to attend the masquerade at the skating rink.

The directors of the agricultural society have awarded the building of the park fence to A. J. & H. A. Northrop.

A good many people seem to think that the law in regard to sleigh bells is better honored in its breach than by its observance.

H. P. Holden's horse, attached to his delivery sleigh, took a harmless independent run through Main street Tuesday afternoon.

An extra train was run to Monson Wednesday night, after the institute, carrying home a large delegation of people from that place.

The morning train from the north, Wednesday, was nearly three hours behind time, on account of the snow at the upper end of the road.

Another sign of spring—the boys have been playing marbles, and would be now, if Tuesday's snow storm had not put an end to that sport.

O. B. Griffin has bought of Mrs. M. E. Daniels a building lot on Pine street, for $200, and has also bought an adjoining lot of a Mr. Robinson.

The days have stretched out two hours in length, and are now over 11 hours long. The increase of sunlight is very perceptible, at both ends of the day.

The Legislative committee on public charitable institutions spent Tuesday afternoon at the State Primary School, on a tour of inspection, going from here to Northampton.

Dr. Stowe was summoned to his old home in Northern Vermont Wednesday night by the intelligence that his father was dangerously sick, and not expected to recover.

L. E. Moore of Ilion, N. Y., the recently elected treasurer of the savings bank in this place, has arrived in town with his family, and will enter upon his duties next week.

The schools and banks were closed on Wednesday, and two or three stores closed in the afternoon and evening, this being the only observance of Washington's birthday locally.

Rev. M. C. Stebbins of Springfield preached at the Congregational church last Sunday, Rev. I. O. Rankin of Nassau, N. Y., who was expected to preach, being detained by sickness.

Tuesday's storm of snow, sleet and hail, which covered the ground to the depth of 4 or 5 inches, has given us the best sleighing of the Winter, and people have been enjoying it to the fullest extent.

The selectmen call upon all persons having bills against the town to present them on or before next Monday, when they will hold their last meeting for the present year. They will also revise the voters' list at the same time.

J. F. Holbrook has sold his fine pair of chestnut horses, which he has used in his coal business for the past five years, to Lee & Osgood of Norwich, Ct., and is now delivering coal with a handsome pair of young iron gray Normans, purchased this week in Boston.

Mrs. W. B. Lawton of Ware has closed her engagement in the choir of the Universalist church, where she has sung with great acceptance the past year, and it is understood that she declines to make any further choir engagements, having declined a $1500 offer from a Boston church.

One of Dr. Warren's horses took a notion to start off suddenly as the doctor was stepping into his sleigh in front of the post office Wednesday morning, and, leaving him behind, the horse went up Thorndike street at a rattling pace, but was soon stopped, without having done any harm.

The dramatic club are rehearsing a couple of plays which they will present some evening next month, for the benefit of the band. They have already given one entertainment this winter, for the benefit of the improvement association, and will give still another one later in the season, for their own benefit.

The schools in town have closed for the Spring vacation, excepting those in this village and at Tenneyville, which will continue with but little rest until the Summer vacation, as they began so late last Autumn, on account of the changes in the village school house. They will probably have a vacation of a week or so about April 1st.

The following "drunks" have been before the district court the past week, the pecuniary penalties for their indulgence being attached to the names: Michael O'Neil, $5.50; John McDonald, $6.65; James Pendergrass, $6.80; Thomas Henighan, $5.65; Thomas Welch, $4.85; John Murphy, $5.65. McDonald, Welch and Murphy were committed for want of funds.

The Wales Hall skating rink will be open this afternoon and evening, and also on Monday, the band being present Monday evening. Next Wednesday Mr. Hitchcock goes to Northampton, where he has laid a new floor in the town hall, which is now in fine shape for skating. He will return to Palmer occasionally, to give our skaters a chance to keep in practice.

The committees of the Congregational church and society met on Monday and united in notifying Rev. A. F. Newton of his call to the pastorate of the church. The opponents of Mr. Newton in the society, who have been unwavering in their opposition to calling him, have also forwarded a paper to him signed by over 20 persons, it is understood, in which their reasons for thinking that he ought not to come here are given.

A drunken man lying at the corner of Thorndike and Main streets was last Saturday taken into a wagon by some men and carried out to the Point of Rocks, where he was dumped and left to freeze to death, as he doubtless would have done, being completely helpless, had not somebody seen him and sent word to Deputy Sheriff Palmer, who took him to the lock-up and thawed him out. What motive the parties could have had in doing this, it is hard to conceive.

The following item from a Boston paper is full of terrible suggestiveness for our legislators: "Representative Albert Sargent of Merrimack entertained a party of his constituents, numbering thirty, by a banquet at the Quincy House and a visit to the Globe Theatre last evening." Suppose, now, that a party of his constituents—a few of his old patients, for instance—should take it into their heads to go down to the Hub and visit our genial representative! Such examples are apt to be "catchin'," but we fear that if followed to any great extent, our Solons would all favor a raise of salary at the close of the session.

Thieves entered the barn of Selectman H. G. Loomis last week Friday night, through the window, and stole his valuable black horse, taking him out through a small rear door. They also took three blankets, and his harness, but passing by his phaeton and buggy, which were in the unlocked carriage shed adjoining, they went across the street and took a business wagon from Tuthill's carriage shop. Word was promptly sent out in every direction as soon as the loss was discovered Saturday morning, and during the forenoon the horse was found blanketed and hitched on State street, Springfield, by a policeman, and was driven home by Mr. Loomis in the afternoon. It seems that the thieves drove through Hampden, where their wagon broke down, nearly every spoke being knocked out of one wheel, and they accordingly left it there, taking another one belonging to Mr. Scofield, to finish their journey in. They evidently wanted a business wagon for some purpose, but for what is not known, and they are not known to have stolen anything else in their journeyings.

The Sunday school institute at the Congregational church Wednesday was carried out according to the programme published last week, and proved an occasion of rare interest and profit. There was a large attendance from Springfield, Monson, and other neighboring towns, the audience room being filled at both afternoon and evening sessions. In his address of welcome, Rev. E. H. Byington of Monson stated that the institute represented schools having an aggregate membership of 6000, in some 18 cities and towns, the 36 churches connected with them having some 6000 communicants, with a constituency of about 15,000 people, showing a large field for work. The address of T. W. Bicknell of Boston on "The Teacher and the Superintendent" was an instructive setting-forth of the requisites for a perfect organization, and J. L. Johnson of Springfield brought out in a forcible manner the duties of parents to the teachers and to their own children, while E. A. Hubbard showed the importance of the teacher's work, and difficulties to be overcome. These addresses, with other discussions, occupied the afternoon, and were followed by an excellent supper in the vestry, which was admirably served, over 300 sitting down at the tables. In the evening Rev. A. W. Dunning of Boston set forth "The Teacher's Inspiration" in an impressive manner, showing the necessity of earnestness and constant prayer, while Rev. D. A. Reed of Springfield spoke of "The Teacher and the Harvest," the essays being followed by interesting remarks by Rev. L. H. Blake of Westfield and Rev. Dr. Hazen of Agawam. Resolutions of thanks to the speakers and the Palmer church were adopted, and the exercises closed with the doxology. The next institute will be held at Westfield.

THE FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

The Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society held its third Farmers' Institute at Weeks Hall, Tuesday, with a goodly number of farmers present from surrounding towns. Dr. Curtis of Globe Village was the chief speaker. He gave his attention wholly to silos and ensilage, in the essay read. Speaking from experience, he was better enabled to enforce conviction than he would have been, had he relied on the too often exaggerated statement of others. He thought farmers were often deterred from building silos from a miscalculation in the expense. He stated that a silo could be built for $25 to $50, either of cemented walls or walls lined with plank, made air tight by tarred paper. They can be let into excavations or placed entirely above ground as the exigencies of the case may determine. Corn stover and corn fodder, rye, oats and Hungarian grass are all good products, as well as grass and rowen, for ensilage. It was recommended that material for ensilage should not be put into the silo wet, but that the dew should be dried off and the material slightly wilted. It was also thought best that the material in the silo be leveled often during the day while filling, and that a pressure be put on at night in the form of planks, in sections convenient for removal, and that these planks be heavily weighted. By this means the air would be excluded and the ensilage preserved in good order. The doctor said his cattle were fond of ensilage, thrived on it, and were less thirsty than when fed on hay. He thought, however, that shorts or cotton seed meal should be given with it. He said a fine flavor was given to butter made in winter, where ensilage was fed to cows, also that a large increase of milk was another result from its use. In every way he contended it was economy for the farmer to feed ensilage, and that the silo was the only place in which corn stover could be preserved in a proper form for use. As a practical test of economy he stated that he fed 18 head of cattle 57 days on ensilage at a cost of $50. The amount of hay needful for the same time would have cost $300. Mr. Hadwin of Worcester said he had been gathering all the information he could on the subject of ensilage, and should give the matter a trial the coming year. Judge Robinson and C. T. Brainerd of Palmer were both satisfied with ensilage, and should continue its use. Other gentlemen gave their views pro and con on the subject, so that altogether the meeting was a very interesting one, and will set the farmers to thinking about this new source of profit. The question adopted for the next institute, to be held March 21st, is "Fertilizers, and their Application to Crops."

WEST BRIMFIELD.

The young people of this place will present the drama "Enlisted for the War" in the Methodist church, this evening.

LUDLOW.

The "busy bees" of the Methodist society gave a literary entertainment and oyster supper at the town hall last evening.

The parishioners and friends of Rev. S. V. McDuffee made him a donation visit on Thursday, prior to his departure for his new field of labor at Brimfield.

FISKDALE.

The American Band cleared over $160 from their ball, and the dramatic entertainment given for their benefit by the Waverly Dramatic Society, last week.

Traveling troupes do not often visit this village, as it is not on any railroad, but they would probably come oftener, if they knew. The Guy Family ran the risk last Saturday night, and were greeted by an audience which filled every available inch of space in the hall, over 500 tickets being sold.

THREE RIVERS.

In the intermediate school in this village, the following scholars have had no marks during the term just closed: Howard Hanson, Gracie Hayes, Ernest Lord, Nettie Milliken, Etta Ruggles, Katie Twiss, Richard Twiss. In the primary school these scholars were not absent: Jerry Casey, Delia Fredette, Mamie Hayes, Rosa Lemna, Maggie Longtine, Rosanna Mahoney, Matilda McDougal, Hattie Warriner. The following scholars have neither been absent nor tardy in the vestry primary school: Sadie McMaster, Lulu Grout, Ophelia Martel, Albertine Ouellet, Willie Defeau, Joseph Deslauriers, Beecher Orcutt, Ambrose Garant.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

On account of a break in the shaft, the employes of the finishing room at the paper mill were out on Thursday.

A. L. Bell, employed at Cutler's mill, on Tuesday slipped and badly sprained his ankle, and narrowly escaped further injuries by contact with the machinery.

The superintendent of Grace Chapel and others who attended the institute at Palmer, were very much elated over the abundance and quality of food both for the mind and body, and will not fail to follow up with interest the work of this new, but vigorous organization, that must inevitably accomplish a grand and thorough work in the Sunday schools of this county.

THORNDIKE.

The weekly prayer meeting of the Congregational society has been changed from Friday to Thursday evening.

The singers of the village met with Rev. Mr. Ricketts, at his study, Friday evening, to practice from the new number of the Gospel Hymn series.

The Thorndike company of this village possess an interesting relic of ante-railroad days, in the shape of a large four-horse wagon, which was used in transporting cotton from Boston to Thorndike before the Western Railroad was built. For strength and durability modern manufacturers would do well to pattern after it.

BONDVILLE.

The ladies' society of the M. E. church met at the residence of Mrs. Brown, Wednesday evening, and had a very pleasant time.

The C. C. & C. party gave an entertainment at the M. E. church on the 16th, introducing wax figures and other amusements. It was well attended.

The following are the names of pupils who have not been absent nor tardy the past term at Bondville: Clara Collis and Timmy Clifford of the grammar school, Maggie Landers, Maggie Shea, Mary Bagley, George Merrifield, Otis Sedgwick, Sumner O'Regan and John Lynch of the intermediate school, Viola Packard, Katie Moriarity and Henry Gouram of the 2d primary school. The schools closed yesterday for a vacation of four weeks.

WILBRAHAM.

The quadrangle met with Miss May Clark, Thursday afternoon.

The second-year class at the academy held a reception in Philo hall Saturday evening.

Athena held an ice cream festival in the dining hall of the academy boarding house last evening.

The drama "Coupons Off," will be performed at the Congregational chapel by some of the young people next week.

The Willing Workers will meet next Saturday afternoon and evening with Miss Jennie Campbell, at the house of H. H. Burbank.

The cantata of The Haymakers will be given in Fisk Hall Monday evening, under the direction of Miss Stevens, instructor in vocal music at the academy.

Several of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. John Speight surprised them on Wednesday evening, and presented them with a sum of money with which to purchase a crystal set for the fifteenth anniversary of their wedding, which occurs on Sunday.

WALES.

Frank Green and Nester Gouly, who left home last week to see the world, returned home satisfied after three days' wanderings.

P. W. Moore left home Tuesday week on a visit to Chester, Vt., and returned home last Saturday with Miss Mary Hawkes, with her name changed to Moore; and others are thinking of doing likewise.

Mrs. N. M. Hill, assisted by local talent, gave a musical concert in the vestry of the M. E. church last week Friday evening. The piano duet by Mrs. Hill and her sister was especially well done, receiving the only encore of the evening. The whole programme was well rendered and pleasing.

C. M. Gale comes to the front again, not this time with apple blossoms, but cats, having had one recently die that was 18 years old. She was toothless at the last, but "gummed" three mice a few days before she died, and possibly thinking this glory enough, departed, as good old cats usually do.

F. C. Smith was an unwilling convert to the "Monroe doctrine" a few days ago; that is, he tried the same experiment that Landlord Monroe of Brimfield tried earlier in the season. He had visions of large pickerel, and in anticipation of showing a heavy string went for them, but as he got none the first dive, he gave it up and came home, a wetter if not a wiser man.

WARREN.

The schools enjoyed a holiday Wednesday.

Mr. Rollins has rented part of the Sibley house and moved into it.

Frank A. Keith has purchased the Warren bakery, and is doing a good business.

There was a union temperance praise meeting in the town hall last Sunday evening.

Joseph Ramsdell has sold part of his real estate on Maple street to Charles Gleason and Mr. Butterworth.

The lecture by Gen. Stephenson, Thursday evening, being the second of the course, —subject, "Battle of Gettysburg,"—drew a large audience. The lecture was illustrated by stereopticon views, which added much to the interest. The band was also in attendance, and rendered some good music.

The Rural Improvement Society met last week Thursday evening and voted to accept the constitution, with a few amendments, and also chose the following officers: President, Nathan Richardson; vice presidents, Mrs. Joseph Hitchcock, Dr. J. W. Hastings; secretary, Mr. Sawyer; treasurer, J. W. Chadsey. A committee of five were chosen to solicit membership.

The cantata of Esther was rendered in the town hall Tuesday and Wednesday evening by a chorus of about sixty voices. The solos were given by home talent, and showed that Warren possesses an unusual amount of musical talent. The hall was well filled both evenings. Wednesday a party from North Brookfield were present. As a whole it was one of the most successful concerts which the musical society have given.

MONSON.

The public schools closed this week.

There is to be a fellowship meeting in the Congregational church next Wednesday.

E. F. Willis, the clothier, is rushing off his overcoats at one-half prices, preparatory to Spring trade.

Loren Squier contemplates moving his photograph gallery to South Main street, north of G. H. Newton's office.

Horace Squier, the Washington street grocer, contemplates giving up his grocery business the coming season.

Miner Miller has purchased the Silver Street woolen mill, and may possibly make Monson his home hereafter.

The skating rink at Central Hall has been well patronized, and everybody speaks in praise of Manager Hitchcock.

W. A. Deichmann contemplates putting up a dwelling house on the new street running south from Hampden Avenue.

The monthly sociable of the Methodist society will be held at the parsonage next Wednesday afternoon and evening.

The academy and national bank were the only institutions in town that observed Washington's birthday as a legal holiday.

The Messrs. Heery at North Monson are to remove machinery from Connecticut and make their woolen mill a 10-set mill.

Rev. Dr. Ela will hold the last quarterly conference for the year, and will preach in the Methodist church Sunday evening.

The painters are busy on A. D. Ellis's new house, and are doing their level best to have it the best specimen of their handiwork in town.

Builder Mills has Patrick Shea's dwelling house well under way, and Arba Squier has another house on Hampden Avenue nearly completed.

G. W. Burdick, in the words of the immortal Daniel Webster, "still lives," and is turning out wagons, and blacksmithing and quarrying tools in large quantities.

R. M. and T. Reynolds contemplate building a large wool warehouse westerly of the middle mill, and will probably have a spur track for convenience in unloading.

The farmers have had a highly enjoyable time sledding wood since the last snow fell, and find it much more convenient getting around in the woods than three weeks ago.

D. G. Green is busily engaged in getting out telegraph poles, sleepers and wood, and for the past year has probably done a larger business in some of these branches than any firm in Hampden county.

G. H. Newton presents a combination of rather a unique character this (Saturday) evening, being a descriptive lecture on "Whales," and an auction sale of household goods. See advertisement in another column.

W. H. King, who has officiated at Central Market for some time past, goes to East Brookfield to engage in the foundry business, and his many friends here wish him the success which his untiring energy and gentlemanly business qualifications merit.

Attention is called to the advertisement in another column regarding missing volumes belonging to the Flynt and Packard Library of Monson Academy. It is presumed that children have taken the books home and forgotten to return them, and it is greatly desired that the missing volumes shall be looked up and returned.

BRIMFIELD.

The winter term of the Hitchcock Free High School will close on Friday, March 3d. The summer term will commence on Tuesday, March 21st.

W. W. McClench, Esq., of Chicopee, will lecture before the Hitchcock Lyceum next Tuesday evening. Subject, "Samuel Adams, and Local Government."

The local event of the week has been the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Hitchcock, on Thursday, February 16th. About eighty persons, including their children, grandchildren and one great-grandchild, relatives and friends from Monson, Warren and other places, as well as neighbors and home friends, were present, and their gifts were two easy chairs of the value of $25 for the groom and bride, and nearly $30 in gold. Addresses were made by Deacon N. S. Hubbard and Samuel W. Brown, the first of congratulation, and the latter giving a brief genealogical account of the family from Nathaniel Hitchcock, the pioneer settler of Brimfield. Mrs. Wm. H. Sherman also read a paper giving some reminiscences of the family. The records show that the descendants of Nathaniel and David Hitchcock have been numerous here in Brimfield formerly, more than at present, when there are only five families of about eighteen persons. The families have been noted for their adherence to the religious faith of their ancestors, about seventy of them having been members of the church in this place, three of the name having been deacons, very many influential members, and one or more in the Home Mission field. "Among their descendants are many honored names of those whose fame became national, and sought other fields for its scope. We may mention Maj. Gen. Ethan Allen Hitchcock, and Judge Samuel Hitchcock, of Vermont." The families have a worthy record for their patriotism in the service of their country, several having served in the French and Indian wars, twelve in the war of the Revolution—four during the war, the others for three years and less periods of service—and in the war of the Rebellion. Edward W., son of Marcus, served for three years, and was severely wounded, for which he now receives an invalid pension. The males of the families have been no less noted for their political principles, most of them belonging to and acting with the old Whig party in its day, and since with the Republican. In the early days of the use of the check list for voting, when it was the custom in this town for the moderator or chairman of the selectmen to call the list of voters in alphabetical order, voters going up and depositing their ballots, as called, tradition recognizes this trait in the following incident: At a meeting where there was much excitement on the issues of the election, the chairman of the selectmen, who was an earnest and active Democrat, when he came to the letter H, called the names as follows: "Deacon Hitchcock, Artemas Hitchcock, Abner Hitchcock and all the other d——d Hitchcocks in town, come up and vote."

FLAME AND FLOOD.

Haverhill was visited early last Saturday morning with the most destructive fire the city has ever experienced. The flames broke out in a sole leather establishment, and, fanned by a strong wind, spread with remarkable rapidity, soon getting beyond the control of the small city fire department. Help was summoned from Lawrence, Lowell and other neighboring towns, and after a few hours the flames were subdued; not, however, until some five acres had been burned over in the heart of the city, and property had been destroyed to the value of about $2,500,000. The burned district extends about 1000 feet along the river. Seventy-five buildings were destroyed, and nearly 300 places of business, of which 108 were boot and shoe manufactories, employing some 4000 people, who are thrown out of work. The insurance amounts to about $2,000,000. One fireman was killed. Considerable suffering is likely to ensue, but prompt relief measures have been taken, and the manufacturers will resume business as rapidly as possible, while the burnt district will be rebuilt in the immediate future, more substantially than before.

A fire broke out in a fireworks factory at Chester, Penn., last week Friday morning, attracting a crowd of sight-seers. Two small explosions were followed later by a terrific explosion that blew a portion of the house to pieces, killed fourteen persons, either firemen or spectators, and seriously injured between thirty and forty others, four of whom have since died. Many persons, too, were slightly injured by falling bricks and timbers. The scene was one of great excitement. The owner of the factory, when summoned before the coroner's jury, could offer no explanation as to how the explosion occurred.

The Pennsylvania Military Academy at Chester, Penn., was burned to the ground last week Thursday evening, by a fire which originated in the laboratory. Loss $200,000.

A portion of the Kings County insane asylum at Flatbush, L. I., was burned Monday night, two of the inmates perishing in the flames.

Remarkably heavy rain storms at the West and South, on Monday and Tuesday, caused the swollen streams to rise to a great height, and the freshets have caused immense damage in Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Mississippi, Arkansas and other States. At Cincinnati on Tuesday the Ohio was higher than since 1847. At St. Louis the Mississippi rose five feet during the day, making 17 feet it had risen since Sunday. All railroad traffic there and at many other points was entirely suspended, many roads being damaged by washouts and loss of bridges. A large portion of the city of Helena, Ark., was under water, stopping the mills and workshops, and putting an end to all trade. Lawrenceburg, Ind., was entirely surrounded by water, and all communication with neighboring towns cut off. Every plantation between Memphis and Friar's Point, Miss., was submerged, the water extending back 15 miles from either shore. At Rock Island, Ill., a part of the great government bridge, a solid stone and iron structure, was blown down by the violent gale. In the bottoms contiguous to the Mississippi River, thousands of horses, mules and cattle have been drowned, miles of fencing swept away, houses destroyed and corn cribs floated off with contents, in many instances leaving the people without actual necessaries. What the end will be none can tell, but it is evident relief must be given or many persons will die of starvation. The weather took a colder turn Tuesday night, throughout the West, and the floods are subsiding.

LETTER FROM SPRINGFIELD.

What is Thought of Northampton as a Place for the Approaching Meeting of the Methodist Conference; Some of the Impending Changes in Ministers—The Police Investigation Boomerang—The Big Snow Storm; and the New City Marshal.

Correspondence of the Journal.

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 21, 1882.

The announcement that the committee appointed to fix upon a place for holding the next annual session of the New England Methodist Conference has selected Northampton as the objective point, surprises interested people this way. The introduction of over two hundred ministers, besides the visitors a conference attracts, into a town like Northampton for a week's sojourn, will be quite an event. The Methodist church there is small and will hardly accommodate the preachers of the conference, to say nothing of the many who usually attend these gatherings. The reason given for this selection is that the hotels there make larger reductions in board bills than any of the other places talked of. Perhaps Hampden, or East Longmeadow, would have done better in this respect, and if light board bills, rather than the accommodation of the public, is to be the consideration, one of these places can possibly secure the next session by building barracks and issuing rations at a low figure. The conference limits cover most of Massachusetts between the shore and Chester hills. Worcester, where the sessions of the two last years were held, is a central point, and much more convenient for nearly all that attend, than Northampton. Quite a number of important changes in preachers in the Springfield district are expected at this conference, which occurs in April. Trinity and State street churches in this city, Chicopee, Northampton, and possibly Westfield, will change, besides a number of smaller appointments. Trinity church will ask the transfer of Rev. Mr. Woods of Westfield; but as he has been there but two years, it is not certain that the appointing power will grant the request, especially as the Westfield church does not take kindly to the proposition. Should this change be made, Rev. Dr. Ela, who has been presiding elder of the district the past four years—as long as the rules of the church allow—will be asked for at Westfield.

Except the big snow storm of two weeks ago, nothing has occurred at the county seat of late that made more talk than the investigation at the city hall of a suspended police officer. Usually such an event would have no particular interest beyond the city officials, and friends of the "departed;" but the fact that the new city government is on probation, in the public mind, the suspension of an officer so lately reappointed, on the recommendation of the marshal, on charges running back three years, leads to the suspicion that there may be reasons for the act not visible to the naked eye. It is presumed that if the marshal had known how his gun was going to kick, he would not have fired at Officer Coote just as he did. At present the marshal appears to be the most seriously wounded, and as he is about retiring from the stage, this airing he gets, under the investigation of a subordinate, is unfortunate for his future usefulness. The testimony before this court of inquiry seems to show that our police force, of which we have been so proud, is not as pure as the "Beautiful Snow" which has dropped about us so profusely the present season.

Speaking of the big snow storm, what a boon it was for the youngsters of this generation! They have heard their grandfathers tell of the great storms they used to have when they were boys, and they have thought over and over again that to have lived in such a time would have been worth more than all the railroads, telegraphs and telephones of this age. Now they have something they can talk about when they get old, that will start the envy of the boys sixty years hence, and make them wish they had lived in 1882, provided they don't live in corner lots and have sidewalks to clear.

Colonel Rice, the appointee to the official shoes of Marshal Blair, has been heard from. His letter accepting the appointment is characteristic. Instead of saying "I accept," he goes into an argument about "law breakers, and their sympathizers," who have claimed he would not take the place because the city government failed to increase the salary of the office. John's combativeness is what will make his appointment to the office of marshal an unfortunate one, unless he manages to curb it. He loves notoriety, and his disposition to punish somebody is against his usefulness in that position. He has, however, other qualities much in his favor. He has dignity, a grace the office has been destitute of, of late, and much needed executive ability.

SUNNY COOK.

The last rail of the second track through the Hoosac Tunnel was laid last week Thursday. There is some ballasting and other work to be done yet, and the new track will not be used for a few weeks.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE

WONDERFUL SURGICAL OPERATION—REMOVAL OF URINARY STONES FROM THE BLADDER—SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they called Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their re-formation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation or the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from the constitutions of women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. 4w49

Lanty Leary.

Lanty was in love, you see,
With lovely, lively Rosie Carey,
But her father can't agree
To give the girl to Lanty Leary.
"Up to fun, away we'll run,"
Says she, "My father's so conthrairy,
Won't you follow me? won't you follow me?"
"Faith I will!" says Lanty Leary.

But her father died one day,
(I hear 'twas not from drinking wather,)
House and land and cash, they say,
He left by will to Rose, his daughter;
House and land and cash to seize,
Away she cut so light and airy;
"Won't you follow me? won't you follow me?"
"Faith I will!" says Lanty Leary.

Rose herself was taken bad,
The fayver worse each day was growin',
"Lanty, dear," says she, "'tis sad,
To th' other world I'm surely goin';
You can't survive my loss, I know,
Nor long remain in Tipperary;
Won't you follow me? won't you follow me?"
"Faith I won't!" says Lanty Leary.

DON'T, GIRLS.

Don't think it absolutely necessary to your happiness that every afternoon be spent in making calls or on the street shopping. Home is not a mere hotel, wherein to eat and sleep—too dreary to be endured without company from abroad; home work is not mere drudgery, but useful ministration to those we love.

Don't mistake giggling for cheerfulness, slang phrases for wit, boisterous rudeness for frank gaiety, impertinent speeches for bright repartees. On the other hand don't be prim, formal, stiff, nor assume a "company face," eloquent of "prunes, potatoes, prisms;" nor sit bolt upright in a corner—hands, feet, eyes and lips carefully posed for effect. An effect will be produced, but not the one you wish. Nor yet sit scornfully reserved, criticising mentally the dress, manners, looks, etc., of those around you. Make up your mind that your companions are, on the whole, a pretty nice set of people (if they are not you had no business to come among them); that there is something to respect and like in each of them, something to learn of all of them. Determine to have a nice time anyhow; then do your part to make it so. Be genial, cordial, frank. If you can play and sing ordinarily well, do not refuse to take your share in entertaining your companions in that way. You are not expected to be a Nilsson or Kellogg. If you cannot play or sing, say so frankly, and do not feel humiliated. You probably excel in some other accomplishment. Even if you do not, you can possess that one grand accomplishment to which all others are but accessories—that of being a "lady"—a true woman, gentle and gracious, modest and lovable.

Dear young girls, your lives are full of noble possibilities. There is but one thing earthly so truly admirable as a Christian lady, and that is a Christian "gentleman." If an "honest man be the noblest work of God," surely an "honest," true woman is his loveliest. Therefore, young maidens of America, give yourselves to Christ; let him so mold you that you may be kings' daughters indeed, all glorious within, all fair without.—Arthur's Magazine.

A BAD WINTER FOR LOGGING.—Owing to the open winter the logging interests of Minnesota and Wisconsin are suffering greatly. At Moose Lake camp one party, which could get in 800,000 logs if there was snow, does not expect to have 300,000 feet; another has 3,000,000 feet cut, but is unable to handle it; while a third, after abandoning a section where it expected to gather 1,600,000 feet if the snow held out, will be lucky to secure 200,000 feet. In the camps on the main Chippewa, Flambeau, and their tributaries, the open winter has reduced the cut of logs at least one-third the estimated amount of 600,000,000 feet. At Menomonee, Wis., thirty-five camps expect to bank 100,000,000 feet, and the loggers of La Crosse, if the mild weather continues to the end, will have but 100,000,000 feet from their season's work. The estimated cut on Black River was over 200,000,000 feet, of which probably not more than three-fourths will be secured. It is confidently predicted that a large number of small and new contractors will be ruined through the want of snow.

Damascus is the oldest city in the world. Tyre and Sidon have crumbled on the shore; Baalbec is a ruin; Palmyra is buried in a desert; Ninevah and Babylon have disappeared from the Tigris and the Euphrates. Damascus remains what it was before the days of Abraham—a centre of trade and travel—an isle of verdure in the desert; "a presidential capital," with martial and sacred associations extending through thirty centuries.

A ninety-seven pound Pennsylvania girl has a beau that tips the beam at 210. She keeps him in attendance every night up to 12 o'clock, seated comfortably in an arm chair. She explained to a companion, under the seal of secrecy, that beneath the cushion she kept her autumn leaves in a book, and as soon as they were sufficiently pressed she would give him the mitten.

Educate the stomach. When it is once accustomed to simple food, voracious appetite, distress and disease will soon disappear.

If you permit those dead weeds to stand about your young trees, look out for girdled trunks by the mice next spring.

A good husband, like a good base burner, never goes out nights.

A Wonderful Story.

In another part of our paper will be found the advertisement of a most wonderful story which is to be published in the NEW YORK WEEKLY. It is entitled, "Merciless Ben, the Hair-Lifter," and is from the pen of the highly-gifted and immensely-popular Ned Buntline. The NEW YORK WEEKLY shows an enterprise and energy truly wonderful, and its columns teem with the most beautiful stories and sketches. We predict that "Merciless Ben" will add tens of thousands to its already great circulation.

A POSER.

The following composition was placed upon the blackboard at a teachers' institute, and a prize of a Webster's Dictionary offered to any person who could read it and pronounce every word correctly. The book was not carried off, however, as twelve was the lowest number of mistakes in pronunciation made: "A sacrilegious son of Belial, who suffered from bronchitis, having exhausted his finances, in order to make good the deficit resolved to ally himself to a comely, lenient and docile young lady of the Malay or Caucasian race. He accordingly purchased a calliope and coral necklace of chameleon hue, and securing a suite of rooms, at a principal hotel, he engaged the head waiter as his coadjutor. He then dispatched a letter of the most unexceptionable calligraphy extant, inviting the young lady to a matinee. She revolted at the idea, refused to consider herself sacrificable to his desires, and sent a polite note of refusal, on receiving which he procured a carbine and a bowie knife, said that he would not now forge fetters hymeneal with the queen, went to an isolated spot, severed his jugular vein, and discharged the contents of his carbine into his abdomen. The debris was removed by the coroner." The mistakes in pronunciation were made on the following words: Sacrilegious, Belial, bronchitis, exhausted, finances, deficit, comely, lenient, docile, Malay, calliope, chameleon, suite, coadjutor, calligraphy, matinee, sacrificable, carbine, hymeneal, isolated, jugular and debris.

The State of Texas some time ago set apart a large tract of land in its northeast corner to pay for a new capitol, and it has just been transferred to some Chicago capitalists, who will furnish the necessary money for erecting the building. The land extends south a distance of 197 miles, with an average width of 27 miles, and is larger than the State of Connecticut, making them, probably, the largest land-owners in the world.

The color line has broken out in Brooklyn, N. Y., the board of education having refused to allow a well-to-do colored citizen to send his daughter to a certain public school, on the ground that there is a school for colored children in the same district. The case will be carried to the highest courts. It is stated that no colored children are allowed in the white schools in that city.

A rich copper mine has been rediscovered in the vicinity of Tucson, Arizona, within a few weeks. Nearly fifteen years ago it was first found, but the men who located the claim were driven from the mountain by hunger and neglected to take accurate bearings of the spot. Since then four or five prolonged attempts to find the rich deposits have failed.

A snowball stopped an elopement in Louisville. It was thrown by a boy in the street, knocking off the hat of the driver of the carriage in which the runaway couple were riding to a railroad station, and thus causing just enough delay to make them miss the train. Thus hindered, they were caught and separated by the girl's father.

One of the smart women of Auburn, Me., carries on a farm of fifty acres about four miles down the river. She makes nothing of a walk from the farm to the city, with a load of butter and eggs, and is said to bring in more produce in this way than by a team.

All the work done by the New Orleans criminal court since 1879 is invalid, according to a decision of the Louisiana court of appeals. This will release a large number of criminals, but can scarcely help several hanged murderers.

In searching the title to a piece of shipyard property in Marblehead recently, a queer deed was found in which a boundary line is described as extending from a pencil mark on a barn to a pencil mark on the schoolhouse fence.

Coal oil is now so plenty from the wells of Los Angeles that the Californian market is overstocked. The oil belts of California, from present indications alone, may be counted the richest in the world.

The Pennsylvania Railroad has nearly ready for use an experimental engine, with double ends, weighing some 60 tons, which is designed to handle heavy suburban passenger traffic with celerity.

Why is it that whenever you are looking for anything you always find it in the last place you look? The reason is, because you always stop looking when you find it.—Hawkeye.

Disappointment in matters of pleasure is hard to be borne; in matters affecting health it becomes cruel. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup never disappoints those who use it for obstinate coughs, colds, irritation of throat and lungs, etc.

STONES in the KIDNEYS

AND BLADDER EXPELLED—LONG SUFFERING OF ONE OF TROY'S BEST PEOPLE—A LUCKY MAN.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr. Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-Dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case, and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 7-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers.

Yours truly, JAMES ANDREWS.
No. 10 Marshal St., Ida Hill.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in ik fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. TRAGIC, WILD, AND TRUTHFUL.

A thrilling Story of Actual Life upon the Plains, entitled

MERCILESS BEN, THE HAIR LIFTER,

From the pen of

NED BUNTLINE.

who has founded the story on positive, genuine facts learned by him recently on a trip to New Mexico. The story is a constant succession of wild and strange adventures in the far Southwest—descriptive of scene and character nowhere else to be found; and will be published in the

NEW YORK WEEKLY.

CAPTAIN JACK, THE POET SCOUT,

Holds a prominent and well-deserved place in the story of

MERCILESS BEN,

THE TERROR OF THE APACHE TRIBE,

who yet lives, covered with wounds, a mark of their hatred toward the CONQUERER OF VICTORIA. This will be found in No. 17 of the

NEW YORK WEEKLY,

Now ready and for sale by every News Agent in the United States. As this story will be eagerly sought for throughout the entire continent, you must be wide awake, for

MERCILESS BEN,

THE MAN WHO NEVER

SPARED A FOE OR WRONGED A FRIEND.

Without exception it leads the race in the field of fiction.

Remember that "MERCILESS BEN" will appear in No. 17 of the New York Weekly.

The Love of an Honest Man.

There's many a thing that the maidens wish
As they journey along in life,
As they take their part in the busy world,
And share in its cares and strife;
Perhaps they wish for a cozy house,
With furniture spick and span—
But to crown the whole they care the most
For the love of an honest man.

Yes, pretty maidens, where'er you are,
In palace or humble cot,
Whether your life is fair and bright,
Or trial and toil your lot;
Whether your name is Flora May,
Or homely Mary Ann,
You will be in luck if you win that love—
The love of an honest man.

O, a maiden may prize her diamond set,
Or dresses of latest style;
Or inhabit a house of costly build,
With carpets of velvet pile;
But the greatest blessing to woman's life—
Let her gain it while now she can—
From her golden locks to her silver hairs,
Is the love of an honest man.

DOCTOR MARY CLARIMONT.

When Mary Clarimont's engagement was proclaimed to the world, there ensued a general expression of surprise.

Miss Clarimont was only one and twenty, a tall, imperial beauty, with dewy black eyes, a skin as fresh as damask roses, and dark brown hair coiled in shining bands at the back of her head.

She had just graduated from Medfield Medical University, and had taken out her diploma as an M. D.

'And only to think of it,' said Aunt Jo, bursting into tears of vexation and disappointment, 'that she must needs go and ruin all her prospects by getting engaged to Harry Marlow.'

'It does seem strange, Aunt Jo, when I sit down and think of it,' said Doctor Mary, laughing and blushing. 'Six months ago my profession was all the world to me. I neither wished nor cared for anything outside its limits.'

'Humph!' growled Aunt Jo. 'Any brainless idiot can get married and keep a man's house and mend his shirts for him, but you are made for something higher and more dignified, Mary.'

Mary's dew-bright eyes sparkled.

'Higher, Aunt Jo?' said she. 'More dignified? There you're mistaken. There's no higher or more dignified lot in life than that of the true wife of a noble husband.'

'Fiddlesticks!' said Aunt Jo. 'As if every poor fool who was dazzled by the glitter of a wedding-ring, didn't say the same thing. You've disappointed me, Mary Clarimont, and I'm ashamed of you, and that is the long and short of it.'

Mary smiled.

'Dear Aunt Jo,' said she, 'I shall not let my sword and shield rust, believe me. Harry has only his own talents to advance him in the world, and it will be at least a year before we shall be ready to marry. In the meantime, I shall accept the post of visiting physician to the Aldenbury Almshouse, and practice my profession just the same as if there were no engagement.'

'I wish to goodness there wasn't,' said Aunt Joe. 'I tell you what, Mary, I don't fancy that smiling, smooth-tongued young man of yours, and I never shall.'

Still Doctor Mary Clarimont kept her temper.

'I'm sorry, Aunt Jo,' she said plesantly, 'but I hope you will eventually change your mind.'

'I used to keep a thread and needle store when I was a young woman,' remarked Aunt Jo drily, 'and I always could tell the ring of a counterfeit coin when a customer laid it on the counter. I could then, and I can now; and I tell you what, Mary, there's base metal about Harry Marlow.'

Doctor Mary bit her lip.

'Perhaps. We will not discuss the subject further, Aunt Jo,' she said, with quiet dignity.

And the old lady said no more.

'Aunt Jo is wrong,' persisted the pretty young M. D. to herself.

'Mary is making a fool of herself,' thought Aunt Jo.

Aldenbury was a pretty manufacturing village with a main street shaded by umbrageous maples; and a little way out of the village, the almshouses, built and endowed by a certain smuggling sea captain, whose conscience had pricked him during his latter days, raised their gray stone gables to the sky, and made a picturesque background to the landscape.

Doctor Mary Clarimont made something of a sensation at Aldenbury.

Up to this time all the resident M. D.'s had been snuffy old gentlemen with wigs, or pert young ones with eye-glasses.

A beautiful young lady, who wrote prescriptions and compounded pills and potions, was a novelty in the town, and by no means a disagreeable one.

People rather liked the idea, once they had convinced themselves that the lady doctor thoroughly understood herself and her patients.

And the poor old people at the almshouse grew to love Doctor Mary, and listen with eager ears for the sound of her carriage-wheels over the gravel drive which led up to the portico.

It was a brilliant December day when the young physician stood in the neatly-carpeted reception-room, drawing on her fur gloves, previous to entering her neat phaeton once again, while she reiterated to the white-capped maid some directions respecting old Ann Mudgett's rheumatism, when the matron hurried in.

'Oh, I beg your pardon, Doctor Clarimont,' said she, 'but I clean forgot the new old woman.'

'The new old woman,' repeated Doctor Mary, with a smile.

'That is,' explained Mrs. Cunningham, 'she only came last night—a quiet old soul, half-blind, and quite bad with the asthma. Perhaps you'd better just see her before you go.'

So Doctor Mary went cheerfully into the little brick-paved room, with its white pallet-bed, and neatly-draped casement, where sat a poor shriveled-up woman, wrapped in a faded shawl.

She looked timidly up, as Doctor Mary came in, from under the borders of her cap.

'I'm a poor body, miss,' said she, 'and I'm sensible I'm making a deal of trouble in the world. But the Lord don't always take us, miss, when we'd like to go.'

'This is the doctor,' said Mrs. Cunningham.

The little woman would have risen up to make a feeble courtesy, but Doctor Mary motioned her to keep her seat.

'What is your name?' said she, pleasantly.

'Louise Marlow, miss.'

'Marlow? That is an unusual name, isn't it?' said Mary Clarimont, coloring in spite of herself.

'We're English, miss,' said the old woman, struggling bravely with her asthma. 'There ain't many of us in this country. I've a son, miss, in the law business, as any mother might well be proud of.'

'A son,' echoed Mrs. Cunningham, 'and you in the almshouse?'

'Not that it's his fault,' the old creature made haste to explain. 'My son is to be married to a fine proud young lady, as is fit for any prince in all the land, and of course he can't be expected to burden himself with a helpless old woman like me. He says I'm to write, and let him know how I get along, and if I'm sick, or anything, he'll try to see me. I sewed carpets until the asthma got hold of me, and supported myself comfortably. But of course I couldn't lay up anything for a rainy day—who could? And Harry couldn't help me, for he's getting ready to be married, poor lad. So I went to Doctor Merton, and asked him did he know of any decent place where an old woman like me could end her days in peace. And he gave me a card to come here, and some money to pay my traveling expenses—Heaven bless him! and here I am.'

Mary Clarimont had listened quietly to the garrulous tale, but the color had varied in her cheek more than once as she stood there.

'Is your son's name Harry Marlow?' she said, slowly and thoughtfully.

'Yes, miss, at your service,' said the old woman, with a duck of her white-capped head, which was meant to do duty in place of the impossible curtesy.

'Is he like this?' said Doctor Mary, taking a photograph from her pocket.

The old woman, with trembling hands, fitted on her iron-rimmed spectacles, and looked at the picture, uttering a little cry of recognition.

'Sure, miss, it's his own self,' she cried. 'You're acquainted with him then?'

'Somewhat,' said Doctor Mary, composedly, as she returned the photograph to its place.

'Perhaps you know the young lady my son is to marry?'

'Yes,' said Doctor Mary, writing something in her prescription-book, 'I have seen her.'

'Perhaps, miss,' faltered the old woman, 'you would give her my humble duty, and tell her I would just like to see her once, and see what she is like. There's no fear of my troubling her, miss, for I mean to end my days here. But I would like to see her just once. And if it wouldn't be asking too much, miss, would you please write to my son, and tell him where I am? for I am no scholar myself, and I'm his mother after all.'

'I'll write to him,' said Doctor Mary quietly; and so she went away.

'I never see a lady doctor afore,' said old Mrs. Marlow, with a long sigh; 'but she's a pretty creetur, and it seems good to have her around. I hope she'll come again soon.'

'You may be very sure of that,' said the matron brusquely. 'Doctor Clarimont ain't no one to neglect poor people because they are poor.'

That evening, Aunt Jo, frying crullers over the kitchen fire, was surprised by a visit from her niece, who came in, all wrapped in furs, with her cheeks crimsoned with the frosty wintry air.

'Bless me! this ain't never you?' said Aunt Jo, peering over the rims of her spectacles.

'I drove over to see you, Aunt Jo,' said Mary, 'to tell you that you were right. The metal was counterfeit.'

'Eh?' said Aunt Jo, mechanically ladling out the brown curly crullers, although she did not look at what she was doing.

'I have written to Harry Marlow, canceling our engagement,' said Doctor Mary calmly, albeit her voice faltered a little. 'The man who will heartlessly let his poor old mother go into an almshouse, sooner than take the trouble to maintain her, can be no fit husband for any woman.'

And then she sat down by the fire, and told Aunt Jo everything; for crabbed, crusty old Aunt Jo had been like a mother to her, and the girl's heart was full to overflowing.

When she had ceased speaking, Aunt Jo nodded her head.

'You have done well and wisely," said she.

Old Mrs. Marlow died that winter in Aldenbury Almshouse, with her head on Doctor Mary Clarimont's arm, and never knew that her garrulous confession had deprived her son of his promised wife.

And Mary says, quietly and resolutely, that her profession must be husband and home to her henceforward.

A LAND AGENT'S STORY.

A pretty good story is told about Land Agent Milner of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad, who one day had a party of Eastern farmers in tow, trying to sell each of them a farm in the rich Arkansas Valley. Milner had taken them into his light wagon, and behind his spanking team of bays had given them a grand ride, lasting all day. He had done his best to make them enthusiastic by rehearsing the stories, which he had at his tongue's end, of the marvelous crops of the valley, but to all intents it was "love's labor lost," for they would not 'thuse. This annoyed Milner, but he had his revenge in his reply to one of the party, who with a sardonic smile, asked:

'Well, Mr. Agent, is their anything that won't grow here?'

'Yes,' replied Milner, 'pumpkins won't.'

What!' exclaimed the cynical land-buyers together, 'pumpkins won't?'

'No' said Milner; 'there are men in this county who would give $250 an acre for land that would mature a crop of pumpkins. They never have been able to get a crop since I've been here, and that is ten years.'

'Well, how strange!' 'Why is it?' said land-buyer No. 1.

This was Milner's chance, and, with a serious expression, he replied: 'Well, sir, the soil is so rich that the vines grow so fast they wear the pumpkins out dragging them over the ground.'—F. S. Presbery in Kansas Sketches.

A young lady was recently noticed by her mother to be fondling and kissing a pet kitten. "Why, Mary," said the mother, "you have kissed that kitten more in five minutes than you have me in five years." "Don't you know why I'd rather kiss the kitten than you, mother?" "No, my child." "You haven't got whiskers!"

"What time is it, my dear?" asked a wife of her husband, whom she suspected of being drunk, but who was doing his best to look sober, "Well, my darling, I can't tell, 'cause you see there are two hands on my watch, and each points to a different figure, and I don't know which to believe."

HOW HE REPORTED THE WEDDING.

"I say!" said the police reporter, tipping his hat over his eyes and scratching the back of his head, "I don't know whether this is right!"

"Don't know whether what is right?" demanded the managing editor.

"This wedding. I went there last night and they gave me a heap of rot about their frocks, but I don't know whether it come out straight or not. Now here is Mrs. Isaac Brown. I've got her in a pannier silk, trimmed a la gros grain, with a black point lace underskirt and box pleated hair. Does that sound natural?"

"Who sent you to a wedding?" asked the managing editor, contemptuously. "Don't you know that gros grain is a color? That was a gros grain, box-pleated dress, trimmed a la black point lace, and her hair was combed en pannier. You ought to know better than to get things mixed that way. Who else did you get? How was the bride dressed?"

"I've got her all right," replied the police reporter. "She wore a white bouffant with a princess of Thule veil; the underskirt cut decollete around the bottom, and trimmed with a basque at the sides."

"That's better," said the managing editor, encouragingly. "That sounds something like. How was her hair?"

"Her hair was shirred," replied the police reporter. "Shirred at the sides and corsaged on top."

"I don't believe that's right," observed the managing editor. "Read that again."

"It was corsaged at the side and shirred on top," said the police reporter, referring to his notes.

"Of course," smiled the managing editor, "It makes all the difference in the world. You never knew a woman with her hair corsaged on top in your life. Who else have you got?"

"Here's the bride's mother. She pranced around in an iridescent bead, cut low-necked and hoisted up on the side with some kind of a plant. I've forgotten the name of it."

"I know that style," said the managing editor, resting his elbows on his desk and his chin on his hands. "It had a big rip down the back, didn't it?"

"That's it, like a V and tied up with a green shoestring!"

"Of course!" grinned the managing editor. "You can't fool me on frocks. You want to say that it was a—what color did you say the shoestring was? Green? Then the frock must have been red!"

"No, it was the color of a clam," said the police reporter.

"Oh, yes! Yes, yes! I know. You want to say that it was a gorgeous, deep sea pearl-colored business, trimmed with a gore en pouf, and caught at the side with a delicate floral design, which was especially rich in its artistic effect. Did you get her hair?"

"Her hair was French. I had it somewhere, but I don't find it. It was either French or Spanish, and I forget which."

"You ought to be careful about such things, but we'll call it a la Pyrenees, and she can take her pick as to the side of the mountains she belongs to. Who else was there?"

"Miss Jenny Smith was the bridesmaid. She wore silk socks, with a streak of yellow tapestry up the side. Her hair was bumped."

"How do you mean?" demanded the managing editor.

"It was plastered down in front and stuck up behind, like a hen's tail."

"Banged! you mean. How was her dress cut?"

"Well, it was an even stretch from the back of her neck half way up the front stairs. That was one piece. Then she had on a petticoat that showed the whole front, and was trimmed with some cloudy stuff that had dropped down at one end. That back part was the energy, though, and she called it a train, with some kind of a law term in front of it."

"Was it revised statutes?" asked the editor.

"No, that wasn't it."

"Did it have anything to do with alimony and the custody of the children?"

"That wasn't it. It was a train with something legal in front of it. I tried to remember, because they have it in the city hall."

"Couldn't have been anything about contempt of court, could it?"

"That's it!" exclaimed the police reporter; "a court train, and up around the lower part of the top part of the—of where it hooked on to the body part, you know!"

"The bustle?"

"Yes; she had it tied up with broad, white tape and the darnedest big bow-knot you ever saw."

"Certainly; that's right," said the managing editor: "You want to say that she had a court train looped back with a delicate tape so as to show the contour of the petticoat, which was elaborately finished with loops of linen."

"I see," replied the police reporter, making a memorandum. "Her cousin was Miss Mears of Quogue. I only got her hair. It was poached on top with revers, and had a big pair of silver tongs stuck through the hind part. Better say anything about that?"

"Certainly. You've got it right. Did they have a big supper?"

"They had boned head cheese and candy and lobster and some shaky stuff. Lots of wine."

"Eh?"

"You bet!"

"Then just give the caterer's name and say that on this occasion the table fairly groaned under the weight of his excellent provisions, and even the most fastidious appetites succumbed to the charms of his delicacies. How are you going to wind it up?"

"I say that the guests danced until a late, or rather an early hour in the morning."

"That's business!" smiled the managing editor. "If you do it as well as the last part, you've got a magazine article."—Brooklyn Eagle.

An authority says: "It may be regarded as an established fact that apples will keep better in moist or damp cellars than in dry ones." But that depends altogether on how many small boys there are in the family. It isn't so much in the humidity of the cellar as in the gorgeability of the boy.—Quincy Modern Argo.

"I should think that you would feel badly about leaving this place," said the laundress to the departing cook. "I'm not; I'm glad to go. I ain't sorry to leave any of you—except the dog—poor old Tiger, he's always washed the plates for me."

A great deal depends upon a man's courage when he is slandered and traduced. Weak men are crushed by detraction, but the brave hold on and succeed.

The Mother's Lullaby.

Lullaby, baby dear, close thy bright eyes,
For angels are lighting the stars in the skies;
The moon, going homeward from over the sea,
Sends down a good-night to my baby and me,

Each tiny flower in its cool, mossy bed,
Is drowsily, dreamily nodding its head;
Little birds in their nests in the branches will swing,
Their heads tucked away under soft, downy wing.

Little waves from the pebbly shore murmuring creep
Back for old Mother Ocean to rock them to sleep;
I rock thee, my baby dear, close to my breast,
And sing thee the song that thou lovest the best.

Thy father, my darling one, sails the blue sea;
Though far o'er the waters, he's thinking of thee.
But slumber is o'er thee beginning to creep—
The lullaby's over; my baby's asleep.

A CUP OF COLD WATER.

It was night at the Michigan Central station in Detroit—late, dark, silent night, and only a few dim lights broke the gloom into dense shadows that were more fearful than utter darkness, and no traveler was so unfortunate as to be compelled to linger in the dreary place.

At least, that was the impression the vast silence gave, but there were two travelers who, when no trains were coming or going, waited in the depot through the chill morning hour. One was a man who had come by the latest train, and whom the conductor helped into the depot, and who, through weariness, had fallen asleep on the cushion. He was ticketed through, and his destination was the grave; no one needed to glance at him twice to see that he had almost reached the end of his journey. The other passenger was on the road to ruin; he, too, had nearly arrived at the terminus; at least, his pallid, sin-marked face, and ill-assorted, ragged clothes seemed to indicate that he had nearly touched the foot of the ladder; the world had taken his measure and named him "tramp," but he had wrought his own ruin; low and evil as he was, he never blamed any one but himself.

This man had been watching the sleeper for a long time, had noted his weakness, his respectable appearance, and that he had a watch-chain at his vest pocket and a respectable satchel under his head; and he crept nearer, nearer, with the one horrible thought uppermost; he would rob the dying man! He had no fear of the act. He hugged the baseness of it to his soul. But he did fear that some one would come in and interrupt his project. If the man moved? Why, a turn of the wrist at his throat would settle him.

He did not move. The tramp took the satchel and the watch simultaneously, and was ready to fly, but the sick man merely groaned faintly as his head dropped on the cushion. In the face of actual death he slept as quietly as a child on its mother's breast.

As the tramp looked with greedy eyes at the watch to note its commercial value he started and shivered as if an official hand had been laid on his shoulder, stared wildly at the face of the sick man and back to the watch, which, with open case lay in his hand; then he muttered something that had the name of "God" in it, and instantly it was back in the pocket of the sick man, and the satchel was under his head again.

What had he seen?

The picture of a captain in the Southern army, wearing the Confederate uniform. A face that resembled that of the man who, when he lay dying of thirst, and was about to be transfixed by a Confederate bayonet, gave him a draught of spring water, and, setting him on his own horse, turned him to the North and said:

'When you meet a vanquished man, spare him, as I have spared you.'

And he raised his blue cap in the air and swore to remember.

Now they had met again!

An hour later a carriage drove in haste to the depot, and first of all a child came running in. She looked at the tramp a moment and hesitated, then flung herself on the prostrate form.

'Grandpa, dear grandpa, wake up! We've come to take you home.'

A gentleman and lady hurried in.

'Father,' said the lady, kneeling by him, 'we missed the time, but here we are now. Do wake up.'

The tramp was fanning him with his cap; a certain dignity was in his face and manner as he did so. The sick man opened his eyes, smiled feebly, and said:

"Give—me a drink—of—water.'

The tramp brought the water and knelt as he lifted the helpless head and placed the cup of water to the cold lips. When he laid him back there was a smile sealed upon them, and the lady and the little girl sobbed aloud.

The tramp rose to his feet, but his cringing manner was gone.

'The battle is most over,' he said, gently. 'He told me to remember, and I did; I would have died for him.'

He has done better; he has lived for him, and men touch their hats to him now, who three months ago would have spurned him from their doors.

Romance, do you say? No, my dear sir, it is reality!—M. Quad.

PERILS OF DRESSMAKING.

The occupation of dressmaking is by no means so innocuous as is generally supposed. A dressmaker just admitted into the Leeds dispensary, in England, was found to have a distinct blue line on her gums, with simultaneous symptoms, such as furred tongue, inflammation of the lips and general debility—all signs pointing to the probability of poisoning by lead. The doctor in attendance on her for some time failed to discover the source, and was beginning to think the blue line had been caused in some other way, when he accidentally learned from a merchant that silken thread, being sold by weight and not by length, is sometimes adulterated with sugar of lead. He then questioned the patient, and she informed him that it had been a common practice with her when at work to hold silk, as well as all other kinds of thread, in her mouth, and that she had done this the more readily with silk, inasmuch as it had a sweet taste. The characteristic is a sure indication of the presence of lead, and all thread possessing it, should either be rejected or used with caution. It will be found that the silk thread of the best makers is tasteless, whereas some inferior threads are sweet.

'Is snow warming?' asks a Vermont paper. Egad, yes! You get a good solid snow ball tunked into your ear and you'll think the ear is afire for the next two hours.

It is easier to suppress the first desire than to satisfy all that follow it.

SAVED BY A DREAM.

On the afternoon of the day preceding the late terrible accident on the Hudson River Railroad at Spuyten Duyvel Pass—well named, indeed—'two souls with but a single thought, two hearts that throbbed as one,' were linked in matrimony in the lovely city of Binghampton. A bridal trip over the Albany and Susquehanna Railroad to Albany and thence to New York was planned. It was carried out so far as going to Albany, where, in the palatial Delevan, the pride of the Lelands, they passed the first night of their married life.

The next day was spent, until near noon, in visiting the State Capitol and looking through its grand apartments.

Then the new-made husband proposed to continue their trip to the great city of New York, on the Chicago express, which was to leave on the Hudson River road right after their early dinner hour—at 2.40.

To the surprise of the husband, the bride objected to going any farther from home.

'I had a terrible dream!' she said. 'A dream which woke me this morning, and which I cannot drive from my mind. I would have told it at once to you, but I feared you would call me a nervous little thing, and laugh at me!'

'I do not believe in dreams as omens of good or ill, my darling,' he said. 'Tell me your dream, however.'

'I dreamed this,' she answered. 'We were in an elegant palace car. There were fair women and brave men all around us. One noble-looking, gray-haired man spoke to you and told you your joy carried him back over thirty years through a sea of bright memories to his own wedding-day and trip. Suddenly we hear a crash, then quick as thought the car was all ablaze—on fire. You clasped me in your arms, while I saw the good old man fall, fainting in the blaze! On every side I heard shrieks and cries, and I felt the hot breath of the flames come fiercely into our faces. Then I woke. You were asleep, and till now I have felt ashamed to speak of a mere dream. But do not go any farther. Stay here a week if you desire, but when we travel let it be toward home.'

'My little wife is foolish to heed a dream as ominous,' he replied. 'But your first request shall not be denied. We will keep our room here, and see how we can enjoy life in Albany for another day at least.'

They did so, and the very next morning at breakfast the bride, horror-stricken, read about the very scene her dream had pictured—how a noble gray-haired man of wealth, a Senator, had perished in his own car; how the bride of a day, a fair being like herself, had died in the flames, clasped in a young husband's arms.

'Let us go home—go right home to-day and stay there!' she pleaded.

They went; and now that young husband, with his bride, believes in at least one ominous dream.—N. Y. Weekly.

"MY COUNTRY, 'TIS OF THEE."

Our national air, the great hymn to which is given the name of our country itself, was the result of a single spontaneous burst of patriotic eloquence. The author is an eminent Baptist minister, now living within a few miles of the Hub. He is Rev. S. F. Smith, D. D., and he is also the author of some thirty other hymns. It is in America that his name will live however; and the better to give an idea of the birth of his great hymn, his own words may be quoted: One day, I think in the month of February, 1831 or 1832, in turning over the leaves of music books, I fell in with the tune, God save the King! though I did not know it at that time to be the English national air. I at once wrote a patriotic hymn in the same measure and spirit, and soon after gave it to Mr. Lowell Mason, together with other pieces, and thought no more of it. On the next 4th of July, I found that the piece was brought out for the first time at a children's celebration of the day, in Park Street church, Boston. This was the beginning of its course. It gradually found its way into music books for children, and into public schools in various places; and thus, I cannot but think, may have had an influence in infusing into many childish hearts a love of the country, which prepared them to battle for the right, the true, and the good, when the time of peril to our institutions and our country came.

"I have often remarked that if I had supposed the piece would have been so popular, I should have taken more pains to perfect it. 'Yes,' says some one, 'and thus, perhaps, you would have spoiled it.' It has won its way, most unexpectedly to myself, into the hearts of the people. I have heard most gratifying narratives of the places where the circumstances under which it has served as the expression of heartfelt love of the country,—in schools, in huts, on Western prairies, in churches, on the eve of battle, and in soldiers' hospitals. I never designed it for a national hymn. I never supposed I was writing one."

"My country, 'tis of thee,
Land of the noble free,
Of thee I sing."

SAVE THE OLD PAPER.—Never throw away the old paper. If you have no wish to sell it, use it in the house. Some housekeepers prefer it to cloth for cleaning many articles of furniture. For instance, a volume written by a lady who prided herself on her experience and taste says: "After a stove has been blackened, it can be kept looking very well for a long time by rubbing it with paper every morning. Rubbing with paper is a much nicer way of keeping the outside of a tea-kettle, coffee-pot, and tea-pot bright and clean than the old way of washing them in suds. Rubbing with paper is also the best way of polishing knives, tinware and spoons; they shine like new silver. For polishing mirrors, windows, lamp chimneys, etc., paper is better than dry cloth. Preserves and pickles keep much better if brown paper instead of cloth is tied over the jar. Canned fruit is not so apt to mould if a piece of writing paper, cut to fit the can, is laid directly on the fruit. Paper is much better to put under a carpet than straw."

'Were I to be candid, I would say that you were just about the nicest fellow I ever met,' she said, while leaning on his arm in front of a confectionery window. He bought the taffy.

Epitaph in a country churchyard: 'Here lies the body of John Robinson, and of Ruth, his wife,' and underneath it this text: 'Their warefare is accomplished.'

SATURDAY, MARCH 4, 1882.

SENATOR HOAR made a powerful plea for the Chinese in the United States Senate on Wednesday.

THE House committee on elections at Washington has decided that the Utah seat is vacant, holding that neither Cannon nor Campbell are entitled to it.

QUEEN VICTORIA was shot at Thursday evening, while walking to her carriage at Windsor, by Roderick McLean, but was not harmed. McLean says he was moved to the act by hunger.

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW'S 75th birthday was celebrated on Monday in many cities, and in numerous schools throughout the country, though the poet's recent sickness prevented any family demonstration. At Portland, Me., his native city, flags were displayed, and there was a large public meeting in the evening.

STEPHEN N. GIFFORD, the veteran clerk of the Massachusetts Senate, is to be honored with a dinner at the United States Hotel, Boston, next Friday, on the completion of his 25th year of service. Ex-Gov. Claflin will preside, and there will be a large attendance. During these years there have been 610 different members of the Senate, of whom 110 are known to be dead.

THE House at Boston on Thursday passed to a third reading the bill providing for the sale of the State stock in the Boston & Albany Railroad, by a vote of 144 to 55. The petitioners for a law allowing two-thirds or three-quarters of a jury to render a verdict have been given leave to withdraw. The committee on woman suffrage have reported a bill allowing women to vote in all municipal and town affairs, and to hold city and town offices. The committees are now reporting business at a rapid rate.

THE Utah polygamists are becoming alarmed at the disposition manifested in Congress to adopt measures to put an end to their iniquitous practices, and the Mormon Legislature last Saturday adopted a memorial to Congress protesting against the overthrow of their political rights, also denying everything wrong that has ever been charged against them. On the other hand the Latter Day Saints at Dennisport, Mass., who are Mormons, but not polygamists, at a large meeting last Sunday adopted resolutions denouncing polygamy and expressing sympathy in the movement against the sinful ways of their Utah brethren. The Edmunds bill, as passed by the Senate, is generally approved throughout the country, and it is hoped that it will speedily pass the House and become a law.

LIKE a thunderbolt from a clear sky came the intelligence last Saturday that President Arthur had nominated Roscoe Conkling for associate justice of the supreme court. It need not have caused much surprise, for it has been understood for some time that Mr. Arthur was anxious to have Conkling back at Washington, and would eventually offer him some good position. It may be unjust to say that Guiteau made Conkling's nomination possible; but it was nevertheless a shock to most people, who can but feel that it comes at this time with exceedingly poor taste, and is little less than an outrage. Senator Hoar attacked the nomination ferociously, and it was referred to the committee—an unusual step in the case of an ex-Senator. The committee reported favorably, and Conkling was confirmed Thursday, by a vote of 39 to 12, many Senators not voting. In voting against him, Senators Hoar and Dawes voiced pretty accurately the feeling of the Old Bay State. Mr. Conkling has integrity and ability, but he has never shown any evidence of a judicial poise of mind, such as is becoming and necessary in a judge. It was not known yesterday morning whether he would accept or not. He declined the chief justiceship in 1873; but things have changed since then, and he may now be ready to take the lowest place on the bench. Ex-Senator Sargent was nominated and confirmed at the same time as minister to Germany, instead of secretary of the interior, as he had expected.

ON Monday the services ordered by Congress, commemorative of the life and public services of the late President Garfield, were held in the hall of the House of Representatives, before a distinguished audience, comprising the President and his Cabinet, judges of the supreme court, members of the diplomatic corps, officers of the army and navy, and many other men prominent in public life. The oration, by ex-Secretary Blaine, was an earnest, dispassionate, just and tender tribute to the murdered President. Those who expected that Mr. Blaine would rake over the embers of last summer's factional quarrel, and fan it into fresh life, were disappointed. The address was largely a sketch of the leading events in Garfield's life; the liberty-loving ancestry from which he sprang; the independent poverty through which he made his way; his rapid advancement, within six years, from a position as president of a college to that of State Senator, major general in the army, and then representative-elect to Congress; his long and faithful service in the House; the love of his constituents, the trust of his country, the breadth, variety and value of his contributions to debate, and his influence in shaping the laws; the circumstances of his elevation to the Presidency, the few months of his administration, and his tragic death. The Conkling affair was touched upon briefly, enough to vindicate the dead President, without exciting controversy among the living; while the tender and eloquent sketch of the religious element in his character, and of his last days, made a fitting conclusion to an address which was admirable in every respect.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Spring.

Full moon to-day.

Bluebirds abound.

The river is at high water mark.

"The stormy March has come at last."

There is not much frost left in the ground.

Commuion services at the churches to-morrow.

The "pussy" willows are out in spring array.

Thursday's mild air made overcoats somewhat superfluous.

George A. Griffin started for Montreal Thursday night, to buy some horses.

Rev. Benton Smith of Waltham preaches at the Universalist church to-morrow.

The meadow trees had a handsome coating of white frost last Saturday morning.

February bade us good-bye with a mild breath, and departed as quietly as a kitten.

Park street has been in a fairly navigable condition this week, for boats of light draft.

The roads are very muddy, and traveling by highway is not an unalloyed delight just now.

Rev. Paul H. Pitkin of Springfield will occupy the pulpit of the Congregational church to-morrow.

The Marshall place, on Pleasant street, corner of Walnut, is to be sold at auction on the 21st inst.

Are we to have a caucus to nominate town officers this year? A good many voters think there ought to be one.

H. Scism has a brood of 11 chickens which were hatched last week, and are running around the yard as lively as crickets.

A west-bound freight the other day took through two new locomotives for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad.

The "almanac day" for March gave promise of a charming month; but March is a treacherous old fellow on the weather business.

Rev. E. A. Perry of Quincy has accepted his call to the Universalist church in this place, and will begin his pastorate next month.

Town meeting will be along two weeks from next Monday, and candidates for office are getting their sails in trim to catch every favoring breeze.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Young Men's Library Association will be held at the library rooms next Monday evening, at 7.30 o'clock.

E. A. Bailey advertises in another column to sell at private sale a quantity of household furniture, farming utensils, etc., at his farm on the Three Rivers road.

The ladies of the Universalist society had a pleasant and largely attended social Wednesday evening, with Landlord Stone and wife at the Nassowanno House.

Dr. Stowe has tendered his resignation of the position he has occupied for the past six years as chorister of the Universalist choir, finding the duties too burdensome.

Printers' ink brushed on the trees is said to be a sure cure for canker worms. A liberal use of the same material is equally efficient as a remedy for business depression.

"Sid." Kelsey was called before the bar of justice the other morning to answer to the charge of being a common drunkard, but his case was continued until next month.

A purse of $140 has been presented to George A. Hunt of this village, who has been out of health for a long time, and for some months has been confined to his house.

Superintendent Bentley of the New London Northern Railroad had an arm painfully injured a few days ago, while rescuing a lady who was falling under a train at Stamford.

There is talk in railroad circles of shortening up the time of the fast trains between Boston and New York to six hours, the coming summer. The fast expresses now take six hours and a half for the run.

The music committee of the Universalist church have not yet engaged a soprano singer to fill the vacancy occasioned by Mrs. Lawton's resignation. Mrs. E. F. Willis of Monson was secured for last Sunday, and is expected to sing again to-morrow.

A. R. Barker has been bailed out of jail under $200 bonds, and it is thought probable that the pending sentence against him for breaking jail will never be pronounced, his long imprisonment and expulsion from the bar being considered sufficient punishment.

The second new engine of the Underhill pattern was run out from the Boston and Albany shops at Springfield on Saturday. It has 20-inch cylinders and a 26-inch stroke, and, with the exception of the one completed a short time since, is the largest locomotive on the road.

A spur track is to be put in very soon from the New London Northern road to the site of the new wire mills, which will be located a few rods in the rear of the buildings on the Warner farm. Contractors are figuring on the plans for the buildings, and the contract will be awarded soon.

The Palmer Dramatic Club will be prepared to entertain the public on the 16th or 17th of this month. The club have taken an unusual amount of pains to select such pieces as cannot fail to interest and amuse, and with their best cast of characters will surely merit even more than the usual amount of patronage.

The regular monthly meeting of the Eastern Hampden Medical Society was held with Dr. Fuller of Monson, Thursday afternoon, when Dr. Foster of Wilbraham read an essay on "Scarlatina." Dr. Ellis of Monson and Dr. Newton of Stafford Springs were admitted to membership. The next meeting of the society will be held with Dr. Hannum of Ludlow.

Plans are about completed by the New London Northern and the Fitchburg railroads for a fine new union passenger station at Miller's Falls. It will be built of brick, and will replace the old wooden structure destroyed by fire some time since. At present an old passenger car, with an old freight car for a telegraph office and baggage room, are made to serve the purposes of a depot.

Eggs are coming into market quite plentifully now, and have within a few days dropped in price from 40 to 30 cents. Butter is scarce and high, the best dairy article selling at from 38 to 40 cents a pound. A cheaper article, politely termed butter, but in fact oleomargarine, can be bought for about 28 cents. Apples are few and far between, and not very choice, but are quoted at $4.50 per barrel. Oranges range from 15 to 60 cents a dozen, according to quality.

Manager Hitchcock of the skating rink has decided to have a masquerade gathering at Wales Hall on Monday evening, March 20th, which will be welcome news to our young people, and will without doubt call out a large attendance, judging from the success which attended the similar gathering at Monson last week. Until 9 o'clock only those who are masked will be allowed to skate, but after that others can enjoy the rollers until 10.30. Mr. Hitchcock opened at Northampton this week, and is meeting with excellent success.

Our farmers and others interested in ensilage will find much valuable information on the subject in the Report of Proceedings of the Ensilage Congress held in New York Jan. 25–26, which has just been published by the New York Plow Co., of 55 Beekman street. In addition to the report of the discussions, there are numerous suggestions, and some thirty instructive letters from practical farmers all over the country who have had experience in storing and feeding ensilage. The pamphlet is sold for 30 cents.

Some misinformed Palmer correspondent of the Springfield Union says that "A committee of the Congregational church, consisting of Dr. Warren, J. B. Shaw and O. P. Allen went to Worcester Monday, to tender to Rev. A. F. Newton formal notice of his call to the pastorate of the church. He will probably accept and be confirmed without delay." As we understand the matter, the formal notice of his call was sent to Mr. Newton by mail last week, and the gentlemen who visited him on Monday did so in no official capacity whatever, but merely as private individuals. We are unable to learn that Mr. Newton has yet given any intimation whatsoever as to whether he will accept or decline the call.

SHALL IT BE MAJORITY OR MINORITY RULE?

Mr. Editor:—It would seem that minorities under the Congregational order of things here have more exalted ideas of how church and society affairs should be conducted, than the most adept political managers of the State. In the latter case majorities rule the State, but as seen from the standpoint mentioned, and lately developed here, you would conclude that majorities had no rights that minorities were bound to respect.

It is very doubtful if a case can be found on record where a church and society have voted by so large a majority to call a minister to a pastorate, where the minority in so strong opposition have failed to offer the name of any candidate to be voted for, and by so doing reducing the matter to a yea and nay vote, which never should be. They have had the best average talent from the four quarters of New England and New York, and not a name, it would appear, had sufficient ability for consideration from this very learned and exacting minority. It was thought some six months ago that the supreme dictatorship which has been held in church and society matters, for the last number of years, would be void and of no effect; but it is understood that orders have been issued to defeat the will of the majority at all hazards. When and where was ever such conduct manifested? Who of the church membership in this contest support and sustain the prayer meetings, and other church ordinances, and are always found at their post through sunshine and storm? Do you affirm, Mr. Editor, that it is the minority? In this case, if so, you will have to report elsewhere, as it will not be believed in Palmer; rather look for the opposition in the billiard saloon, where young men are drawn not into the Sabbath school or church, but are soon weighed in the balance of good morals and found wanting.

How different the result in a church which has lately called a pastor. I am informed that a hall was full of ladies and gentlemen—and in my opinion ladies in membership should be eligible to vote in all church affairs. Three candidates were to be voted for, on informal ballot. On the formal ballot the favorite led, of course, and when a rising vote was taken every one was on their feet and confirmed the will of the majority. All was peace and good fellowship. This was Christian, more like the pattern the Master set.

The old veterans, so to speak, who have "held the fort" for thirty years or more, through good and evil report, have been called home. It is only here and there one; soon they will have passed over and beyond. Do you talk of a divided house? Take heed from a like cause and final results in a neighboring town, and beware lest their fate is yours. Gentlemen, fall in, fall in line, and help sustain the banner of the fathers; carry it high, and see well to it that the light that has burned so brightly in the past, does not go out in oblivion and eternal darkness, and in the end you will receive a reward, and there will be no mistake about it.

BELCHERTOWN.

The Marlboro Times, in a recent issue, speaks in the following complimentary manner of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Aldrich, formerly of this town, who have charge of the almshouse in that place: "Mr. Burnham Wardell paid a recent visit to our town farm, received the courtesies of the superintendent and wife, and expressed himself as favorably impressed with the institution. We believe that the town never had a more efficient family in charge of this important trust than the present incumbent."

HOLLAND.

Capt. Leonard M. Morris, who died at St. Johnsbury, Vt., on the 16th ult., at the age of 92, was a native of this town, and was formerly prominent in town affairs, being selectman and captain in the militia, and also representing the town in the Legislature in 1828. He moved to St. Johnsbury some 50 years ago, and was traveling agent of the Fairbanks scale works for a number of years. He had been totally blind for the last 12 years, but kept up a lively interest in passing events. Three generations were present at his funeral on the 18th, which was attended by a large number of neighbors and friends.

All the schools in town closed last week except the model one in district No. 1, which has a reserved fund for a two-week's longer session.

C. I. Burleigh A Co. piled a quantity of ice on the bank of Thresher's pond Tuesday. The rain and damp wind Wednesday lowered the stack considerably, and they have covered the remainder.

The Congregational society have received from McShane & Co., bell founders of Baltimore, Md., a fifteen hundred pound bell, which was hung on Monday by Porter Cross of Springfield. The bell has the appearance of perfection, and will be an agreeable change from the old one, which has been cracked for years.

The death of Mrs. John P. Stockton, of Montclair, N. J., on the 21st ult., at the age of 32 years, of malaria, typhoid type, terminating in hemorrhage of the bowels, was a sudden and severe blow to all her friends. She leaves a husband and six young children to mourn her loss. She was a lovely woman, lived the Christian life, and died the Christian's death. All mourn her seemingly untimely death. The funeral was held the following Tuesday, at the homestead of the late John B. Morris, Esq., she being a granddaughter of the deacon. Hon. John P. Stockton, attorney general of New Jersey, and father of the bereaved husband, was present at the funeral. Mrs. Stockton's remains have not been interred yet.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. M. C. Stebbins of Springfield will preach to-morrow at the Union church, and Rev. Mr. Ricketts of Wales at the Baptist church.

Dr. Ruggles has sold the patent for his plant duster and potato bug and cotton worm destroyer to Boston parties, for a round sum. The purchasers propose to organize a stock company, with a capital of $150,000, for their manufacture on a large scale, and say they will start off with a lot of 100,000 machines to begin with.

The following item from the Fitchburg Sentinel has some local interest: L. J. Brown has recently purchased the historic wheelbarrow on which he wheeled Dr. Benjamin Franklin to Leominster after the famous contest for representative to Congress in the 9th district, of which Fitchburg formed a part, in 1860. The candidates were Goldsmith F. Bailey of this place and Eli Thayer of Worcester. Mr. Brown made a bet with Dr. Silas Ruggles (then a local druggist, now a resident of Palmer), that if Mr. Bailey was elected he would wheel Dr. Franklin, who was a colored whitewash artist, to Leominster, and if Mr. Thayer was elected, Dr. Ruggles was to perform the same feat. Mr. Bailey was handsomely elected, and Mr. Brown as handsomely paid the wager two days after the election. The artist was arrayed in white pantaloons, a flaming red frock, profusely decorated with stars, and a tall white beaver. A salute of three guns was fired when the party started, and three more when the conveyance returned. The Leominster band accompanied the vehicle. The colored brother was immensely delighted with his ride. Dr. Franklin fell in a barn and fractured his neck several years ago, but the other actors in the scene, including the wheelbarrow, are still in good condition.

BRIMFIELD.

The high school closed on Friday, with a public examination during the day, and a social interview in the evening.

The saw and grist mill property at East Brimfield has been sold to Charles F. Macomber of Chicopee, for $3700.

On Thursday evening the American Band of Fiskdale, in connection with the Waverly Dramatic Club of that place, gave a band concert, and the drama "Down by the Sea," at the town hall, followed by a dance to the music of Bacon & Kenfield's full orchestra. Although not announced on the bill, it is reported that most of the company called at the Brimfield House and subscribed their assent to the fundamental principles of the revised version of the Munroe doctrine.

W. W. McClench, Esq., of Chicopee, was greeted on Tuesday evening with a full house, at the high school hall. He gave a very able and instructive lecture on "Samuel Adams and Local Government," tracing briefly and clearly the history of his time and generation, also the growth of the spirit of independence which Adams did much to excite, and giving a vivid picture of the times of a century ago. Mr. McClench formerly taught in the Hitchcock Free High School, and made many friends, who were very glad of the opportunity to hear him.

Rev. S. V. McDuffee and family moved into the new parsonage on Monday, and he commences his pastorate next Sunday. Gilbert Clark of Ludlow, who moved his goods, had a varied experience. Starting from Ludlow on Monday morning with two loads on sleds, when he reached Three Rivers, on account of the thaw, he was obliged to unite his teams and have one load. Reaching here in the evening and securing a team wagon, on Tuesday he returned to Three Rivers, and arrived here in the evening with the second load. On Wednesday morning when he went for his sled, which he left by the side of the street, it was gone. After a thorough search, in which he was assisted by several persons, it was found in the meadow south of the street, where it had been thrown and backed into a ditch. Comment is not needed; the act speaks for itself.

LUDLOW.

The Ludlow Manufacturing Co. has purchased 1,500,000 bricks, preparatory to building a new mill the coming spring and summer. They are now being shipped to them from Holyoke.

A Ludlow correspondent writes as follows: "The friends and parishioners of Rev. S. V. McDuffee, numbering about 50, met at the parsonage Thursday afternoon and evening, Feb. 23d, to bid good bye to our departing pastor. The afternoon was spent pleasantly but with sad forebodings, for we realized very keenly that as a parish we were making our last visit with our beloved pastor. Mrs. Severance, acting as the Dorcas of the society, raised between $30 and $40, and it was presented to the pastor in behalf of the society by Allie Atchinson, Mr. McDuffee replying in feeling and tender terms. He said that he had formed strong attachments to the people in Ludlow, and that he disliked very much to have them severed; he felt as though he had many friends and believed that he had no enemies. Last Sabbath he preached his farewell sermon to a large congregation. He chose for his text 1 Cor., 2:2. Referring to Corinth he said it was an idolatrous city; was remarkable for its corruption and licentiousness, yet Paul was determined to preach the gospel. Paul chose this unpopular theme for his work and esteemed it the most important. He said he had endeavored to preach the gospel. He did not wish to preach "with enticing words of man's wisdom," but "Jesus Christ and Him crucified." In closing he said, "Why need I bring my personal affairs into the pulpit? My object has been to sow the good seed, and I feel that some has fell among thorns; some on stony ground; but thank God some has fallen upon the good ground, and has brought forth a hundred fold." After singing "Blest be the tie," the benediction closed the seven years of faithful labor and earnest preaching of Rev. S. V. McDuffee in Ludlow. During his closing remarks there was hardly a dry eye in the congregation. Two or three have been the prime movers and instigators in driving from this church a man after God's own heart, and the people in Brimfield, to whom he now ministers in spiritual things, are to be congratulated on securing such an under shepherd.

MONSON.

To-day is the auspicious day to March forth.

The milkmen are looking more cheerful now the ice is broken up.

Presiding Elder Ela preached at the M. E. church last Sabbath evening.

The Eddy place on Washington street is to be sold at auction on Saturday, March 11th.

Many of our livery men and others have been using baled hay, and think it cheaper than the home product.

Although only about four weeks to the annual election of town officers, there is yet no stir in the political pot.

A bankrupt stock of watches and miscellaneous goods has been disposed of the past week at Newton's new auction rooms.

John A. Orcutt, Jr., who broke his leg a few weeks ago, is much improved, the injured parts having knit together, and he is now around on crutches.

There are some things which the Village Improvement Association might do for the convenience as well as for beautifying the streets and surroundings.

Hutchinson, the wagon maker, is arranging to put up a larger wagon shop in the spring, the quarters he now occupies being altogether too small for his constantly increasing business.

Peter Hayes and wife drove across the track at North Monson the other day in front of an approaching train, when the engine struck the back of the sleigh and threw them out, dislocating his wife's shoulder.

By the piles of ashes in front of many houses, one would think that Ash Wednesday came every day in the week; but there are some people who always get things turned round, and imagine the front door to be on the back side of the house.

As the Lyon Memorial building for the Free Library Association is one of the gifts to the public that can but be appreciated by our citizens, so a new town hall, if presented to the town by some public spirited benefactor, would be a lasting monument to the giver, and be gratefully accepted by the people. Let it be of brick or granite.

Names of scholars in district No. 1 who have been neither absent nor tardy during the winter term: Grammar—Sarah Meacham, Alice Brockbank, George Whiting, Mabel Fay, Jennie Day, Julia Underwood, John Marriott. Intermediate—Minnie Gilligan, Maude Stacy, Katie Foley, Sarah Keefe, Geo. Marriott, Michael Foley, Willie O'Brien, Harrie Miller, Daniel Purcel, Maggie Foley, Alice Park, Helen Tricker, James Ryan, Willie Meacham, Archie Merchant. Primary—Charlie Marriott, Fiske Bacon, Harry Chapin, Daniel Gallivan, Mary Ryan, Emma Fitzgerald.

The Haverhill fire is a reminder to all towns of the possibilities in the future, and if 16 oz. of cure can be obtained with 1 oz. of preventive, it would seem sound common sense to start off with the preventive. We have good springs on either hillside, which if made available in case of fire, by building reservoirs and having water mains running through the streets, connected to hydrants, it is not improbable that serious consequences might be averted. It is a matter which if not acted upon by individuals could be arranged by the formation of a fire district, as is done in many places, and an article in the warrant at the coming town meeting would be a good way to start the project.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Dr. Reynolds, the temperance reformer, is to be in Ware the 13th, 14th and 15th of this month.

The Dominican fathers from Washington are to be at St. William's Catholic church next week.

Miss Ella V. Pierce has a fine specimen of the taxidermist's art on exhibition in the post office window, consisting of a hen and chickens, so life-like that we saw a small boy trying to scare the old hen up, to see if she had any more chicks under her.

The Young Men's Library Association report the number of books added to the library during the past year 280, at a cost of $437. Present number of volumes, 4615. The circulation has been over 25,000, 58 per cent of which were fiction. There have been 1200 readers. The new books added were divided as follows: Arts and sciences, 49 volumes; literature, 39; fiction and juvenile, 64; travels and history, 46; biography, 21; miscellaneous, 61.

The old stone step, measuring nearly 6 by 8 feet and weighing over three tons, of the Methodist meeting house that used to stand on "Ragged Hill" in West Brookfield, has the past week been brought to this village, and has been hewn, squared, and fitted for a step to the Methodist church here. It has also been appropriately lettered, giving the date, 1823, when it was placed as a step to the old house, and the date of its being brought here.

The widow of Daniel Webster died at New Rochelle, N. Y., last Sunday. She was his second wife, and daughter of a New York merchant named Leroy.

The members of the New England Free Love League are a queer set. At a meeting in Boston last Saturday they reaffirmed their peculiar social views, and resolved that in Mrs. Scoville's plea to Mrs. Garfield for Guiteau "woman's heart pleads for sober sense in a people infuriate with delirious vengeance," and that his hanging "will gibbet before the world the honor of a great nation, show many cowardly rogues killing one and treasure up retributive wrath against a day of wrath in store for the religio-political knaves, the upper-ten classes who seek self-aggrandizement at the expense of the useful masses, the long-suffering, under millions." The Guiteaus are not all behind the bars yet, plainly.

The majority of the Congressional committee appointed to audit the expenses attending the shooting of President Garfield will report in favor of allowing Dr. Bliss $25,000; Drs. It is recommended that Surgeon General Barnes be retired with the rank of Major General, that Dr. Woodward be promoted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel, and Mrs. Garfield be given the remainder of the President's salary for the current year.

"Rev." Ezra Winslow of Boston, whose forgeries and flight made a great stir several years ago, is still living in Buenos Ayres. He lived there awhile unidentified, under the name of Low, and became superintendent of a Sunday school; but the church turned him out on learning who and what he was. He married a wealthy woman, became a successful politician, and is now living sumptuously.

A family swept off in the Big Cottonwood (Utah) snow-slide has been recovered under 40 tons of snow, not frozen, but lying naturally in bed, the husband, wife and infant in one bed, two boys and two girls, the eldest 11 years old, in another, smothered instantly in their sleep.

A female child was born in New Bedford last Saturday, having two heads, four arms, a double set of thoracic organs, and a dwarfed and deformed third leg and foot, growing out of the loins.

Books, Magazines, &c.

The March Atlantic has an unusually large and varied list of contents, which make it a very popular number. Mr. N. H. Eggleston tells "The Story of the Hoosac Tunnel," which, as one of the great triumphs of modern engineering, has a national interest. Prof. N. S. Shaler contributes a paper on "Hurricanes," which, in view of the experiences of the past year, will surely find a large number of interested readers. Rev. E. E. Hale continues his articles upon the Life and Times of Jesus Christ, with an account of "A Visit to Jerusalem." An anonymous paper surveys "The political situation" with ability and candor, and those who are curious about the future of the two great parties will do well to read it. An engaging article on "Hymns and Hymn-Tinkers," by A. P. Hitchcock, will well repay reading. Elizabeth Robins contributes another interesting essay on mythology, this time devoted to "Loki." Prof. John Trowbridge, under the title of "Life and the Dream of Life," discusses with great intelligence the relative value of different departments of study. H. H. writes "Among the Sky Lines," a Colorado sketch. Mary Treat has an interesting out-door article on "Our Winter Birds." J. P. Quincy discusses "A Difficulty in Hamlet," and Gen. S. M. Quincy reviews recent volumes on the "Campaigns of the Civil War." Mr. Whittier contributes a poem entitled "At Last," and Dr. Holmes one, "Before the Curfew." The similarity of the theme and the characteristic difference in treatment of these two last-named poems are so noteworthy that they cannot fail to attract an unusual interest. Mr. Stedman has a perfect little poem on "A Great Man whose Mind is Clouding." Reviews of new books and the Contributors' Club complete a very interesting number of this sterling magazine. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The Century for March has a half-length portrait of Mr. W. D. Howells as a frontispiece, which will undoubtedly be very welcome to those interested in his writings, especially the story of "A Modern Instance," an interesting installment of which is contained in the present number. Thomas Sargent Perry also has an appreciative essay on Mr. Howells's literary work. Among illustrated articles Richard Grant White, in his "Opera in New York," traces the beginnings of the musical drama in America, giving portraits of Maliban, Mrs. Austin, Miss Paton, Joseph Wood and others. This is the first paper of a series which promises to be of permanent value in the annals of music in this country. Mary Hallock Foote's third paper on Mexican life is entitled "From Morelia to Mexico City on Horseback," and is well illustrated by the author, Mr. Cole's beautiful cut of a Spanish creole being prominent among the engravings. "A Ramble in Philadelphia," by Miss Elizabeth Robins, has several etchings by Pennell—a style of illustration becoming quite an agreeable feature of this magazine. Winter sports are the subject of two illustrated articles: "The Black Bear," by Charles C. Ward, and "The Danish Skate-Sail," by T. F. Hammer. In Mrs. Burnett's story, "Through One Administration," the reader catches glimpses of Washington life, and he will be glad to know that the installments will be longer in future. There are too many good things to be all named, in the magazine, which must be read to be appreciated.

One of the most prominent and attractive features of St. Nicholas for March is the second part of Mr. Stoddard's article, "Men-and-Animal Shows," which is well illustrated and will be a source of pleasure to all circus-loving boys. There is a fairy tale by Thomas Dunn English for those who delight in such stories, poems by Rose Terry Cooke and Celia Thaxter, interesting installments of "The Hoosier School-boy" and "Donald and Dorothy," while Mrs. Clement, in her "Arts and Artists," writes of the painter Titian, whose portrait forms a fine frontispiece. The illustrations in this number are numerous and very good indeed.

Still another edition of Shakespeare is being given to the public, and this time it is one which places the writings of the illustrious poet within reach of all who desire to possess them. The Useful Knowledge Publishing Company are issuing his complete dramatic works in ten handy "Elzevir" volumes for the low price of 25 cents per volume, and will also publish a "Red-line Elzevir" edition, gilt edges, ornamented in black and gold, in ten volumes, all for $4.50. "Hamlet, Prince of Denmark," printed on good paper and prettily bound in cloth, sells for only 20 cents. Send for catalogue and specimen pages to The Useful Knowledge Publishing Company, 162 William St., New York City.

Clark W. Bryan & Company, of Holyoke, have recently published Farm Architecture, a lecture delivered by E. C. Gardner, author of "Homes and How to Make Them," at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts State Board of Agriculture, 1880, and which contains practical thoughts and valuable suggestions in connection with the remodeling of old dwelling houses and the building of new ones; also hints in regard to drainage, building of barns, etc. For sale by the publishers; price 15 cents.

When General Grant offered the Chief Justiceship of the United States to Mr. Roscoe Conkling, there was great amazement at his declining it. Judge Jerry Black was asked if he could guess what could possibly be the reason for such a course. "Oh, yes," said the shrewd old Judge, "the same reason I should have for declining to be Emperor of China—doesn't understand the language!"—N. Y. Tribune.

Judge Blatchford's recent decision that hay is not a manufactured article will result, it is said, in a decrease of from $250,000 to $500,000 in the customs revenue, as several million dollars' worth is imported from Canada every year. Heretofore it has been taxed 20 per cent as a manufactured article.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

THE STEINWAY PIANO

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE.

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of people best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway Pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers by paying $75, $100, $150, $200, or $300, according to the style, more for them than for any others; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "a foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scale," etc., etc., all proclaim that the

STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWLEDGED STANDARD PIANO.

This fact is being established that the Steinway is the best: of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE

WONDERFUL SURGICAL OPERATION—REMOVAL OF URINARY STONES FROM THE BLADDER—SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they called Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their re-formation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation or the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from the constitutions of women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. 4w49

Little by Little.

Little by little the time goes by—
Short if you sing through it, long if you sigh.
Little by little—an hour, a day,
Gone with the years that have vanished away;
Little by little the race is run,
Trouble and waiting and toil are done!

Little by little the sky grows clear;
Little by little the sun comes near;
Little by little the days come out
Gladder and brighter on pain and doubt;
Little by little the seed we sow
Into a beautiful yield will grow.

Little by little the world grows strong,
Fighting the battle of Right and Wrong;
Little by little the Wrong gives way—
Little by little the Right has sway.
Little by little all longing souls
Struggle up nearer the shining goals!

Little by little the good in men
Blossoms to beauty for human ken;
Little by little the angels see
Prophecies better of good to be;
Little by little the God of all
Lifts the world nearer the pleading call.

NEWSPAPERS.—Some papers are not of much account as to appearance, but I never took one that did not pay me, in some way, more than I paid for it. One time an old friend started a little paper away down in southwestern Georgia, and sent to me, and I subscribed just to encourage him, and after a while it published a notice that an administrator had an order to sell several lots at public outcry, and one of the lots was in my county. So I inquired about the lot, and wrote to my friend to attend the sale and run it up to fifty dollars. He did so, and bid me off the lot for thirty dollars; and I sold it, in a month, to a man it joined for a hundred, and so I made sixty-eight dollars clear by taking that paper. My father told me that when he was a young man he saw a notice in a paper that a school teacher was wanted away off in a distant country, and he went there and got the situation, and a little girl was sent to him, and after awhile she grew up mighty sweet and pretty, and he fell in love with her and married her—now, if he hadn't taken that paper, what do you reckon would have become of me? Wouldn't I have been some other fellow, or may be not at all?—Printers' Circular.

LIGHT WITHOUT HEAT.—Highly interesting experiments with a newly discovered mineral essence took place a few evenings ago at a chemist's laboratory in Paris. Having filled a lamp with the liquid in question, and ignited the wick, M. Kordig, the discoverer of the essence, tossed the lighted lamp up against the ceiling, besprinkled the bystanders as well as himself with the flaming fluid, which, however, to the astonishment of all present, proved utterly devoid of heat or burning capacity. He then soaked his pocket handkerchief in the essence and set it on fire; the essence burnt itself out, but the handkerchief remained uninjured, as did his hat after subjection to a similar trial. Then MM. Wuertz, Dumas, and Friedel plunged their hands into a pan filled with the burning liquid, withdrawing them with fingers all alight, like so many thick jets of gas. They experienced no sensation of heat whatsoever upon the skin surface thus apparently in a state of active combustion. Other experiments followed of an equally wonderful nature, conclusively demonstrating that the 'Kordig essence' is capable of producing light without heat.

SENTIMENT IN TRANSLATIONS.—Language is not always competent to convey the spirit as well as the letter of a sentiment. The point is well illustrated in a translation into French of Milton's Paradise Lost, where the expression

"Hail! horrors, hail!"

Is rendered,

"Comment vous portez vous! les Horreux, comment vous portez vous!"

In other words,

"How do you! Horrors, how do you do!"

A gentleman from the north, now a stock raiser of Texas, in a recent letter to a friend narrated that the other evening his Chinese cook came into the house in a perturbed condition, and with an odor of serious trouble about him. 'What in the world have you been doing, John?' exclaimed the master, as he made for the door. 'Me catchee labbit, but me lettee him glo again. Melican labbit smellee like helle. Oh, my glacious!'

Do not put your trust and confidence in any one who is constantly peddling out scandal about some one else. 'A dog that can bring a bone can carry one.' Be cautious of such persons, or they may turn and sting you. The tongue of a gossip is as poisonous as the fangs of a snake.

'Yes,' said Daisy, 'I think Jack is in love with me. He hasn't told me so, but when Harry Birch escorted me home from the party last night, Jack looked ugly, and to-day he took an opportunity to throw an awful hard snowball at Harry's dog.'—Boston Post.

A detachment of United States troops still guards President Garfield's tomb, which is constantly kept covered with fresh flowers by his faithful friends. Hundreds of persons visit it daily.

'By shimminy, how dot poy studies grammar,' was the remark of a German, when his son called him a "knock-kneed, pigeon-toed, seven-sided, glazed-eyed son of a saw-horse.'

Western man—'Do you understand music, judge?' 'The only toon I ever played on in my life was the spittoon, but I'm just a horse on that.'

The politest young man going is a resident of Cincinnati, Ohio. He took off his hat to talk to a young lady through the telephone.

'I sot me down in thought profound, this maxim wise I drew; it's easier fur to pay a man than make a man pay yu.'

Never cry over spilt milk. The milkman has already wasted enough water on it.—Courier-Journal.

A TALE OF ROYALTY.

M. Florian Pharaon tells an amusing anecdote about King Humbert of Italy, who is as fond of shooting as was his royal father, Victor Emmanuel. From time to time King Humbert, oblivious of all royal customs and court etiquette, separates himself from his suite, and gun in hand goes out alone in search of game, accompanied by his two favorite dogs. During one of his excursions he was met by a peasant, who looked on with admiration at the havoc the King had made among a covey of partridges. He did not know the monarch, and seeing him in the dress of an ordinary sportsman could not recognize him. He went up to him, complimented him on his skill with his gun, and then told him that if he could come to his farm on the following morning at daybreak and kill a fox which had made several raids on his hen roost he would not mind giving him a couple of francs for his trouble.

King Humbert kept the appointment, and was fortunate enough to kill the fox. The delighted peasant welcomed him on his return, called his wife and children out, and insisted on the King sharing their breakfast with them. At the end of the repast the peasant took leave of his visitor, pressing a two-franc piece in his hand, which the King tossed up in the air and caught, declaring it was the first money he had ever earned. Two days afterward the peasant was surprised to see an officer in uniform ride up in an open carriage with presents from the King for his wife and children. He then learnt to whom he owed his obligation, and was confused at the familiar manner in which he had hobnobbed with royalty.

Having entered a pew, move along; be sure and move along. Do not block up the end of the pew as if you did not intend to have any one else enter it, or as if you were holding it for some special friends. Do not rise to let others in, but move along and leave the pew invitingly open so that they will know they are welcome. If a pew holding six has five already in it, do not file out in formal procession to let one poor, scared woman go to the further end, but move along and let her sit down at the end next the aisle. It is not necessary now for a stalwart man to sit at the end ready to rush out and kill Indians, as possibly it was once.

The total annual consumption of quinine throughout the world is given at 220,000 pounds, of which one-quarter is used in the United States alone. In 1880 we imported 500,000 ounces of quinine and 32,000 bales of cinchona bark. In 1881 the importations were one-quarter larger.

'Oh, by the way, dear, have you congratulated Lily on her engagement?' asked Miss Flouncer of her friend. 'Oh, yes; of course. I went round to see her yesterday afternoon. I told her she couldn't have done better, and I don't think she could, the horrid homely thing.'

When a drawing room or sleeping car is built, from 15 to 20 bushels of shavings from a planing machine are put into the space between the floor and the false floor. The rapid burning of the Wagner cars in the Spuyten Duyvil disaster is accounted for by this fact.

Gen. Skobeleff, the great Russian general, said in a recent speech that a conflict between the Slavs and the Teutons was inevitable, and would be long and sanguinary. His remarks have caused quite a stir in Germany.

Robert Murray of West Stockbridge, indicted at Pittsfield for liquor-selling, sent $20 to Judge Tucker, with the request that he be let off lightly; and now Mr. Murray will be tried for attempted bribery.

The Williston Mills at Easthampton have been sold to Haley, Morse & Co. of Boston for $300,000, which will give $200,000 to Williston Seminary and $100,000 to Amherst College.

Atlanta, Ga., boasts of a young, attractive and industrious cobbler of the female sex, who both mends and constructs all kinds of shoes to the satisfaction of numerous customers.

A company has been organized in Springfield for the manufacture of various articles from clay. The peculiarity of the association is that it is composed exclusively of negroes.

President Arthur has rented the largest cottage of John Hoey, on Cedar avenue, Long Branch, opposite the lodge of Hollywood Park, the country seat of Mr. Hoey.

The Washington hotel proprietors are afflicted with colorphobia. The Fisk Jubilee singers could not secure lodgings the other night at any public house.

A subterranean stream has been discovered in Idaho connecting Indian Creek and Snake River, whose rushing waters are audible at a long distance.

President Chadbourne, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, has gone to the Black Hills to examine mining property as an expert.

The retention of any waste matter in the system produces injury. The collection of "phlegm" or diseased mucus in time of cold or throat affection should be promptly removed. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup does it more quickly and effectually than any other cough syrup made.

It is worth remembering that nobody enjoys the nicest surroundings if in bad health. There are miserable people about to-day with one foot in the grave, when a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic would do them more good than all the doctors and medicines they have ever tried. See adv. m

MOTHER DIED OF SALT RHEUM.—J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this county. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies." m

STONES in the KIDNEYS

AND BLADDER EXPELLED—LONG SUFFERING OF ONE OF TROY'S BEST PEOPLE—A LUCKY MAN.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr. Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-Dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case, and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 7-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers.

Yours truly, JAMES ANDREWS.
No. 10 Marshal St., Ida Hill.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in like fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. Get it of your druggist, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" sold by all druggists. 48

LIQUID FOOD FOR BLOOD, BRAIN AND NERVES.

☞ A SUPERIOR NUTRITIVE MEDICINE, RICH IN PHOSPHATES AND NOT A CHEAP, ALCOHOLIC DRINK. ☜ Highly recommended by Chemists and Physicians as

A POSITIVE TONIC, ALWAYS ACCEPTABLE AND RELIABLE,

As it does not stimulate the brain or irritate the system and leave deleterious effects. On the contrary, it furnishes just that which is necessary to the brain, strengthens and quiets the nerves, purifies the heart's blood, and thereby makes only the best flesh, bone and muscle. ☞ It works wonders, curing NERVOUS and GENERAL DEBILITY, MALARIA, DYSPEPSIA, INSOMNIA. Produces a healthy action of the Liver and Kidneys, fortifying the system against the miasmatic influences, and will be found invaluable in all pulmonary and bronchial difficulties.

DELICATE FEMALES, NURSING MOTHERS and WEAKLY CHILDREN

Can find no remedy equal to this healthful blood and nerve food tonic. ☞ For sale by all druggists. $1.00 per bottle. Prepared only by

CUTICURA.

Geo. W. Brown, 48 Marshall St., Providence, R. I., cured by Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) of a Ringworm Humor got at the barber's, which spread all over his ears, neck and face, and for six years resisted all kinds of treatment.

SKIN HUMOR.

F. H. Drake, Esq., agent for Harper & Bros., Detroit, Mich., gives an astonishing account of his case (eczema rodent), which had been treated by a consultation of physicians without benefit, and which speedily yielded to the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally.

SCALD HEAD.

H. A. Raymond, Auditor F. W., J. & S. R. R., Jackson, Mich., was cured of Scald Head of nine years' duration by the Cuticura Remedies.

ECZEMA.

Hon. Wm. Taylor, Boston, Mass., permanently cured of a humor of the face and scalp (eczema) that had been treated unsuccessfully for twelve years by many of Boston's best physicians and most noted specialists, as well as European authorities.

MILK CRUST.

Mrs. Bowers, 143 Clinton St., Cincinnati, speaks of her sister's child, who was cured of milk crust which resisted all remedies for two years. Now a fine healthy boy, with a beautiful head of hair.

FALLING HAIR.

Frank A. Bean, Steam Fire Engine 6, Boston, was cured of Alopecia, or falling of the hair, by the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, which completely restored his hair when all said he would lose it.

TREATMENT.

The Cuticura treatment consists in the internal use of the Cuticura Resolvent, the new blood purifier, and the external use of Cuticura and Cuticura Soap, the great skin cures.

CUTICURA

REMEDIES are for sale by all druggists. Price of Cuticura, a Medicinal Jelly, small boxes, 50c.; large boxes, $1. Cuticura Resolvent, the new blood purifier, $1 per bottle. The Annual Town Meeting.

And now the time approaches for the annual town meeting,
And to the doughty Constables the Selectmen send greeting;
And thus the Fathers of the Town blow the official horn:
"You are hereby directed to notify and warn
The inhabitants, who're qualified to vote in town affairs,"
On —— to leave all other cares,
And promptly to assemble, responsive to the call,
At the usual place of meeting, in the spacious old Town Hall.
At ten o'clock in the forenoon the hour of meeting is,
And then and there you'll meet for the following purposes, viz:
First, for the said meeting you will choose a Moderator—
Th' election of Town Clerk will come a little later;
Firewards, School Committee, and Surveyor of Highways,
A Collector of the Taxes, to see that each one pays;
A Town and County Treasurer to hand the money round,
With Selectmen and Overseers and Keeper of the Pound;
And before the orators begin their everlasting jaw,
You may choose such other officers as are required by law.
Then will come the good old music—the same, with variations,
On the same old subjects calling for such large appropriations.
There is money for the public schools (this always makes hard talk),
Money to mend the highways, lest those who ride or walk
Should be victims of a smash-up, or trip and tumble down,
Then put their cases into the courts and prosecute the town.
"The poor ye've always with you"—let them be supported well;
And don't forget the town clock and the ringing of the bell.
We want to light the streets with gas, after the modern plan,
And money to pay the firemen, six dollars to each man;
Money for the engines, cisterns and apparatus,
For interest on the town debt and various other matters.
And whoever saw a warrant without that mysterious section
About the prisoners in the Jail and Houses of Correction?
Then hurrah for Annual Meeting! and may its seed increase!
For every man there has a chance to speak his little piece.
Yet we're so very modest that we have not even hinted
That 'tis time for rival candidates to have their tickets printed.

THE EMERALDS.

CHAPTER I.

One wintry afternoon in January, away up in the bleak attic of a wretched tenement house, a pale, sad-eyed woman sat sewing. The garment upon which she was engaged was a very rich dress. The twilight closed in rapidly, with a blinding fall of snow, a bitter, wailing blast that made the windows rattle in the casements. Still the pale-faced woman stitched on.

"Mother," piped a sweet voice from the cot beneath the window, "will you get the fine dress done? Oh, mother, I'm so hungry! If I only had some tea and a bit of sausage."

She worked on steadily for a time, pausing only to brush a tear from her white cheek, then rose and shook out the glimmering robe.

"'Tis done at last," she said. "Now mother's little girl can have her supper; only be patient a little longer, Flora. Ross, come, my boy."

A manly little fellow came out from the bedroom beyond.

"The fine dress is done, Ross, and you must run home with it as fast as you can. Miss Gracie will be out of patience, I know. Tell her I couldn't finish it one moment sooner, and ask her to give you the money. We must have it to-night. And you can stop at Mr. Ray's as you come back and buy some coal; and we must have some bread and tea, and a mite of butter, and you must get a sausage, Ross, for poor little Flora."

"I'll get them all, mother," he said, "and be back in time. You shall have a big sausage, little sis," turning toward the cot.

The girl nodded her curly head and her great wistful eyes sparkled with delight.

"And you shall have half of it, Ross," she piped, in her splendid bird voice.

"Hadn't you better put on your thick jacket, my boy?" continued the mother. "The wind cuts like a knife."

"Pshaw! little mother, I don't mind the wind," and away he went down the creaking stairs and out into the storm. Miss Gracie Fontenay was in a perfect furore of impatience and anger. Her dear five hundred friends had assembled in the halls below, and her handsome dress had not come home. "What does that beggar woman mean by disappointing me?"

At that moment there was a ring at the door and a voice in the hall.

"Please tell Miss Gracie my mother could not finish it sooner; she wants the money to-night."

The servant took the handsome dress and message.

"I'll never give her another stitch of work," cried the angry beauty. "I ought to have had it three hours ago. Here, Fanchon, dress me at once—there's not a minute to lose. No, I can't pay to-night; I haven't time. He must call to-morrow."

"But we've no fire and nothing to eat, and my little sister is sick," called the boy, pushing up the grand stairway.

"Shut the door, Fanchon!" commanded Miss Gracie. And the door was shut in his face.

From the porch at the parlor window Pansie watched the whole scene, her violet eyes distended with childish amazement.

"Poor little boy," she said, as Ross disappeared down the stairway; "sister Gracie ought to pay him. It must be dreadful to have no fire and nothing to eat."

She stood for a moment balancing herself on the tiptoe of one dainty foot, her rosebud face grave and reflective; then a sudden thought flooded her blue eyes with sunshine, and snatching something from the table she darted down stairs. The servant had just closed the street door, but she fluttered past him like a humming-bird and opened it.

On the steps sat Ross, brave little fellow that he was, his face in his hands, sobbing as if his heart would break.

'What's the matter, little boy,' questioned Pansie.

Ross looked up, half believing that it was the face of an angel looking down upon him through the whirling snow.

'O, I cannot go home without the money,' he sobbed; 'poor mother worked hard, and Flora is sick and so hungry.'

'Here,' she said, 'do take this, little boy, and buy her lots of nice things. 'Tis worth a good deal; papa bought it for my birthday present, but do you take it and welcome.'

She extended her dimpled hands, and something like a shower of tears fell at the boy's feet. He caught it up in amazement—a necklace of emeralds; lustrous, gleaming things, set in tawny Indian gold.

'No, no,' he cried, running up to where she stood; "I cannot take this necklace—take it back.'

'You shall take it,' she continued, imperiously. 'I have lots of fine jewelry and fine things—run home now and buy your sister something to eat.'

She closed the door with a bang, and Ross stood irresolute in the stormy gloom. Should he ring the bell and return the jewels to Pansie's father, or should he do as she bade him? He thought of his mother and poor little Flora watching wistfully for his return. He could not go back and see them starve. With a sudden feeling of desperation he thrust the glittering necklace in his pocket and dashed down the street.

The gaslight blazed brilliantly in a fashionable jewelry establishment, and the bland proprietor looked down inquiringly on little Ross as he approached the glittering counter.

'Would you like to buy this, sir?'

There was a tremor in the boy's voice as he asked the question, and the hand that held the emerald necklace shook visibly. The lapidary took the gems, examined them closely for a moment, and then shot a sharp glance at the child.

'See here,' he said, presently, his voice stern and commanding, 'I want to know how you came by this.'

The boy's clear eyes fell; he blushed and stammered, evidently embarrassed. The jeweler put aside the emeralds, and taking the lad's arm, he led him to a small ante-room.

'You are a thief, sir,' he said. 'That necklace belongs to Mr. Fontenay—he bought it of me not a month ago. You stole it; you are a thief.'

The little fellow straightened himself, and his brown eyes blazed. 'A little girl gave it to me, and I knew it was wrong to take it, but—my mother and sister are starving.'

'You don't look like a thief,' he said, 'but I will send for Mr. Fontenay; that will settle the matter at once.'

He dispatched a messenger accordingly, and Ross sat down in a corner and sobbed bitterly as he heard the driving wind and thought of his mother and poor little Flora.

In half an hour Mr. Fontenay came, bringing his little daughter, Pansie, with him. The little creature darted toward Ross like a humming bird, while her cheeks were all ablaze and her eyes flashed like lightning.

'He didn't steal my emeralds!' she cried out. 'I gave them to him to sell and buy some bread for his little sister.'

Ross sprang to his feet, struggling hard to keep back his tears. He put out his little brown hand, which Pansie instantly clasped in her chubby hands.

'I am not a thief, sir,' he said, addressing Mr. Fontenay; 'I never stole anything in my life; I knew it was wrong to take the necklace—but—but—sir, my little sister is starving.'

The merchant drew his hands across his eyes.

'You're a manly little fellow,' he said, patting the lad's head, 'and I do not in the least blame you, but I will take Pansie's emeralds, and she shall give you something more available. Here, Pansie, give this to your little friend.'

He put a gold piece into Pansie's hand, which she tendered to Ross, with the injunction that he should run straight home and buy lots of goodies for his poor little sister. This command he was not slow to obey.

'I think we shall not lose sight of the little fellow,' continued Mr. Fontenay, as Ross disappeared in the stormy darkness, 'shall we, pet? Let us see what we can do to help him. He is a very promising young lad, and an honest one, I am quite sure. Mr. Lennox, you are in need of an errand boy; why not try him? I wish you would.'

The jeweler consented, to Pansie's great delight, and on the following day Ross was duly established as errand boy in the fashionable establishment.

CHAPTER II.

Fifteen years after, one blustering March morning, a young man sat behind the counter of a thriving jewelry establishment in one of the northern cities. He was a handsome young man, a traveler, a man of taste, intellect and money, for he was a junior partner in the firm, which was a prosperous one. But, despite his good fortune, Ross Dunbar was not happy. His mother and little Flora had gone to their long home, and he was utterly alone in the world, without kith or kin.

Sitting alone one morning, with the roar of the March winds in his ears, his thoughts were running back to the days of his boyhood, to his mother's humble home. How vivid the past seemed, and how dear and sacred, despite its privations and sorrows. His eyes grew dim and his heart swelled. All were gone over the wide waters of time and change.

A tender smile softened his sad face as he recalled the stormy night when he sat sobbing at Mr. Fontenay's mansion. And little Pansie; the remembrance of that sweet face, as he saw it through the snow wreaths, haunted him constantly. In all the fifteen years never for one hour had he forgotten her. But she was gone—lost to him forever.

His reverie was broken by the entrance of a customer, a lady closely clothed and veiled. She approached the counter with a jewel case in her hand.

'Would you buy these?' she asked, simply, in a clear, sweet voice, that stirred the young man's heart as no other woman's voice had power to do.

He took the casket, opened it, and spread out its contents. A watch, an elegant and costly diamond ring, two rubies and an emerald necklace. Ross Dunbar barely suppressed a cry of surprise as his eyes fell upon it. He turned it over with eager, trembling fingers, and there on the clasp was the name that had lived in his heart for so many years, 'Little Pansie.'

'You wish to sell them all?' he asked, striving to steady his voice and the wild throbbing of his heart.

The lady hesitated an instant, and then she put out her slender hand and drew the emeralds toward her.

'I dislike to part with this,' she said; 'it was my father's gift—and—and—but no matter; take them all; I must have the money.'

In her eagerness she had thrown aside her veil, revealing a lily face, lit by lustrous sapphire eyes. Ross Dunbar stood silent a moment, every nerve in his manly form thrilling with supreme delight. He had found her at last, the idol of his life.

'They are very fine gems,' he said, after a moment, 'and I am willing to give you a fair price—suppose we say one thousand dollars—will that do?'

The girl flashed a dazzling glance of surprise from beneath her heavy veil.

'So much as that?' she said, tremulously. 'You are very kind, sir. Oh, you cannot know how much this money will help me.'

The young man made a polite reply, and proceeded to put aside the jewels and draw a check for the money. The March winds were blustering without, and the girl shivered and drew her wrapper closer as she started out.

'Won't you let me run down to the bank for you?' said the jeweler, snatching up his hat. "You can play shop lady the while; it won't be but a minute or two.'

'But I am troubling you so.'

'Not a bit; just take this warm seat, please; you'll not be likely to have any customers.' And seating her beside the desk, he took the check and hurried out.

Pansie Fontenay threw back her veil and leaned her head upon her hands, a puzzled, reflective look upon her sweet, sad face.

'When have I seen this face?' she aked herself over and over again. 'It is so familiar; who in the world can it be?'

His return broke in upon her meditation, and after receiving the money she hurried away to her humble lodgings.

The following afternoon was even more blustering and stormy; the wind roared and the sleet tinkled against the windows of the little room in which Pansie and her father sat. Severe misfortunes and reverses had reduced them to poverty, and the old man being an invalid all the care fell upon Pansie's shoulders. She sat down with her father, reading aloud from a new book which she had bought for him with some of the money received for her jewels. Her sweet face was wan and sad, and her future stretched before her, sad, hopeless and gloomy.

There is a ring at the door, and a servant brought up a package for Miss Fontenay. An exquisite bunch of pansies, fragrant and golden-hearted, done up in tissue paper, and attached to them a card, bearing the simple words, 'Ross Dunbar has not forgotten little Pansie.'

Pansie sat amazed for a moment, and then a rich bloom darted into her white cheeks.

'Oh, father,' she said, 'I know him! I know him! Oh, we have found Ross at last.'

An instant later Ross was in the room clasping her fluttering hands in his, and into her blue eyes looked with a glance that brought the rosy bloom into her face. And a few weeks later, when the blustering winds were over, and the golden-hearted pansies bloomed on the garden borders, little Pansie became Ross Dunbar's bride, and for her bridal gift he gave her back her string of emeralds.

PRAYER AS A MORALIZING INFLUENCE.—A little boy wanted a drum. His mother, wishing to give him an impressive lesson, suggested that if he should pray for it he might receive one. So at night, when ready for bed, he knelt down and prayed:

Now I lay me down to sleep,
(I want a drum,)
I pray the Lord my soul to keep,
(I want a drum,)
If I should die before I wake,
(I want a drum,)
I pray the Lord my soul to take.
(I want a drum.)

His father, who had been let into the secret, had meanwhile quietly placed a drum on the bed. As the youngster rose, and his eyes fell on the drum, he exclaimed in an emphatic manner that banished all serious thoughts from the minds of his listeners: "Where the devil did that drum come from?" The anticipated benefits from that lesson may probably be considered lost.—Troy Times.

Soon after the funeral of President Garfield, his family and friends intrusted to Mr. St. Gaudens, the sculptor of Farragut's statue, the work of having cast in bronze the face and left hand of the martyred president. The plaster cast used for the work is the only one in existence. The face casting weighs seven and a half pounds and the left hand two and a half pounds. After the operation was completed the mold was broken, as the work was done for the family. The cast of the face represents Gen. Garfield's features exactly as they were after death, showing traces of his sufferings. During the making of the mold and the taking of the cast, precautions were adopted so that no copies should be taken.

B—, who 'ran' a country store, and employed a number of wood-choppers, one day met an old debtor. 'Well, Jones,' said B—, "are you out of work?' 'Yes, sir,' he replied. 'Would you go to work for me, and have it credited to your old account, if I would make it easy for you?' inquired B—. 'I don't know; how will you fix it?' answered Jones. 'Well I'll tell you,' said B. 'You know I am paying my choppers a dollar a day; but if you are disposed to work out your old indebtedness, I will allow you four dollars a day until the old account is settled. What say you?' Jones, after meditating a few moments, suddenly exclaimed: 'By golly! I'll do it, if you make it half cash.'

Why can't people say father and mother in a better way than they do? Words, cadence, inflection, and everything else have got twisted and wriggled out of shape. The New York girl says 'Ma—r,' with a jerk on the 'r.' The Philadelphia girl says 'Mayar' through her nose. The St. Louis girl says 'Ma'mar.' The Boston girl says 'Mur-mur.' The Baltimore beauty says 'Mur-mur' and 'Pur-pur.' The little Canadian says 'Pa-ah' and 'Ma-ah.' The Alabama girl says 'Porr' and 'Morr.' The Brooklyn girl says 'Par-pah' and Mah-ah.' The little London girls say, 'Now, Po-pow-ah, you make me lowoff.'—Quiz.

A few evenings ago, an Irishman had just finished bringing in a ton of coal for a lady, who in paying him said—the weather being bitterly cold,—"I hope you will find it warm at home." "Niver you fear, ma'am," returned the man, "my wife takes good care to make it all that for me." The other hoped his domestic affairs were all right, but his tone had in it pretty strong indication of a double meaning.

A cow with three rings on her horns is six years old; if four, she is seven. No new rings are formed after the tenth year. The deeper rings, and the worn appearance of the horns are pretty sure indications of old age.

We are sometimes so impressed by a fellow-man's estimate of his importance that we tremble at the mere suggestion of what might have been if the Lord had forgotten to make him.—Rome Sentinel.

The Big Spring Show.

Spring's advertising agents come,
Unheralded by trump or drum,
To give for April, May & Co.,
Announcement of the season's show.

They stretch a sign across the sky,
And every day it rises high,
Telling in print that all may see
The many wonders soon to be.

Announcements shine on plains and hills,
And rushing streams and babbling rills
Are talking as they shout and sing
About the splendid show of spring.

On every field the words appear:
"You soon shall see a marvel here."
In every forest, overhead:
"Here shall a gorgeous tent be spread."

They capture all our ears and eyes,
And whisper of a grand surprise;
They say the bluebirds soon will bring
The wonders of the show of spring.

Our towns and cities they invade,
And fill the avenues of trade;
Then straightway in the windows glow
Announcements of the season's show.

The old, old show, yet always new,
That never fails to come when due—
The sight that all rejoice to see,
And, best of all, the show is free.

COURTESY AT HOME.

Good breeding, like charity, should begin at home. The days are past when children used to rise the moment their parents entered the room where they were and stand until they had received permission to sit. But the mistake is now made in the other direction of allowing to small boys and girls too much license to disturb the peace of the household. I think the best way to train children in courtesy would be to observe toward them a scrupulous politeness. I would go so far as to say that we should make it as much a point to listen to children without interrupting them and to answer them sincerely and respectfully as if they were grown up. And indeed many of their wise, quaint sayings are far better worth listening to than the stereotyped commomplaces of most morning callers. Of course, to allow uninterrupted chatter would be to surrender the repose of the household, but it is very easy, if children are themselves scrupulously respected, to teach them in turn scrupulously to respect the convenience of others, and to know when to talk and when to be silent.

If a child is brought up in constant exercise of courtesy toward brothers and sisters and playmates, as well as toward parents and uncles and aunts, it will have little left to learn as it grows older. I know a bright and bewitching little girl who was well instructed in table etiquette, but who forgot her lessons sometimes, as even older people do now and then. The arrangement was made with her that for every solecism of this sort she was to pay a fine of five cents, while for every similar carelessness which she could discover in her elders she was to exact a fine of ten cents, their experience of life being longer than hers. You may be sure that Mistress Bright Eyes watched the proceedings of that table very carefully. No slightest disregard of the most conventional etiquette escaped her quick vision, and she was an inflexible creditor and a faithful debtor. It was the prettiest sight to see her, when conscious of some failure on her own part, go unhesitatingly to her money-box and pay cheerfully her little tribute to the outraged proprieties.

The best brought up family of children I ever knew were educated on the principle of always commending them when it was possible to do so, and letting silence be the reproof of any wrong doing which was not really serious. I have heard the children of this household, when their mother had failed to say any word of commendation after some social occasion, ask as anxiously as possible, "What was it, mamma? I know something was wrong. Didn't we treat the other children well, or were we too noisy?" In that house reproof was never bestowed unsought—only commendation, of whatever it was possible to commend, was gratuitous.

I think this system would be as good for those grown-up children, the husbands and wives, as for those still in the nursery. I once asked the late Hepworth Dixon, with whom I happened to be talking on this subject, what he thought was the reason why some women held their husbands' hearts securely and forever, while others were but the brief tenants of a few months or years. "What," I asked, "is the quality in a woman which her husband loves longest?"

"That she should be a pillow," answered Mr. Dixon, and then meeting the inquiry in my eyes, he went on, "Yes, that is what a man needs in his wife—something to rest his heart on. He has excitement and opposition enough in the world. He wants to feel that there is one place where he is sure of sympathy, a place that will give him ease as a pillow gives it to a tired head. Do you think a man will be tempted to turn from the woman whose eyes are his flattering mirror—who heals where others wound?"

And surely he was right. We are grateful for even a too flattering faith in us, and if there is any good in us at all, we try to deserve this faith. But tenderness in the conjugal heart is much more common than grace in the conjugal manner. Since, however, next to that supreme good of being satisfied in one's own conscience is that second great good of being satisfied in one's own home, surely no details of manner that tend to such a result are too slight to be observed. I believe in making as pretty a toilet to greet the returning husband as one puts on to await the expected sweetheart; and, when the husband comes, he makes a mistake very fatal to his own interests if he fails to notice what he would have praised in other days. It is a trite saying that life is made up of trifles; but surely the sum of all these domestic trifles amounts to the difference between happiness and unhappiness.—Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton, Our Continent.

Journeyman Carpenter: 'My wages are so small and uncertain, guv'ner, I shall leave next week, and try and set up a little place of my own.' Master Carpenter: 'As you like, Jim. I hope you'll get on; hard work and patience will do anything. When I first came down here, two years back, and started, I hadn't a penny of my own, and see where I am now, all through my own exertions.' J. C.: 'Where are yer?' M. C.: 'Three hundred and fifty pounds in debt!'

Moderation is the silken string running through the pearl chain of all virtues.—Bishop Hall.

MORALITY IN MASSACHUSETTS.

In a recent number of the New York Independent, Rev. Samuel W. Dike, a tireless investigator of social evils, gives the results of his latest inquiries. The Boston Journal characterizes these results as "alike depressing and suggestive," and says:

"Comparing the four years 1866–69 with the years 1876–79, Mr. Dike finds that, of ten crimes against chastity in Massachusetts, there has been a large increase in all but two in the latter as compared with the earlier period. These two exceptions are in convictions for keeping houses of ill-fame and for night-walking, and for the relative decline in these Suffolk county is almost wholly responsible, the convictions for the former offense having fallen in this county from 463 to 150, and for the latter from 814 to 587. Deducting Suffolk, there is an increase in these two crimes as well as in the others; and as Suffolk shows the same increase in the other eight crimes as the other counties, there would seem to be room for the inference that the apparent falling off in these two crimes in this county is due rather to a lax enforcement of the laws than to any moral improvement. Deducting the Suffolk county convictions for these two crimes in both periods, Mr. Dike finds that crimes against chastity in the State have increased 125 per cent while the population has increased only 22 per cent. The increase in crimes of this description has not only been steady, but has been quite evenly distributed, being quite as marked in the rural counties as in the cities. Moreover, these crimes are not to be shouldered upon the foreigner, for while about 40 per cent of all crimes in Suffolk county, except liquor offenses, in 1880 were committed by persons of foreign birth, of crimes against chastity only 34 per cent were by foreign-born criminals. The following table which Mr. Dike presents shows a remarkable parallelism in certain kindred evils:

	1866–9.	1876–9.
Crimes against chastity	603	1,573
Illegitimate births	1,625	2,766
Divorces	1,352	2,255
Marriages	57,551	52,202

"Here we have an astounding increase in the number of crimes against chastity, of illegitimate births and of divorces, during the later as compared with the earlier period, together with a falling off of more than 5000 in the number of marriages. Are these parallels coincidences only, or do they point to a deterioration of morals which, if unarrested, must result in social disaster?"

Mr. Dike says of the morals of the present time, as compared with those of a century ago: "Police systems are more effective in some quarters; but not very generally so. Indeed, if I am correctly informed, one reason for the change in the system of police administration in Boston now demanded is its inefficiency in dealing with evils of this sort, which the statistics so plainly show. The morals of portions of New England are vastly better than at the beginning of the century. The church records of to-day could not in most places, with the most thorough discipline, be made to repeat the stories of those times, which, by the way, were due largely to social customs now obsolete. But, after all allowance, and fortified as these facts are in my own study of them, with the opinions of large numbers of answers to inquiries, many of them from specially qualified judges of such matters, is it too much to say that the probability of serious increase is very great?"

All the merits of the eucalyptus tree have not hitherto been recognized. Reports have recently come from Australia that its leaves are the special abhorrence of all insects which prey upon fruit trees, against whose depredations they furnish a perfect protection if the ground beneath be only strewn with them. If, however, it be desired to make assurance double sure, it is only necessary to bind strips of eucalyptus bark around the trunks of the fruit trees. These are the first reports, and experiments now going on in Australia and in South Africa will soon show whether they are true or not.

The funeral customs among the Presbyterians of Scotland do not include a ceremony at the grave. Therefore the late Rev. Dr. Halley, soon after arriving in this country, supposed that he had finished his duties when, at a funeral, the coffin was lowered into the grave. The people looked expectant. The undertaker whispered: "Say that the friends of the deceased wish you to return thanks to those who have attended the funeral." "The deceased wishes me to return thanks to the friends who are present," earnestly said the minister.

When Moscow was burning, there was a party dancing in the palace right over a gunpowder magazine. They did not know the flame was approaching, so the leader of the festivity shouted, 'One dance more!' and the music played, and the feet bounded, and the laughter rang out; but suddenly through the fire and the smoke and the thunder of the explosion eternity broke. Alas! that some will dance on in their sins, and their frivolities, and their worldliness, until in an hour they know not eternity breaks in and they are destroyed, and that without remedy.—Spurgeon.

'How beautiful the dome of heaven this evening!' said Angelica, as she leaned heavily on his arm. The Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 11, 1882.

GOV. LONG'S proclamation is out, naming Thursday, April 6, as Fast Day.

THE MORMONS are now moving for a State government, doubtless with the vain hope of escaping the threatening hand of justice in this way; but it will not work.

THE Supreme Court at Washington decided on Monday that Secretary Sherman had no right to establish the use of the polariscope in testing sugars, and some $2,000,000 which has been paid by refiners under protest will accordingly be returned to them.

THERE seems to be a growing sentiment in the towns of this State in favor of prohibition. Sixty-three of the 88 towns which voted on the license question last Monday voted "No." The importance of one vote was shown at Greenfield, where the vote was a tie; but the moderator decided that licenses could not be granted.

GREAT destitution and suffering is being wrought by the flood in the Lower Mississippi valley. For 400 miles southward from Cairo the flood extends, probably the worst one ever known. The levees are riddled and practically worthless, steamboats pass through the streets of towns, and whole counties are under water. Many lives have been lost, and the property loss exceeds $2,000,000.

A MONSTER anti-Chinese mass meeting was held in San Francisco last Saturday, attended by over 30,000 people. They are terribly in earnest in this matter out that way, and demand speedy and effective restriction of Chinese immigration. The Senate at Washington passed the anti-Chinese bill Thursday, and the House will doubtless follow suit before long, un-American as it may seem.

CONKLING'S vanity having been gratified by his nomination and confirmation as justice of the supreme court, he decided last Sunday to decline the position. This is the second time President Arthur has suffered the humiliation of having a nominee for a high office refuse the honor after being confirmed, and there is in this case the added discomfort of knowing that the nomination was disapproved of generally throughout the country, to begin with. It ought to be a good lesson for him. As for Conkling, his declination is a relief to the people, who are quite ready to lose sight of him from public life, for some time to come.

AMHERST people of all classes have been investing heavily in mining stocks for the past year and a half, on the strength of representations made by Col. W. S. Clark, formerly president of the agricultural college, and a leading and honored citizen. It is estimated that some $200,000 has gone from Amherst pockets into the speculative whirlpool, some people even putting all their eggs into this basket. Now the stocks have depreciated heavily and stopped paying dividends, and the owners are naturally quite alarmed, but hope for better things when Col. Clark returns from the West. A suit has been brought against Col. Clark by one creditor, who is supposed to have lost on these stocks.

THE Senate at Boston did a very poor thing on Tuesday when it rejected the bill creating a tribunal to decide upon the public necessity for any new railroad before allowing it to be built. The bill is fair and reasonable, and would serve to protect individual rights against the outrages possible under the law as it now stands. An effort will be made to reconsider the vote, and if the senators sense the feeling of the people correctly, they will give the bill favorable consideration. The treasury committee is manifesting commendable economy in reporting against several proposed measures for increasing salaries, etc. The liquor committee has reported a prohibitory law, which many would be glad to see passed, but do not expect to.

THE woman suffragists have heretofore had the tacit acquiescence, at least, of their sex, in their efforts to procure the privilege of voting; but now a number of leading Boston ladies have signed protests against the passage of the bill giving women the right of municipal suffrage, which the Senate has just rejected. They do not seek political responsibilities; do not want them. And this is unquestionably true of the great majority of women in the State. Why, then, force upon them that which they do not want? It cannot be expected that they would come out and vote under these circumstances. The history of school suffrage does not indicate it. The few would among the good; the many would, more likely, among the bad. When, however, women as a whole want to vote, we believe the privilege will be cheerfully accorded to them.

It was loudly announced that after Guiteau's sentence he was to be kept in strict confinement, and allowed to see no one but his lawyers and his relatives, but it is reported that he is permitted to hold daily receptions, and averages $12 to $15 per day by the sale of autographs and photographs.

The Second Congregational Church in Holyoke have decided to sell their old church edifice and lot, and will build a new one on a new site owned by the society. The committee are perambulating the country for the best church plans.

The East River bridge at New York is now promised to be opened in two years. The Legislature of New York is asked for a million and a quarter more.

The steamer City of Berlin, overdue at New York, was picked up at sea disabled on the 28th ult. by the Samaria, and arrived at Boston Monday night.

Rev. A. F. Newton of Townsend, who has been called to the pastorate of the Congregational church in this place, has been in town this week, looking over the ground, and conducted the Tuesday evening prayer meeting in that church.

The petition for annexing a portion of Belchertown to Palmer was presented in the House this week, and referred to the appropriate committee, but the petitioners do not expect that the present Legislature will take any action on the matter.

Samuel Haines, agent of the Columbian Mills at Greenville, N. H., and formerly agent of the Boston Duck Co., at Bondville, has purchased $75,000 of the Warren cotton mills stock, and will next month succeed A. D. Barker as agent of the company at West Warren.

That "severest snow storm of the season," which was to visit us on Wednesday, according to some of the weather prophets, must have got lost somewhere on the way, for the day was as bright as could have been desired. It snowed briskly for a time on Thursday, but soon turned to rain.

As a general thing it costs 20 cents to ride from here to Monson on the cars, but sometimes it costs a great deal more, as a fellow who was drunk and ugly, and refused to pay his fare Thursday afternoon, found out to his sorrow. He was brought back to the district court, and paid $17.14 for his little trip.

The Palmer Savings Bank has bought of W. H. Hitchcock the building on Main street occupied by Haynes's stove store, together with the lease of the land, for $575. The land is owned by the bank, and it is probable that sometime in the future a good brick block will replace the present wooden structures between the bank building and the railroad.

The Palmer Dramatic Club will present the following entertainment at Wales Hall next Thursday evening: "A Husband to Order," a serio-comic drama in two acts, followed by the old but capital farce, "Slasher and Crasher." Both pieces are exceedingly amusing and interesting, and will be effectually shown by the aid of suitable costumes furnished by Curtis & Weld, Boston. Kenfield's orchestra will furnish music. Tickets go on sale at the post office Tuesday morning.

At Tuesday's session of the probate court in Springfield Alvin A. Gage was appointed administrator on the estate of Annie B. Gage, and Edward H. and Albert H. Newton administrators on the estate of Mary G. Newton, all of Monson. These wills were approved—Mary W. Lyon of Ludlow, Benjamin F. Burr executor; Hiram Newton of Monson, Edward P. and Albert H. Newton executors. An inventory was filed on the estate of John Ward of New Britain, Ct., formerly of Palmer, $1440.

A new 50-wire switch board is to be placed in the telephone office soon, to make room for the increase of business expected this spring. The new board will be of twice the capacity of the present one, will do away with the bell board, and will be arranged so that two operators can be employed at the same time if necessary. E. W. Plumley, who was expected to return to this office as night operator, has decided to remain in Springfield, having been given a position as day operator there, and Rufus Taplin will attend to the night service here as soon as the necessary arrangements are made.

Town politics are not stirring much yet. It is understood that the present board of selectmen are ready to serve another term, and matters have moved along so quietly during the year that the voters will most likely feel like continuing the present board, who will have the advantage of additional experience in their work for another year. There will, of course, be other tickets in the field, and among the names mentioned as possible candidates are those of Jeremiah Dutton, David Knox, R. E. Knowlton, and two members of last year's board, F. A. Packard and Joseph Kerigan. There will be two members of the school committee to elect, in place of Dr. Ruggles and E. B. Gates, both of whom will be candidates for re-election, while the names of Rev. C. H. Ricketts and G. A. Murdock of Thorndike, and Mr. Buell of Three Rivers, may also be brought forward as candidates.

The warrant for the annual town meeting will be found in another column. It contains 30 articles, three less than last year, but enough to make a good day's work if they are all acted upon. The selectmen have laid out several town ways, which will come up for acceptance, and the question of building additional drains and sewers in this village is one which deserves careful thought and action. That they are needed is beyond question, and the town cannot afford to build them at hap-hazard, but should employ a competent engineer to lay out the work properly, and with an eye to the necessity of future additions to the system. The question of additional school accommodations at Three Rivers is also one which ought to receive favorable consideration. The town has undoubtedly been ready to do what was necessary in this direction for some time, but there has been a difference of opinion as to just what it was best to do, and consequently no action has been taken. The preponderance of sentiment has plainly been in favor of leaving the present school house where it is, and, this being settled, there will not be any objection, we imagine, to providing whatever may be necessary in the shape of additional school room in that village.

Baird's Mammoth Minstrels, who appear at Wales Hall next week Friday evening, are new to this section, but their entertainments are awarded unstinted praise in places where they have exhibited, and they present several striking novelties which will tend to draw a full house. The Salem Argus says of their entertainment in that city: "Unlike most companies of the kind, the performance went far ahead of the advertisement, which argues well for the success with which the company is meeting. The first part of the programme was really a musical gem, the sweet melodies of which were interspersed with happy jokes and witticisms by the ten end men, who introduced some brand new conundrums and kept the house in one continuous giggle. Probably the most novel departure in minstrelsy is the pedestal clog dance introduced by the Four Invincibles, and the dancing of the Midget Four on each others' heads, which surpasses anything of the kind we have ever seen. Each number on the bill was faithfully presented and admirably rendered. Mr. Baird has thirty five people—each one a bright star in his particular line. The band concerts excel anything of the kind on the road; while the whole entertainment may be justly termed the par excellence of refined minstrelsy."

The selectmen's report is now in the hands of the printer, and will be ready for distribution, probably, next week Saturday. The report of the treasurer shows the receipts of the year to have been $42,872, including the balance of $64 on hand at the beginning of the year, while the total expenditures were $38,696, leaving a balance on hand of $4176. The principal items of expenditure have been as follows: Highways, $3414; railways, $211; new road and bridge abutments (bridges not yet paid for) at Bondsville, $1500; public library, $500; bridges, $977; new road at Three Rivers ordered by commissioners, $300; support of poor, $3042; contingencies, $3454. The whole number of paupers at the poor farm during the year was 21, and the average number 14, the cost of supporting them being $1262, or almost exactly $90 each, against $124.64 each the previous year. It cost $661 for support of poor not on the town farm, $848 for support of insane at Northampton, and $87 for children at the State Primary and Reform schools. For State paupers $182 was paid; number of tramps cared for, 220. There are notes and claims against the town amounting to $2745, but the money in the treasury and other sums due the town amount to $7694, leaving a balance of $4949 in favor of the town. The selectmen report the roads in much better condition than they were a year ago, about six miles of highway having been hardened the past season, while the new scraper bought by them early in the season has done excellent and satisfactory work. They report that the iron bridges at Three Rivers and Thorndike are settling at one end, and will need attention this year. Nothing has been done about a new sewer in this village, as an engineer's estimate showed that it would require about $6000 to put in a sewer for the proper drainage of Park street, whereas only $2000 was appropriated by the town for the work. The selectmen recommend the following appropriations for the current year: Poor, $3500; contingencies, $2500; highways, $3500; bridges, $1500; railings, $200; interest, $115.

HAMPDEN.

Deputy Sheriff Spellman of this place has been appointed by Sheriff Sanderson to succeed Jailer Bradley of Springfield, May 1st, when Mr. Bradley proposes to retire to his Vermont farm. Mr. Spellman has made a good deputy, and will undoubtedly make an equally good jailer.

MONSON.

W. N. Flynt & Co. have nearly 600 carloads of paving stone to ship to Chicago, yet, before July 1, to complete their contract.

The examination at the academy, at the close of the term, took place on Tuesday, and there was a social interview in the evening. The prospects for the next term are said to be excellent.

WILBRAHAM.

The Willing Workers meet with Ida and Nellie Atchinson next Wednesday afternoon.

The last quarterly conference for the year of the M. E. church was held in the chapel Wednesday evening.

The Farmers' Club will be entertained by James Richards of Maple street, Monday evening. Essays will be read by A. A. Phelps and F. E. Clark.

WALES.

The ladies of the Baptist church held an ice cream festival Wednesday night.

New roads are in vogue this spring, two petitions already having been presented to the selectmen.

S. Wyman stands second best on the egg business, having one measuring 6 1-2 and 8 1-4, and weighing a quarter of a pound.

BRIMFIELD.

Elijah Allen has been drawn juror for the March term of the superior court.

The Worcester County Cheese Company, in which many Brimfield farmers are interested, held a meeting on Wednesday to consider the question of connecting a creamery with the factory. No decisive action was taken, but a committee was chosen to make further investigations.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Nathan Evans, for 14 years a faithful member of the Orchard branch of the city fire department, who was recently appointed a special policeman, had a great surprise Wednesday night. The laddies, with Henry Keyes as spokesman, presented him with a gigantic billy and an elaborate silver badge, on which is inscribed these words "Special Policeman 1616." There is not a better heart beneath a badge than the one beneath this, and may he live long to enjoy its wearing.

WARREN.

Most of the public schools close next week.

The boot and shoe shops are starting up business quite brisk.

The Methodist church is ready for frescoing. The grounds are being graded also.

The Musical society postponed their rehearsal on account of the books not having arrived.

Rev. Washington Gladden's lecture will be next Tuesday evening. Subject, "The Best Society."

Presiding Elder Ela preached at the Methodist church last Sunday, and a large part of their debt was raised.

The ladies' sociable met at the house of J. W. Chadsey Wednesday evening, and it being the twenty-fifth anniversary of their residence in town a choice basket of flowers was presented by neighbors and friends.

BELCHERTOWN.

Calvin Bridgman, who died last week Friday, was an old and prominent citizen, and had been postmaster, custom house inspector, and member of the Legislature. Mr. Bridgman left $6000 to the town as a high school fund, and $4000 as the beginning of a fund for a public library.

Monday's town meeting resulted in the election of the following officers: Moderator, Samuel Allen; clerk, C. L. Washburn; selectmen and overseers of the poor, Dennison Stebbins, W. H. Bridgman, J. R. Gould; assessors, A. R. Owen, G. C. Allen, L. V. B. Cook; treasurer, E. S. Bridgman; school committee, S. G. Hastings. Appropriations: Paupers, $3000; schools, $4000; building and repairing school house, $1000; repairs on highways and bridges, $2000; town debt and interest, $2500.

THORNDIKE.

The Methodists held an entertainment at Murdock's Hall Wednesday evening. It received, as it deserved, the patronage of the public.

A large party of friends from Springfield, Chicopee and this village, gave B. F. Clark a pleasant surprise Thursday evening, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of his wedding. As was fitting, the friends presented the customary silver presents.

The barns belonging to the Thorndike Company were entirely destroyed by fire early Tuesday morning. Besides the live stock, which was saved, the barns contained a large amount of hay, straw and grain; also considerable starch and some flour, which were entirely consumed. By strenuous effort the lumber and out-buildings were saved. The fire was doubtless the work of an incendiary. The loss is estimated at $2000, partially insured in the Springfield Fire and Marine.

THREE RIVERS.

Three persons united with the Union church last Sunday by letter.

The Young Men's Christian Association cleared about $25 by their recent course of lectures.

The Golden Rule Alliance are rehearsing the drama, "Old Honesty," to be presented the 17th inst.

Messrs. O. L. Teague and H. R. Paine have opened a barber shop over the store of Mrs. M. A. Squier.

Ezra Forte's eyes, which were injured so seriously by hot Babbitt-metal a few weeks since, are so much improved that he is able to be out again.

Professor Robert Turner of Boston will give a stereopticon entertainment in Union church, for the benefit of the Sunday school, Monday evening, March 20th. The tickets will be sold by the children of the school.

Mrs. Russell Robbins found a large turtle in the water near her house the other day, and managed to capture it. The fellow weighed some thirty pounds or more, and Dr. Ruggles, to whom it was presented, proposes to make it the basis of some good soups.

Rev. W. L. Noyes accepts the invitation to become pastor of the Union Evangelical church, and will enter upon his labors here as soon as he is released from his present field. Rev. C. H. Ricketts of Thorndike will supply the pulpit next Sunday morning.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

A Mr. Mason, reported to be from Monson, lost a horse on the highway near this village, Wednesday, from a sharp attack of colic.

It is now expected that the dramatic company of the Street will present their drama, "Coupon Bonds," in this vilage very soon.

On Thursday D. B. West, employed in manufacturing Cutler's grain dryers, narrowly escaped serious injuries by being hit with a large plug, blown out under pressure of 60 pounds of steam. He received several bad cuts about the eyes.

Since March 1st E. B. Gates & Co. and C. E. Stacy have combined their grocery and meat business under the firm name of E. B. Gates & Co. They have fitted up an excellent market in the same building with the groceries, and people will be much better accommodated by these facilities than heretofore.

At the annual meeting of Grace chapel the following officers were chosen: Parish committee, Phineas Knowlton, Hiram Danks, Henry Cutler; treasurer and collector, E. H. Cutler; clerk, S. E. Baker; organist, E. W. Wall; soliciting committee, S. A. Parker, L. M. Powers, C. S. Fuller. It was voted that the pulpit be supplied by Rev. M. S. Howard and a minister of some other denomination as last year. Granted $700 for parish purposes. The treasurer's report showed receipts from pledges $516.39; oyster supper, $70; ladies' society, $30; passing the boxes, $45.10; sundries, $5.68; total, $667.17. Payments—salaries, $350; back salary, $75; on note, $100; sundries, $135.23; total, $660.23. Balance on hand, $6-94; and due on pledges, $79.60. The debt is now $500. Voted to pay $100 on same this year. The parish appointed a committee of five to confer with the ladies about having a supper or festival soon, the proceeds to apply on the debt.

BONDSVILLE.

The ladies' society met at the parsonage Wednesday afternoon and evening, and had a very pleasant time, with a large attendance.

The Catholics have organized a temperance society with 25 members, which will be a decided acquisition to the village, and an honor to the members.

A land league has been organized with the following officers: President, Patrick Fitzgerald; vice president, Thomas Carmody. It has about 75 members.

M. H. King of North Manchester, Conn., brother to our baggage master, has gone to Guaymas, Mexico, where he has engaged as chief clerk of the Sonora Railroad.

Ed. Ryther, who has been employed as boss painter by the Boston Duck Company for a number of years, is about to commence business for himself, and with his skill and experience ought to command a good trade.

If that portion of Belchertown over the river is annexed to Palmer, as is being talked of, it will be quite an addition to this village, embracing as it does the new hotel, a number of fine dwellings, and the "new depot" that is to be.

With four grocery stores in this place, and two or three teams running up here from Three Rivers and Thorndike, provisions are coming down in price. Truly competition is a benefit to the people, if not to the merchants.

The present indications are that builders will have plenty to do the coming season. Chas. Holden has moved into the house he purchased recently of Mr. Potter. He has built a barn and is going to build a store at once. Canterbury Bros. are building a dwelling house for Patrick Sullivan. A. Girouard is putting up a house, and three cellars are being dug. Merrick Whitney contemplates building a block for stores. John Hayes has finished his house, and is moving into it. It is quite a neat affair, and is admired by all.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Holden has new maple sugar right from the woods.

Congressman George R. Davis was in town Tuesday.

A private social dance was held at Engine Hall, Tuesday evening.

Robert Kershaw has raised since last September 79 white mice from one pair.

L. W. Robinson is to sell the Boyle farm at auction March 22d. See advertisement.

Mrs. S. A. Howard has purchased the place of Cornelia A. Gould at Ware Center.

There were 287 present at the Sunday school at the East Congregational church last Sunday, the largest number for several years.

Mrs. Olds and Miss Waterman's class of Willing Workers will meet at the parlor of the Methodist church this (Saturday) afternoon and evening.

Daniel C. Marsh has sold his place on Prospect street to John W. Shewbrooks. Mr. Marsh is to move into the new house of H. P. Cummings, on the same street.

The Dominican Fathers, four in number, will commence service in the St. Williams Catholic church to-day. They are recently from Tennessee, and are under the leadership of Father McKenney.

N. S. Simmons was given a surprise party by a large number of his friends on Monday evening, who left a purse of $56, which had been collected for the worthy couple. It was Mr. Simmons's birthday.

The store and fish market of Wm. F. Coney was entered by burglars some time Sunday forenoon. They carried away about a dollar from the money drawer, which they broke open, and a part of a box of cigars.

Henry P. Perkins is to be ordained, preparatory to his going to China as a missionary, on Thursday, March 23d. Prof. Hartranft of Hartford is to preach the sermon. Dr. Alden, of the Board of Missions, of Boston, is expected to be present.

E. J. Lazelle of Springfield was in town on Thursday, to make a photograph of the library building, from which to make the frontispiece of the forthcoming history of the library association, including the dedicatory exercises, soon to be published.

On Tuesday and Wednesday there was an exhibition of the use of the Vienna Compressed Yeast at the store of C. Hitchcock & Co. The best of rolls and bread were made, baked and distributed to visitors, and directions given away to enable any one to make the same articles.

The amateur photograph apparatus from the Scoville Manufacturing Company, of which we spoke two weeks ago, has arrived, and is the most perfect outfit in all its details we ever saw. Following the plain directions, any one of ordinary intelligence can make pictures. We shall be pleased to show the apparatus to any who are interested. See advertisement.

It is to be hoped that our representative, Mr. Stevens, will not let the opportunity pass to use his influence to make Ware an important railroad center. It is thought by some that by a little explanation on his part the New York and New England Railroad could be induced to make connection with the Massachusetts Central at Ware, instead of further north. The route selected is of easy grade, nowhere over 50 feet to the mile.

At the quarterly conference of the Methodist church held last Sunday evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Trustees, Benjamin Davis, J. P. Crowell, D. C. Gates, H. Ramsdell, Geo. Eddy, Geo. E. Puffer, J. Lewis, H. C. Davis, J. Grant, H. P. Cummings; Stewards, J. P. Crowell, D. C. Gates, M. Ramsdell, George E. Puffer, J. W. Cummings, C. H. Ormsby, O. C. Stetson, J. W. Clark, J. T. Winslow.

The Young Men's Library Association are putting some very valuable books into the reference department of the library. One of the latest is "The Grammar of Ornament," illustrated by examples from various styles of ornament. It contains 112 plates most magnificently colored. We hardly think that the reference department of the library is used as much as it might be, except by the school children. It does not seem as if our business men understand that they may there find information upon almost any subject desired. A case in point: A person had been to several places to find a Boston business directory, without success, never thinking to look in the library, where it was sure to be found.

Town meeting a week from Monday. The warrant contains 21 articles. The official reports are in the hands of the printer, and by permission of the selectmen we are enabled to present the following items: There has been expended the past year for highways, $3903; for schools, $8900; library, $1126; street lights, $752; night and Sunday police, $922; expenses extraordinary, $808, including $350 paid H. Goodwin for damage on highway. Balance of the liabilities of the town over resources, $35,279, which is $8191 less than last year. The overseers of the poor report the total expense of support of poor at the almshouse, $1143; town's poor away from the almshouse, $2266; number of inmates at the almshouse at the present time, 5; weekly cost of inmates per capita for the year, $2.30. The inventory at almshouse of hay, grain, provisions and live stock is $1439.90. The treasurer's report shows receipts for the year of $53,466.13, and an expenditure of $49,662.43, leaving a balance on hand of $3803.70. The Village Improvement Association have laid a total of 1720 running feet of concrete walk at a cost of $1134.70.

Another six-days' walking match at New York came to an end last Saturday night, and was won by George Hazael, an English runner, who made the unparalleled score of 600 miles, this being 18 miles ahead of the best previous record. Ten men began the walk, but only six continued to the end. Rowell, the well-known champion, broke down on the fifth day.

Charles A. Sweet & Co., well-known Boston bankers, have suspended, with liabilities of some $3,000,000 or $4,000,000. Their suspension is understood to have been caused by the shrinkage in Massachusetts Central and Conotton Valley railroad bonds, in which they had invested heavily.

The spot whereon President Garfield fell in the railway station at Washington is marked not only by a little silver star, but by the regretful veneration of the passers-by. As they hurry to their trains, it is said that each steps aside lest a disrespectful foot should desecrate the spot.

It isn't certain that Barnum will get his big elephant "Jumba," from the London zoological garden, after all. The people are very much disturbed over the prospect of losing the monster, and an injunction has been granted forbidding the animal's removal.

A terrific hail storm occurred in the City of Mexico on Sunday night during a circus performance. The tent was crushed by the hail and the lights extinguished. A scene of wild confusion followed, but fortunately no lives were lost.

A lot of squatters in West Virginia, who for years have lived in a fertile tract which Gen. Butler is said to have "bought for a song," drove off the General's surveyors recently, the party barely escaping with their lives.

The attempt to bridge the Thames River at New London will fail in the Connecticut Legislature, it is thought. It is also said that its promoters will abandon it in order to kill the new line from New York to Boston.

The Green Mountain range will form the line dividing the State of Vermont into the two new Congressional districts.

Wheat Bitters are not an intoxicant or another name for whisky, but are a perfect blood, brain and nerve food.

A BOOK FOR CANVASSERS.—Judge Tourgee of North Carolina, the famous author of "A Fool's Errand" and "Bricks without Straw," has added to his series of striking historical studies, another work, entitled "A Royal Gentleman." In dramatic power, in romantic interest, and in literary finish, it is the author's masterpiece.

When we consider that in a little more than one year, hundreds of thousands of volumes of this author have been put in circulation among the reading and thinking people of America—books dealing with the deepest and most important problems of our national life, and yet popular, because set forth in the blazing, fascinating light of fiction—we know that the author must be making a profound impression upon his day. There is scarce an instance in literary history of so sudden a rise to so profound an eminence.

Judged by the sale of his books, which has been the most rapid in the history of book-publishing, Judge Tourgee stands to-day the most popular of American writers. A book from his graphic pen is therefore a great literary event.

It is safe to say that all who have read "A Fool's Errand" will desire to read "A Royal Gentleman;" and as it is to be sold exclusively by subscription, thousands will welcome the coming of the canvassers. The book is handsomely illustrated. For particulars address, D. L. Guernsey, 61 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

TOWN WARRANT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, S. S.—To H. A. Northrop, Constable of the Town of Palmer, Greeting: In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs to meet at the Town House in said Palmer, on Monday the twentieth day of March inst., at ten o'clock a. m., to act on the following articles, viz:

Article 1. To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

Art. 2. To determine the number of selectmen, overseers of the poor, assessors, school committee, and constables the town will elect for the ensuing year.

Art. 3. To act upon the reports of the school committee, selectmen and other town officers.

Art. 4. To see if the town will vote to determine the compensation of the collector of taxes for the ensuing year.

Art. 5. To see if the town will allow a discount upon the taxes that may be assessed for the ensuing year.

Art. 6. To determine the manner the town will take to collect taxes that may be assessed for the ensuing year, and state terms and conditions of the same.

Art. 7. To elect all necessary town officers for the ensuing year.

Art. 8. To raise such sums of money as may be necessary to defray the current expenses of the town for the ensuing year, and to appropriate the same.

Art. 9. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money in anticipation of the taxes of the current year, the same to be payable from said taxes.

Art. 10. To determine the manner of repairing the highways and bridges for the ensuing year.

Art. 11. To see if the town will continue to hire the rooms now occupied for a lock-up and tramp room.

Art. 12. To vote by ballot, which shall be, yes or no, according to the provisions of chapter 54 of acts of 1881, in answer to the question, "shall licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors be granted in this town for the ensuing year?"

Art. 13. To see if the town will by its vote or otherwise ask the Legislature to extend to women who are citizens the right to hold town offices and to vote in town affairs on the same terms as male citizens.

Art. 14. To see what action the town will take in regard to choosing a Board of Health.

Art. 15. To see if the town will accept the list of jurors as revised by the selectmen.

Art. 16. To hear reports of committees and act thereon.

Art. 17. To choose committees and give them instructions.

Art. 18. To see if the town will make an appropriation for the benefit of the Young Men's Library Association.

Art. 19. To see if the town will raise any money for the celebration of Decoration Day, or towards building a soldiers' monument, and appropriate the same.

Art. 20. To see if the town will accept of the provisions of chapter 158, acts of 1871, being entitled: An act to provide for the election of road commissioners.

Art. 21. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in Bondsville, beginning near the pond on the old county road and running northerly to the Boston Duck Company canal, thence northeasterly to the center of the Swift river.

Art. 22. To see if the town will vote to discontinue the town way in Three Rivers leading from the old county road to the point where the said town way is intersected by the new road leading to Gilbert Barker's house.

Art. 23. To see if the town will build a new school house at Three Rivers, or otherwise increase the school accommodations in that village, and appropriate money for the same.

Art. 24. To see if the town will vote to lay a drain to connect with one already laid in front of the house owned by N. K. Rogers, to connect with one now laid near the store of Daniel F. Holden, and appropriate money for the same.

Art. 25. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in Thorndike village, beginning on the county road near the house of William Harvey, and running to the house of Henry McGilp.

Art. 26. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in the Depot village, on the easterly side of Central street, at corner of land of James Henighan, and running south 31° east by land of said Henighan and land of estate of A. Burleigh to Maple street.

Art. 27. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in the village of Three Rivers, commencing at a point on the highway near the house owned by Thomas Sullivan, and running thence in a southwesterly course to intersect a town way near the former residence of Hall J. Kelly.

Art. 28. To see if the town will take any action in regard to removing obstructions from the road leading from Three Rivers to the house of Oscar B. Sikes.

Art. 29. To see if the town will build additional drains and sewers at Palmer Depot Village, and appropriate necessary money for building the same.

Art. 30. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in the village of Bondsville, commencing on the Ware road near the house of Luther Collis, and running south of land formerly owned by Cheesboro Lewis.

Names of Selectmen, Overseers of Poor, Assessors, School Committee and Constables who are voted for, must be all on one ballot, Town Clerk and Treasurer on a separate ballot; and you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof at the different public places designated by the vote of the town seven days at least before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal, at least two issues before the holding of said meeting.

Hereof fail not, and make due return of this warrant, with your doings thereon, to the Town Clerk, on or before the time of said meeting. Given under our hands this fourth day of March A. D. 1882.

E. G. MURDOCK, H. G. LOOMIS, H. McMASTER, } Selectmen of Palmer.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE

WONDERFUL SURGICAL OPERATION—REMOVAL OF URINARY STONES FROM THE BLADDER—SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they called Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their re-formation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation or the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from the constitutions of women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. 4w49

Song of the Hoop Skirt.

Hoop, la! Hoop, la!
Here we are again,
Getting round the ladies like—
Ahem!—the naughty men;
Clasping tight their little waists—
Oh, but don't we smile
To hear the darlings tell us
We are just about the style!

We're greeting old acquaintances—
How are you, Bustle, dear?
I see you still keep modestly
A hanging in the rear.
Miss Corset, all your bones are well?
And ah! you may be gay,
For you, unlike us skeletons,
Must with the birdies stay.

And, why! old bosom friend! Just shake—
You never were forgotten;
You stick in front, but you are well!
You look as white as cotton—
But who are all these strangers?
Introduce me. I am glad
This skirt-see I am dropping
Is to you, Miss Liverpad.

Oh, isn't it delightful to
Be one of you again,
Protecting timid ladies
From the squeezes of the men!

"MA COUNTRYMAN BURNS."

At a Burns banquet held recently in Montreal, a goodly number of chiels from the land of brose, kail and parraitch sat down to an enjoyable Canadian dinner, which was pronounced almost as good as the universal gruel diet in the land of the heather. Sandy McGrab, a distinguished stranger, made the speech of the evening. After fortifying himself with a gill of old Scotch, he cleared his throat, and on being presented by the chairman, who had never seen or heard of him before, in a flattering speech he said:

"Leddies and gentlemen, I'm awfu' prood o' the great honor and respect ye show in Cunnada to ma countryman Burns. I'm also prood to tell ye that in ivry land ye find Scotchmen at the head o' affairs. Perhaps ye dinna ken it, but I am a Scotchman ma sel'. I'm only just oot fra Glasca, an' owing to head winds and snaw only arrived yester' morn; as I said before ye may not ken it, but I assure ye, leddies and gentlemen, that I am a Scotchman ma sel', an' am awfu' prood o' the great honor and respect shown not only in Cunnada, but the world ower, to ma countryman, 'Bobbie Burns.' Scotland is the land o' sang, an' all the warld has drawn its music frae Scotland and Italy, but maistly frae Scotland. Ye see, I'm awfu' prood o' Scotland, but perhaps ye dinna ken it that I'm a Scotchman ma sel' frae Glasca, whar they speak the purest English in the warld, an' monny a man frae Glasca is taken to be an Englishman, but I'll no' detain ye, sae here's the toast o' a' toasts, 'Ma countryman Burns.'"

The Spanish physician, Dr. Olive, deducts the following conclusions from 119 observations: 1. The cobweb, when taken as a powder, cures daily or tertian malaria fevers. 2. When administered by two-gramme doses to men and one-gramme doses to children, it stops fever, usually after the second attack. 3. Its action is not so rapid as that of the sulphate of quinine, so, until further researches, cobweb powders ought not to be used in cases of pernicious fevers. 4. The powder, being tasteless, is easier to take than quinine, especially for children. 5. This remedy is a very good preservative. To make cobweb powder, clean the cobwebs, dry them in the sun, and pound them in a mortar. One gets thus an ash-brown powder, insoluble in water, and hardly soluble in alcohol.

California is growing restless at the dilatoriness of Congress in dealing with the Chinese question, and urgent appeals are made by the papers of the State that a limitation be at once placed upon Chinese immigration. Unless this is done it is claimed that 40,000 Chinese will be landed in San Francisco during the next six months.

The conductor, engineer and other men employed on the train that carried President Garfield to Elberon have received silver medals commemorative of the sad and eventful journey.

It is declared by parties interested in promoting silk culture in the United States that silk has already been grown and reeled in this country which is superior to the finest Italian article.

The House naval committee at Washington has agreed to report a bill for the building of 15 new war vessels, at a cost of $10,000,000.

A cold in the head is one of the best things that can happen to a lady with a lace handkerchief, and Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is decidedly the best remedy to cure that cold.

It is worth remembering that nobody enjoys the nicest surroundings if in bad health. There are miserable people about to-day with one foot in the grave, when a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic would do them more good than all the doctors and medicines they have ever tried. See adv. m

MOTHER DIED OF SALT RHEUM.—J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this county. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies." m

STONES in the KIDNEYS

AND BLADDER EXPELLED—LONG SUFFERING OF ONE OF TROY'S BEST PEOPLE—A LUCKY MAN.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr. Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-Dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case, and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 7-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers.

Yours truly, JAMES ANDREWS.
No. 10 Marshal St., Ida Hill.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bottle, it would seem that persons afflicted in like fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. Get it of your druggist, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" sold by all druggists. 48

WHEAT BITTERS.

THE BEST AND THE RICHEST

BLOOD, BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

CAREFULLY PREPARED,
THOROUGHLY TESTED,
ACCEPTABLE & RELIABLE

The Phosphates of the Wheat are its most valuble food property, and are, when properly prepared, the most acceptable nutriment with which to build up the system.

The Blood, Brain and Nerves are the forces which bear the strain of every day work and life, and in order to save sickness it is wise to

BUILD FOR HEALTH.

Wheat Bitters are prepared, not by fermentation, but by solution, and are richest in the Phosphates, while the starch and impure matter are eliminated. These make in themselves a basis, to which is added the best and choicest medicinal qualities, necessary to make it a tonic and bitter. It is at once healthful, pleasant to the taste and must not be confounded with the thousand and one cheap alcoholic bitters which are sold as cure-alls. Medicine is doubly effective when used with food, so as to nourish while it corrects.

Sold by druggists, $1.00 per bottle.

THE STEINWAY PIANO

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE.

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of people best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway Pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers by paying $75, $100, $150, $200, or $300, according to the style, more for them than for any others; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "a foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scale," etc., etc., all proclaim that the

STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWLEDGED STANDARD

PIANO.

This fact is being established that the Steinway is the best: of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

CUTICURA.

Geo. W. Brown, 48 Marshall St., Providence, R. I., cured by Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) of a Ringworm Humor got at the barber's, which spread all over his ears, neck and face, and for six years resisted all kinds of treatment.

SKIN HUMOR.

F. H. Drake, Esq., agent for Harper & Bros., Detroit, Mich., gives an astonishing account of his case (eczema rodent), which had been treated by a consultation of physicians without benefit, and which speedily yielded to the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally.

SCALD HEAD.

H. A. Raymond, Auditor F. W., J. & S. R. R., Jackson, Mich., was cured of Scald Head of nine years' duration by the Cuticura Remedies.

ECZEMA.

Hon. Wm. Taylor, Boston, Mass., permanently cured of a humor of the face and scalp (eczema) that had been treated unsuccessfully for twelve years by many of Boston's best physicians and most noted specialists, as well as European authorities.

MILK CRUST.

Mrs. Bowers, 143 Clinton St., Cincinnati, speaks of her sister's child, who was cured of milk crust which resisted all remedies for two years. Now a fine healthy boy, with a beautiful head of hair.

FALLING HAIR.

Frank A. Bean, Steam Fire Engine 6, Boston, was cured of Alopecia, or falling of the hair, by the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, which completely restored his hair when all said he would lose it.

TREATMENT.

The Cuticura treatment consists in the internal use of the Cuticura Resolvent, the new blood purifier, and the external use of Cuticura and Cuticura Soap, the great skin cures.

Margery.

In a farmhouse, red and olden,
Where the morning sunbeams golden
Flashed from diamond pane and gable,
Glanced from weather-cock and stable,—
There dwelt Margery—form and feature
Plain, unshapely—but a creature
With a soul athirst for beauty,
Hedged in by the path of duty.
(The cream must be churned, and the wool must be spun,
And the cows must be milked at the set of the sun,
So Margery toileth.)

Never lark on bright May morning
Thrilled his welcome to the dawning,
Not a wind-flower 'neath the hedges,
In the breeze swung pearly edges,
Ne'er sun-rays from cloud out-peeping,
Hills in rosy glow are steeping—
But her loving heart out-reaching
Grasped the lessons they are teaching.
(But the cream must be churned, and the wool must be spun,
And the cows must be milked at the set of the sun,
And Margery toileth.)

Thus the long years slowly drifted,
Never was the burden lifted;
Hands grew knotted, shoulders stooping,
'Neath the weight of care down drooping;
Drunken father, feeble mother,
Frail young sisters, thankless brother,
And the love that might have crowned her,
Passed her by and never found her.
(Yet the cream must be churned, and the wool must be spun,
And the cows must be milked at the set of the sun.
Brave Margery toileth.)

Say ye that her life was wasted,
All the joys of earth untasted?
Nay, each nature narrow-seeming
May with richest grace be teeming.
Ah! the angels knew her story
When she donned their robes of glory,
And beyond the hidden portal
Margery wears a crown immortal!
(The cream is unchurned, and the wool is unspun,
The cows all unmilked at the set of the sun.
Tired Margery resteth.)

A MISTAKE RECTIFIED.

It was a pleasant picture—the old kitchen, with its smooth, white floor, the rush-bottomed chairs ranged straight and stiff around the walls, the clock in the corner, the big, brass-handled bureau with a magnificently-colored tea-tray and a blue jug filled with roses occupying the place of honor thereon, the sunlight streaming in through the large windows and lying in broad bars on the table and floor; and last, but not least, the young girl in the open doorway.

She was sitting on the doorstep in the cool shadow of the great elms, and was busy with a heap of ruby-colored strawberries that she had just gathered in the rich meadow.

The old farm house seemed the abode of peace and contentment. No sounds broke the stillness of the June afternoon, save the loud ticking of the clock, and the contented purr of the old gray cat, that had lazily stretched itself in the broadest patch of sunshine in the middle of the floor.

The mistress of the house was absent; and so was her daughter, Miss Sallie Marshall. The young girl left in charge, Amy Ross, by name, was only Mr. Marshall's niece; and to say that she was a favorite of her aunt and cousin would be an exaggeration. Mrs. Marshall found her a great burden—though what form the burden assumed would have puzzled the good old lady to describe.

Cousin Sadie, too, was far from kind to the dependent orphan girl. Certainly, Amy was a burden and a trial to her aunt and cousin; and if this fact was not firmly impressed on Mr. Marshall's mind it was not from any failure on Mrs. Marshall's part to inform him of the state of the case.

When the young girl had finished hulling strawberries she set the dish upon the table and went over to the sink to wash her hands. While she was hopefully rubbing the crimson stains on her small, brown fingers, a man's footstep sounded outside, and the owner thereof looking in at the open door, said mischievously: "I hope I shall be invited to tea this evening—I am very fond of strawberry shortcake."

A wave of color mounted to the low, white forehead of the girl to whom this remark was addressed, but she answered, sedately: "I do not think Aunt Marshall will be home in time to invite you to tea to-night, Mr. Russell."

"Then I shall be under the painful necessity of inviting myself," and the handsome, careless, young fellow came in, tossed his straw hat aside, congratulated himself on Mrs. Marshall's absence, and did his best to make himself agreeable to the pretty, brown-haired girl he so much admired.

Word had been left with Amy that when her afternoon's work was finished, she was to sew on her Cousin Sadie's new muslin dress, so she obediently gathered up the pretty blue heap that was lying in the shut-up parlor, and brought it to her old favorite seat on the old kitchen doorstep.

After a while, with the touching effrontery men usually display when talking of women's apparel, Mr. Russell inquired: "What is that puckered up stuff for, Miss Amy?"

"If you can find no better way of speaking of my pretty knife-plaiting, Mr. Russell—"

"Oh, that is knife-plaiting, is it? How glad I am that I have found out. Now the study of fashion won't be such a dead letter to me, and when I read of so many rows of straight knife-plaiting, I shall straightway remember this picture."

Who can wonder after this remark a little silence should fall upon Amy, while Mr. Russell watched the tiny, brown hands so busy with the blue folds?

Feeling the dark eyes watching her, the girl said, presently: "You seem very much interested in this trimming, Mr. Russell."

The young man laughed.

"I am interested in it, Miss Amy, but I was not thinking of that, just now. Are you looking forward to the picnic next week?"

"No, for I am not going."

"Not going," echoed the young man. There was real disappointment in his voice. "I came to ask you to let me take you there."

"Thank you for the kind intention," answered Amy, quietly. "But I—I cannot go."

"You do not wish to go, you mean?"

The girl's cheeks flushed deeper. "I do not wish to go"—"under the circumstances," she added to herself.

"I am very sorry," said Mr. Russell, with an ominous light in his dark eyes. If he had said, "I am very angry," it would have been nearer the truth.

It was very still for a few minutes. Amy thought the clock ticked louder than she had ever heard it before.

I do not wonder that Miss Sadie found fault with the uneven plaits in the trimming for her new dress, for there was such a mist over Amy's eyes that it was well nigh impossible to form the tiny plaits at all. She worked on, however, not daring to look up, till Mr. Russell's footstep sounded on the floor, and with an exceedingly polite, "Good afternoon, Miss Ross," he left the house.

The girl's hands trembled so, now, that she stopped her work, and two great tears rolled down her cheeks.

'How could I tell him that I had nothing fit to wear to the picnic? How could he guess the reason I didn't wish to go? I couldn't go, and have every one laughing at the figure I should make in my old green and white gingham. If I could only have had a new dress like Sadie's—she has so many, and I— I—'

Amy Ross seldom cried; indeed, since she had arrived at the dignity of long dresses, no one had seen her shed tears; but she leaned her head on her hands and wept bitterly.

This was how her uncle found her. He was very fond of Amy. He continually forgot what a burden and trial she was, and saw only a fair-faced, hazel-eyed girl, who looked so much like his dead sister. He sat down beside her and asked, gently: 'What is the matter, Amy?'

The answer, given with girlish consistency, was: 'Nothing.'

'You must not tell me that, Amy—' the good-natured farmer spoke very gravely—'you do not cry for nothing. If it was Sadie, now, crying for a new dress, or hat, or some other folly, that answer might do.'

Amy looked up, resentfully. 'Why shouldn't I cry for something new and pretty, as well as Sadie? She can go to the picnic next week and enjoy herself, and I must stay at home because I have nothing fit to wear.'

'Why didn't you tell me you wanted a new dress, child?'

Amy stopped crying, and more consistently than before, said: 'I don't want a new dress—I should have no time to make it; and, besides, Aunt Marshall says I don't need one.'

'Well, well! We'll see about it. Don't cry any more, that's a good girl. See, it's most five o'clock.'

Amy sprang up quickly. 'I didn't think it was so late. I'll have supper ready as soon as possible.'

Everything was ready by the time Mrs. Marshall and Sadie returned for their afternoon's trip to the village, and the good lady sat comfortably down and, as was her custom, took pains to point out all the defects in Amy's cooking. The shortcake was not just right—it never was when Amy made it; the tea was not so strong as it should have been, and there was a suspicion of heaviness about the last baking of brown bread that was made the most of.

When Mr. Marshall had finished his supper he pushed back his chair and said concisely: 'I'm going down to the village, wife. You put on your hat, Amy, and go with me.'

'I can't spare Amy to-night,' spoke Mrs. Marshall's shrill tones. 'I've got a sight of work to do, and Sadie is going to sew on her new dress ——'

'Seems to me that Sadie spends most of her time sewing on new dresses,' said the old farmer, good naturedly. 'Amy is going to have a new dress, too, to wear to that picnic I've heard so much about—and I'm going to take her to get it.'

'Mr. Marshall!'—and the worthy partner of that gentleman's joys and sorrows faced him, holding a dish of cold beans in one hand and a plate of doughnuts in the other—'I s'pose Amy's been complaining about her clothes, but I consider that I'm the best judge about her dresses. She don't need a new dress to go to that picnic, and she ain't going to have one.'

'Amy,' said her uncle, 'didn't you hear me tell you to put your hat on—I'm in considerable of a hurry.'

Amy ran up stairs, a good deal more frightened than pleased. Her aunt would be so angry with her, and Sadie would be so disagreeable. Mr. Russell, too—she had refused to go with him—what would he think? She wished the hateful picnic had never been heard of.

She brushed her hair, however, and put on her hat as quickly as possible, and went down to find her aunt washing the dishes with a vigor that threatened to demolish the stout old willow-pattern plates.

Mr. Marshall had made what remarks he wished to make during her absence, and was waiting for her.

He did his best to be entertaining during the ride, but Amy was very quiet. Once she ventured to say that he had better not get a new dress for her, for, really, she did not care to go to the picnic; but all the notice her uncle took of the remark was to ask what she was going to wear on her head the eventful day.

'What hat do you mean, uncle? The one I have on, of course—I have no other.'

The simple-minded old gentleman turned and looked at it critically; a plain, black straw hat with a blue veil knotted around it.

'Wouldn't you like one of those broad-brimmed white things with a lot of stuff bunched upon the top of them—one something like Sadie's?' was his next question.

Amy could not help laughing at this description of the pretty tarlatan-covered sunhats she so much coveted; and as it is not in girl's nature to refuse a new hat, she soon found herself the possessor of a hat like Sadie's, only instead of the cluster of moss rosebuds that decorated Sadie's, a tiny spray of blue forget-me-nots nestled among the snowy folds of the one selected.

The dress was purchased, too, also a dainty necktie and pretty gloves; and if Amy's heart was sore and aching as she rode home in the still June evening, it was not her uncle's fault.

When the day of the picnic came, if it was not a happy girl who exhibited herself to Mr. Marshall's admiring eyes, it was a very pretty and happy-looking one. The folds of her blue and white dress fell gracefully around her, the braids of glossy brown hair were wound smoothly around her head, and the broad-brimmed hat shaded a sweet flushed face with dainty rose-bud mouth and dark-fringed hazel eyes.

Mr. Marshall drove the girls to the lake, thence to the island that lay in the midst of the still waters. There was no settled order of proceeding, but half a dozen boats, each capable of holding several persons, made as many trips as were necessary.

It was the very place for a picnic. The island was for the most part well wooded, and on one side, under the cool shade of the white birches, was as smooth and green a carpet as one need wish, whereon it was the custom to set tables and make tea and coffee.

Mr. Russell was astonished as well as angry when he saw Miss Ross. It was bad enough for her to have refused to come with him—this she had tacitly done—but afterward to come with some one else—he neither knew nor cared who the some one else was—was too much for his equanimity.

So, with becoming assiduity, he devoted himself to pretty Minnie Thorne, sat by her side under the cool shadow of the great trees, walked with her along the wide stretch of gravel that extended far out into the lake on one side of the island, bestowed upon her every attention he was capable of, and all the time he was thinking of Amy Ross—wondering why she had told him she did not wish to go to the picnic, and after all was there, looking so bright and happy.

And Amy, who was surrounded by admirers, for not one of whom she cared the smallest atom, saw the attention given to fair-haired, blue-eyed Minnie Thorne, by the dark-haired man who had looked so saucily at her in her uncle's kitchen only a week before, and wished herself back with Aunt Marshall, sewing, baking—anything to be out of the sight of the handsome couple who wandered about the island apparently so happy in each other's society.

The long afternoon wore away—till around, above, beneath the setting sun, were piled masses of gold and crimson clouds, tipped and barred with the clear rosy purple, seen only in the still loveliness of a summer sunset.

Then the company dispersed, and as the last rosy flash lingeringly died away from meadow, lake and wood, Amy reached her uncle's house—as unhappy a girl as ever returned from a picnic.

The kind-hearded old man asked immediately how she had enjoyed herself, and, with an aching heart, she was obliged to say that it had been a splendid picnic—a great success—and sitting on the porch in the summer gloaming, he thought how fortunate it was that he had found out about Amy's dress in time, and the child had been able to go to the picnic and enjoy herself.

Upstairs, Amy watched the stars come out one by one, and when she could no longer see them for the tears that dimmed her eyes, said to herself, bitterly: 'Why did uncle find me crying that afternoon? Why didn't I tell him I couldn't go to the picnic any way, after telling Mr. Russell that I did not wish to go. Poor uncle—he thinks I have had such a happy day.'

Mr. Russell went no more to the old farm house he had professed to find so pleasant; and when he occasionally met Miss Ross, had nothing beyond the merest commonplace remarks to say to her.

When the hot August sun had colored and ripened the great clusters of blackberries in the distant pastures, Mrs. Marshall, intent on the preparation of the blackberry jam she was famous for making, sent Amy one afternoon to fill a large tin pail with the ripened treasures.

Sadie Marshall did not go. She did not like to pick blackberries—the sun was so hot, and the great thorns on the bushes tore one's clothes and scratched one's hands so badly. Perhaps Amy would have echoed her cousin's objections, but her opinion on the subject was not asked—she was simply told to "put on her old brown print dress (anything was good enough to pick berries in), and try and fill her pail before supper time."

So she went alone to the big hill pasture, and when she had half-completed her allotted task, and had scratched her hands and arms, and torn her dress in orthodox style, she was startled at hearing footsteps near her, and looking up, saw Mr. Edward Russell coming carelessly toward her—his gun in his hand.

She paused in her efforts to reach a tall bush that displayed its rich, black clusters just over her head, hoping he would not see her; but his path lay directly by the clump of bushes close to which she was standing, and in an instant he was beside her—with a smile on his lips and a dull pain in his heart.

He had intended to speak to Amy Ross only in the form civility required, but this was different from meeting her in society, and he could not pass directly by and say nothing; so, suddenly he found himself talking to her in the old familiar fashion, and then he offered to help her pick berries.

This Amy declined; but Mr. Russell calmly laid his gun down on a grassy knoll, and saying, 'I am so much taller than you,' bent down the bush she had vainly endeavored to reach, and began leisurely to swell the contents of the pail beside him.

When he stooped down to place a large handful of berries therein, he caught sight of Amy's poor, little scratched hands—one of them with such a cruel mark across the back and up the wrist.

'How you have scratched your hands, Miss Amy!' he exclaimed, ruefully. 'Don't they pain you?'

She put her hands together, looked at them a moment, and said: "Being flesh and blood, my hands ache—one of them especially.'

Edward Russell stood for an instant undecided—those pitiful little hands were too much for his dignity—he took a step forward, placed his broad palm each side of the two little ones, folded them close together, and the first words the astonished girl heard were: 'I love you, Amy.'

She could not speak, and it was of no use to try and draw her hands away from him. He held them close while, taking the remark above quoted for a text, he gave a short discourse; and at its close, instead of asking if ever so small a portion could be returned, inquired: 'Why couldn't you go to the picnic with me?'

'I had nothing fit to wear,'—and there was one upward appealing glance—'I couldn't go—so different from everybody else—and—Aunt Marshall never thinks I need anything.'

Mr. Russell looked puzzled.

'But you went, Amy, and wore such a pretty dress and looked so bright and happy.'

Looking at the face beside him, the young man saw the lips quiver; then the sweet voice said, with a suspicious tremble in the low tones: 'Uncle Marshall gave me a new dress that same night after I told you I could not go, and I didn't dare tell him that I didn't wish to go then—but I wasn't happy at all—I—I—was as wretched as I could be.'

Mr. Russell mentally used some very strong language regarding himself and his stupidity, but aloud he asked calmly: 'What made you unhappy, Amy?'

It was not a very kind question for him to ask, and the one shy glance from the dark-fringed hazel eyes must have been more eloquent in its reproof than any spoken words could have been, for an instant after a strong arm was placed around the girl's slender waist, and a dark face close to her own whispered: 'Forgive me.'

There was no answer, but we infer that forgiveness was granted—for, two hours later, a happy couple walked down the long hill pastures and across the broad fields to Farmer Marshall's house, and the gentleman carried a well filled pail of blackberries.

A mistake that might have caused two people sorrow and heart ache all their lives long had been rectified.

Lent.

The sad, sweet lenten days
Are with us now.
Beneath the shadowed cross
The suppliants bow.

Then cast aside vain cares
And foolish fears;
Look up with faith; and dry
Your selfish tears.

Christ calls you now to choose
The better part,
To give to him in truth
Your wayward heart.

And while the fast you keep
With daily prayer,
He holds your troubled soul
In loving care.

WHAT THE CHINAMAN SAID ABOUT THE CHINA BOY.

In a fit of desperation, I went the other day into Chinatown, (New York city,) which is another name for the lower end of Mott street, in search of a servant. I didn't find a servant, but I found still another world growing up in the New York cosmos. Chinese grocery stores, Chinese laundries, Chinese opium dens, and a Chinese temple, opened their doors for me. I went into one of the groceries, and a grave and reverend Chinaman who looked as if he had the wisdom of the centuries and the concentrated cunning of a thousand foxes twisted up in his pigtail eyed me from behind round goggles, and asked me my errand.

'I want a servant.'

'You want a China boy?'

'Yes.'

'You want China boy for do cookee?'

'Yes; and anything else he's asked to do.'

'How much you give?'

'Whatever is right.'

That phrase seemed to please him. His eyes twinkled, and he continued:

'I get you China boy—you pay him thirty dollar month.'

'Too much.'

'You no pay him thirty dollar month? Why not? You pay Mellican girl fifteen dollar month. One China boy worth two Mellican girl. Mellican girl put hair in pie. China boy no put hair in pie. Mellican girl she make man come into your house. China boy he no make man come into your house. You pay Mellican girl fifteen dollar month, she eat twenty dollar month; you pay China boy thirty dollar month, he eat four dollar month. You pay Mellican girl fifteen dollar month, and Mellican girl boss. You pay China boy thirty dollar month, and you boss. You all glad pay China boy thirty dollar month by-and-by. China boy ask forty dollar month then.'

'Old man,' I said sadly, 'you are right; it is worth fifteen dollars a month to be boss in your own house, but I can't afford the luxury,' and I turned away. As I lifted the latch of the door the animated old idol said oracularly:

'You come again, some day, sure. When all dishes broke you come back for China boy. China boy cheap for thirty dollar month.'—Cor. Boston Traveller.

Moribund husband (to æsthetic wife)—"Well, Jennie, the doctor says I must soon leave you. Do not grieve; I have provided handsomely for you in my will. You will keep my memory green, won't you, my love?" Æsthetic wife (sobbing)—"Dearest, I will; and I will see that your grave is kept green, also (reflectingly), but not one of those horrid bright colors. A nice, olive-gray green, with an old gold tombstone, will look too awfully lovely for anything."

SOME DOCTORS.

What can create more aversion in a liberal minded man than to see two doctors of different schools of medicine meet in society or on the street? When one hod-carrier meets another, he extends his hand with warm sympathy, and his eyes glisten with pleasure as he grasps the hand of the other; every pulsation of their hearts beat in unison, and each inquires after the health and prosperity of the other and that of his family. If two merchants meet, it is with a cordiality that is pleasant to look upon. When two lawyers meet, no matter how antagonistic they may have been the previous day in arguing their cases, they slap each other on the back, and immediately adjourn to take something,—a clove possibly. If a farmer, a mechanic or any one on the face of the earth but a doctor meets his competitor, he does it with a whole-souled greeting that makes the heart glad, and creates a glow in the breast that warms and purifies life and leaves a bright spot to shine and make happy. But when doctors of different schools meet, how changed! The sight chills to the "marrow," it freezes the blood, and causes a thunder cloud to settle over the place, that fills the atmosphere with night. Why is this, and from whence does it arise? The cause is jealousy. It has now come to pass that a medical man cannot meet another of an opposite school, without showing some ungentlemanly acts, or making some remarks, or casting some insinuating slurs which are calculated to cut like a two-edged sword. Possibly he may ignore him entirely, or pass him by as if he did not exist. Perhaps he may bestow on him a cold bow,—about the same kind that he would on a tramp, or, last but not least, recognize him in such a way that the recipient feels as though he would like to kick him into the future state. Again, if the second doctor is called to see a case that the other has been attending, how he will open his vials of wrath and pour more poison into the ears of the patient and friends than he could pack into his medicine case in a month. No matter whether the case has been correctly diagnosticated or not, he will disagree, and will inform the patient that he has escaped death merely by the accident of calling him. He gives the patient to understand that if he had delayed a little longer, the black winged messenger would have "swooped" down, and thrown him over the ramparts into the great Unknown; or if he had been called sooner the case would not have assumed the gigantic proportions that it already had; "but where people will submit to quackery or ignorance they must take the consequences and suffer."

Poor doctors, can you not see that all these disgusting actions are witnessed with contempt and ridicule by your fellow men? Have you any idea that it will enhance your fame as a good and wise physician, or will glorify you in the eyes of the world? If we expect to keep the profession up to a high standard of excellence, to ennoble it and to show to the world that physicians are a little superior to even the higher ranks of mankind, we must do so in our gentlemanly bearings to each other and to all. We must treat men as men, no matter what their varied beliefs, and remember that God has given them the same reasoning faculties that He has given us, and perhaps of a little better quality.

This sentiment of intolerance receives its first impetus from our medical schools. I can remember, years ago, when I was a student (for I am an old man now, old enough to give advice) there was hardly a day passed that some slur was not thrown out by some of the teachers against all schools of medicine and all practitioners, but those of their own "stripe." They endeavored to instill prejudice so strongly in the minds of the young, and succeeded so well, that when we went forth to practice medicine, we hated all who believed differently from ourselves. What a state of things! What men and gentlemen it made of us! The "perspiration of indignation" stands so thickly on my brow that I weaken; so I will close by adding that this paper is not intended for all. There are many grand exceptions. Try on the garment and see how it fits.—Dr. Snow, in Investigator.

REASONS FOR VOTING NO.

The statutes of this Commonwealth declare all tenements and places used for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors common nuisances. A common nuisance is that which is hurtful or injurious to the public. To license a nuisance cannot change it's inherent and essential character, or render it less hurtful. It should be noted that it is the business that makes the place or tenement a nuisance—the statute is only declaratory; it does not create, but only defines the nuisance.

I do not think the law should grant to any person the right to maintain, for his own private gain, a common nuisance.

The prison commissioners of this state say in their report of 1880 that 94 out of every 100 persons committed to all the prisons of the state during the year were intemperate, and that the cost to the state was $1,971,198. This was not an exceptional year. The liquor traffic imposes in the form of costs for criminal prosecutions and the support of criminals, an annual tax of nearly $2,000,000 upon the honest and productive industry of this Commonwealth; and this is but a small part of the whole cost to the state resulting from that traffic.

From observations and careful computation it has been estimated that during the twenty years prior to 1879 there were 485,890 sentences pronounced in the courts of this state for crimes occasioned by the use of intoxicating liquors. I do not think a traffic which furnishes the means of converting a half million of our fellow-citizens into criminals every twenty years should either be licensed or tolerated.

These, among many others, are reasons why every voter should deposit in the ballot-box an emphatic "No!" to all applicants for a license to prosecute this disastrous traffic.—Judge Aldrich.

Dr. William Goodall, of the University of Pennsylvania, performed a very remarkable operation recently, in the presence of physicians and students. He removed an ovarian tumor weighing 112 pounds from a woman, aged 31, the mother of three children. When the tumor had been removed the woman weighed only seventy-five pounds, so Dr. Goodall said, "Instead of taking the tumor away from the woman I took the woman away from the tumor." It is believed that the woman will survive the operation.

Lent ought to pass very rapidiy—there are so many fast days in it.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 18, 1882.

INTELLIGENCE was received on Tuesday of a terrible earthquake in Costa Rica, which destroyed four towns and several thousand lives. Later advices, however, indicate that the first reports were grossly exaggerated.

The anti-polygamy bill was passed by the House at Washington, Tuesday, by a vote of 199 to 42. The President will unquestionably sign it, and if the government will take hold of the matter as it should, the polygamists will soon be quaking in their boots. But they will not yield without a bitter struggle.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR on Monday nominated Judge Blatchford of New York for associate justice of the United States supreme court, after tendering the position to Senator Edmunds in vain. Judge Blatchford is 62 years old, and is pre-eminently fitted for the position to which he has been called. Had President Arthur nominated him in the first place, instead of Conkling, he would have saved himself a wretched blunder; but the country will not treasure it up against him, now that he has put himself right.

UNDER the new apportionment Massachusetts is entitled to 12 Congressmen, instead of 11. The western districts will probably remain as at present, but the Republican State Committee are in favor of a plan for fixing up the districts, in the eastern part of the State in such a way that the Republicans will secure the entire delegation, instead of there being one Democrat as at present. We hardly believe the Legislature will approve this gerrymandering project, however. Such birds always come home to roost sooner or later.

JAY GOULD has been so bothered of late by a fear lest people should think he was not the wealthiest man in the country, next to Vanderbilt, that he took a few friends into his office the other day and exhibited to them securities owned by him to the amount of $53,000,000. Gould seems to have forgotten the misfortunes which followed a similar exhibition of treasures by King Hezekiah of old. It was a foolish display. No country editor in the world would be so weak as to make such a show of his hoarded millions, even to his warmest friends.

THE State Senate has passed the resolve for a constitutional amendment providing for biennial elections, this week, and the House has passed the prohibitory law. The House has also engrossed and sent to the Senate the bill providing for the sale of the Commonwealth's stock in the Boston & Albany Railroad. The Senate judiciary committee has reported a bill restoring the salaries of the justices on the supreme bench to the sums paid before the retrenchment of 1879. The committee on public health wants a law passed providing that no corpse shall be buried at a depth of less than four feet below the surface of the ground.

SERGEANT MASON, who tried to shoot Guiteau in his cell last September, has been sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the army, with loss of all pay and allowances, and to be confined at hard labor in prison for eight years. The sentence is severe, but none too much so. His mad act was a crime of more than ordinary magnitude, inasmuch as he was a sworn guardian of the law he so flagrantly violated. Army discipline would soon disappear if such acts were to go unpunished. And yet, many people who ought to know better are already taking steps to procure a pardon for him. The Ohio Legislature has gone so far as to ask the President to pardon and restore him to his rank, and petitions for his pardon are to be circulated in various parts of the country. Law-abiding citizens can hardly afford to lend their influence in favor of such a premium for lawbreaking.

IT is not a pleasant spectacle to see men attacking the reputation of the honored dead, whose voices are forever silent in the grave, and can utter no word of defense. But the publication of a 20-years-old private letter of Gen. Garfield, in which he criticised the inactivity of his commander, Gen. Rosecrans, has started his enemies out in full force, and they are defaming him with a malignity never equaled while he was living. As a specimen of their malevolence, we give the following extract from an article in a Washington paper, written by "a prominent Republican," it is claimed:

> Garfield was a treacherous, a cowardly, a hypocritical man, selfish to the extreme and not caring what happened, so it did not happen to himself. General Rosecrans was and is worth more to this country than a thousand Garfields. . . . It is high time, for the sake of our national common sense, the truth of history, and justice alike to the living and the dead, that all this gush over Garfield should end. Millions of better and of greater men have lived and died. . . . He was nothing but a professional office-seeker and professional politician. A failure as a preacher and lawyer, he learned to string words together as a child does beads, and that was his stock in trade. No one can point to an original thought he ever uttered. He betrayed John Sherman at Chicago as treacherously as Brutus did Cæsar or Judas did Christ.

Small-pox of a virulent type has spread in Bethlehem, Pa., since Sunday, with remarkable rapidity. On Sunday only three cases were known to exist, and on Tuesday one hundred existed in a cleanly portion of the town, among those who for the most part had not been vaccinated.

Michael McCaffrie, a "cured" lunatic living near Waterbury, Vt., and who was discharged from the Brattleboro asylum several months ago, on Sunday night last murdered his wife and his mother.

Frank Wolcott, aged 21, of Agawam, was fatally shot while gunning on Saturday, because he drew his gun toward him by the muzzle.

The Catskill (N. Y.) steamboat company propose to put on a line of steamers between New York and Hartford this spring.

The Boston & Albany Railroad delivered to the New York Central at Albany last month 11,735 and received 11,254 freight cars.

B. B. Adams of Boston, formerly agent of the B. & A. railroad in this place, has recently been appointed a justice of the peace.

Daniel Manning, a crazy man, a stranger in the place, was sent to the Worcester asylum on Wednesday by the district court.

The trot arranged a while ago between A. J. Northrop's and A. H. Tanner's horses is "off," and the stakes have been withdrawn.

Louis E. Chandler, of the JOURNAL office, started on Thursday evening for a month's visit with friends at Rockford, Ill., his old home.

The auction sale of the Marshall place, corner of Pleasant and Walnut streets, will take place next Tuesday afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

Ex-Sheriff Geo. W. Randall is attending to business once more, after being confined to the house some weeks by a sharp attack of rheumatism.

Day and night had a pretty even thing of it yesterday, the former being only one minute ahead, but Old Sol is increasing the difference every day, now.

Fully nine-tenths of the poverty in the country is due to intemperance, to say nothing of the crime traceable to the same source. Let voters remember this next Monday.

Mr. Danforth opened his new and neat restaurant on Central street this week, and on Wednesday evening entertained about a hundred friends with a free clam chowder.

Rev. E. A. Perry, the new pastor of the Universalist church, has engaged the Connor house on Central street, which he will occupy as soon as it is vacated by Mr. Sanderson.

Congressman George D. Robinson of this district has agricultural reports for distribution, and will send copies to such farmers in his district as make request therefor by postal card.

The selectmen will be at the town house this (Saturday) afternoon, from 2 to 5 o'clock, and at Mr. Murdock's store in Thorndike from 5 to 10 o'clock, for the purpose of revising the voters' list.

It is reported that the new fast train which there is talk of putting on between New York and Boston about June 1 will be a limited express, the train consisting of one baggage and four drawing-room cars.

Is it to be license or no license this year? A large majority of the towns in the State have voted against licensing the sale of liquor the coming year, and we would be glad to see Palmer fall in on the same side.

The ladies of the Methodist society at Four Corners will hold a festival at the town hall next Tuesday evening, serving a hot turkey and chicken pie supper, with ice cream, cake and other good things. Free teams will be run from the villages.

The entertainment by the Palmer Dramatic Club Thursday evening drew out a crowded house, as this club always does. The costumes were quite elegant, and the actors performed their parts with their usual excellence, to the satisfaction of all.

A couple of teams collided on North Main street Thursday evening. Joseph Castine of this place was in one wagon, and the other one contained a French couple from Three Rivers, both of whom were thrown out, and the lady's shoulder was somewhat injured, but not seriously. Both wagons were considerably crippled.

The fourth and last Farmers' Institute of the season will be held at Weeks Hall next Tuesday at 10 o'clock a. m., for the discussion of "Fertilizers and their application to crops." It is hoped that there will be a large attendance of farmers in this section, in order that there may be a wide and general interchange of views and experiences in the use of fertilizers.

The masquerade skating party announced recently by Manager Hitchcock of the roller skating rink will come off at Wales Hall next Monday evening. There will be skating in the afternoon, and in the evening none but those who are masked will be allowed to skate until after 9 o'clock. The Palmer Cornet Band will be present in the evening, and a "jolly good" time is expected.

A subscriber to the JOURNAL in Somersville, Ct., Mr. George A. Converse, writes us as follows: "Speaking of hens, the writer has one that has laid a dozen very large eggs (two yolks) the past year, and not long since laid one that measured 8 1-4 x 6 3-4 inches, weighed 5 ounces, and had three good sized yolks. If there are any hens in your vicinity that can beat it, presume my hen will try again."

Rev. A. F. Newton of Townsend has declined his call to the pastorate of the Congregational church in this place, much to the regret of many in the church and society who felt that he was just the man the church needed. It is currently reported that a leading member of the church, who was opposed to his coming here, sent Mr. Newton a long and sharp letter, threatening to make him all the trouble possible if he accepted the call.

The Boston & Albany Railroad is trying in some of its cars Salmon's hot water heater, which is claimed to be superior to the heaters now in use, in several respects. The fire-pot is a cylinder of boiler iron, with the openings securely locked, and it is expected that the fire would be kept safely inclosed in any ordinary accident, while if the cylinder is broken the surrounding water will put out the fire. It is a self-feeder, has an automatic draft regulator, and is claimed to have a very rapid circulation.

As will be seen by an advertisement in another column, Wm. Jarman, an ex-Mormon priest, will next Tuesday evening give an illustrated lecture at Wales Hall on Mormonism, a subject on which the people are just waking up, and a foul evil which will soon be wiped out when they once fully comprehend its abominations. Mr. Jarman comes highly recommended as a speaker, thoroughly conversant with the inner workings of the Mormon system, while his pictures are said to be unusually fine, vividly illustrating his thrilling and instructive story. Our citizens should not miss the opportunity to hear him.

The treasurer of the Young Men's Library Association has received the past year $661.13, including the balance of $96.75 on hand at the beginning of the year. Of this sum $500 was received from the town, $52 from fines and catalogues, and $12.38 from membership fees, etc. The expenses were: For books, $207.77; magazines, $26.70; binding, $39.92; librarians, $117; insurance, etc., $31.65; total, $423.04, leaving a balance on hand of $238.09. There have been about 350 new books added to the library the past year, and the whole number of volumes in circulation during the year was 13,500. Over 2600 volumes were drawn for circulation in Bondsville alone, more books being read there than at either Thorndike or Three Rivers.

Yesterday's Springfield Republican says under its Palmer items: "There are reports that an ex-member of the school board has overdrawn his account and that other irregularities exist, and the matter is to be investigated." The facts in the case seem to be as follows: Last year the town voted $300 for salaries of school committee, making $100 for each member. The amounts drawn by Rev. Mr. Fullerton and by Mr. Gates, who succeeded him on the committee, exceed this sum by $20. But the law says that the members of the school committee shall be paid $2.50 per day, and whether the town votes $100 or nothing makes little difference, as the committee can collect pay at this rate. There will not therefore be much of an investigation of this point, probably.

The report of the school committee shows the following expenses for the past year: Teachers' salaries, $7999; fuel, $618; care of houses, $401; general repairs, $503; miscellaneous contingent, $1132; addition to and remodeling school house in this village, $3713; total, $14,368, or $367 in excess of the school funds. There is due the town $73 for tuition of scholars from other towns. The number of scholars in town May 1, 1881, between the ages of 5 and 15, was 1097; enrolled during the year in all the schools, 1177; average membership, 835; average attendance, 750, this being 19 less than the average attendance during the previous year. The committee recommend these appropriations for the ensuing year: Teachers, fuel and care of houses, $10,000; general repairs, $900; contingencies, $900. The committee find the attendance very irregular in the factory villages, an evil which can only be remedied by constant watchfulness and care. They say more school room is necessary at Bondsville, as well as at Three Rivers. In speaking of the need of more room at Three Rivers, they "lay themselves out" in a way to make interesting reading for the voters. One member of the committee, Mr. Strong, dissents from this part of the report, as very likely some some others will, but there is clearly need of better accommodations for the children of that village, and if Chairman Ruggles, after speaking from the fullness of his heart, finds the voters ready to do what is necessary in that line, he will doubtless be fully satisfied.

There has been talk of holding a citizens' caucus to nominate a list of town officers to be voted on next Monday, but it has seemingly fallen through, and there will doubtless be half a dozen or more tickets in the field. This will give voters a chance to pick out and vote for "the best"—a privilege they should exercise to the fullest extent. The present board of selectmen have done well the past year, and deserve a re-election. There are several aspirants for their positions, however, and in addition to the names mentioned last week as probable candidates may be added those of A. L. Haynes and E. G. Hastings. The school committee question is likely to develop the most interest, as well as numerous candidates. Dr. Ruggles has some sharp corners about him which have made him a number of enemies, in spite of his numerous good qualities, and there are likely to be several candidates for his place. Mr. Buell of Three Rivers declines to be a candidate, and some of the people there propose to run our representative, Dr. Wm. Holbrook, who is an admirable school committee man. Col. H. R. Stoughton of this place has also been induced to enter the field, and if he should take hold of school matters as ably as he does of his railroad duties, he would be a capital man for the place. There will be some objection to both these gentlemen in other parts of the town, on account of locality, and many Thorndike people will make a strong push for a member from their village. It is understood that Geo. A. Murdock and Rev. Mr. Ricketts will both be in the field; while Mr. Gates is inclined to withdraw his name as a candidate against them.

OUR SCHOOLS.

Editor of the Journal:—The present chairman of the committee on schools, by the exercise of that aggressive personality which has made him so long conspicuous as an element of discord in town affairs, having refused the usual courtesy to associate members of the committee as regards the expression of their views in the school report, a few impartial statements and suggestions as to the real condition of our schools may be desirable. While some of our schools are excellent, taken as a whole, there is considerable room for improvement. There is need of a more careful supervision and of greater care in the selection of teachers, and of a better understanding and harmony upon the part of the committee in regard to the object which all schools should in common aim to attain. The policy of all of the schools should be shaped in accordance with common grounds of agreement. The caprice of individual members of the committee ought not to govern particular schools. Such an important matter as the increase of the salaries of the principals of our different schools should properly be voted at regular meetings of the committee, as has always been customary in this and other towns. Good teachers are worthy of any pay they may receive, but the increase of the salary of certain teachers by the present chairman, without referring to the subject at any meeting of the committee during the past year, has certainly caused injustice to equally worthy teachers of the same grade.

Two new school rooms are at present needed at Three Rivers. There has been no serious opposition in town of late years to adequate and ample accommodations for our schools. A special pride is felt by every one in this beautiful village with its present and promising prosperity. A difference of opinion has existed at Three Rivers as to the best plan to increase school accommodations, and to this fact, and to the unreasonable and persistent effort of one man to advance his particular projects against the will of a majority, may be attributed the refusal of the town to act with its usual promptitude at different town meetings, and not to the lack of an earnest desire of the citizens of the town to supply the best of school accommodations.

The high school, now in charge of Frank W. Whitney, a graduate of Boston University, and an experienced teacher, promises to attain satisfactory results. The course of study has been rearranged and the number of classes have been reduced. The objective principle now is to make the school of the greatest practical importance to the greatest number of pupils. A growing popular interest in the school and a cordial cooperation on the part of citizens from all portions of the town with the teacher and the committee cannot fail to make the school a success, and to cause a resulting beneficial influence to be experienced in the town. Those who consider the matter carefully will readily see that it is not good policy to send their children out of town to be educated, if they can receive as good educational advantages at home. The difficulties in the way of a good high school are more apparent than real, and can easily be overcome.

A MEMBER OF THE SCHOOL COMMITTEE.

WALES.

A man with a feather bed renovator is in town, cleaning and renovating beds, mattresses, etc.

A lecture on Mormonism at Monson next Monday night promises to be worthy a liberal attendance from this town. See advertisement.

Mrs. M. M. Myers has a curiosity in a beautiful Hartz mountain canary bird, which will render the most exquisite melody after the lamps are lighted in the room where his cage is hung.

THREE RIVERS.

James Rosbottom has sold a building lot in this village to Willard Kenerson.

The Amidon farm on the Belchertown road has been sold by James K. Snow to Daniel Hartnett, for $3500.

The Canadian amateur dramatic club of this place will present the 3-act drama "L'Expiation" and the comedy "Le Retour des Colonies" in the Baptist vestry this evening. This is the first time an entertainment has ever been given here in French, and it will be quite a treat for our Canadian citizens.

THORNDIKE.

Rev. A. C. Manson, of Bondsville, occupies the pulpit of the Congregational church tomorrow by exchange.

An unusually large number of persons in this village are sick at present, and the physicians seem to flourish.

Workmen are clearing away the debris from the ruins of the Thorndike Company's barns, preparatory to rebuilding.

A neighborhood party was held at Myron Bartlett's Tuesday afternoon and evening. Between forty and fifty were present, several being detained by sickness.

The card system of benevolence has been introduced at the Congregational church. By this means a contribution is taken up weekly for the object stated on the card.

WILBRAHAM.

The Farmers' Club will meet with E. H. Brewer Monday evening.

The spring term of Wesleyan Academy commences next Wednesday.

The Quadrangle was entertained by Miss Clara Markham Thursday afternoon. The next meeting will be with Miss Fannie Merrick.

Mrs. Henry Dewey has an apple blossom geranium which rejoices the hearts of all beholders by over a hundred clusters of buds and blossoms.

At the parish meeting of the Congregational church Monday the following officers were elected: Moderator, H. M. Bliss; parish committee and assessors, Deacon Knowlton, O. K. Ladd, John Speight; clerk, H. M. Bliss; treasurer, Dr. S. Foskitt; auditor, F. E. Clark; parish loan committee, Ira G. Potter; committee to rent and appraise slips, the parish committee, C. E. Peck, J. L. S. Wesson; collector, D. M. Haven.

HAMPDEN.

Deputy Sheriff Spellman of this place will probably take charge of the jail at Springfield at the close of this month, as Jailer Bradley is anxious to get on to his farm as soon as he can. The Springfield Republican compliments Mr. Spellman after this fashion: "He has proved an ornate and rather striking figure in the court room since he became crier four years ago, and a good many frequenters of the place will be sorry that so cheery and well-meaning a man is to be shut up in jail as soon as the present term ends. He enjoys the new distinction of having several times received the commendation of the late chief justice of our supreme court for the way in which he performed his duties, and the court official whom Horace Gray deigned to praise may feel proud of the fact. There was something about the heartiness with which Mr. Spellman pronounced 'God save the commonwealth of Massachusetts' that went straight to the heart of that leading jurist of his time, who has now gone to Washington to make both the bench and bar of the supreme court of the nation quake in their boots, as it were. It is quite likely that the mantle of court crier will fall on Sheriff Lewis."

MONSON.

Martha A. Fisk was appointed administrator on the estate of Edwin J. Fisk of this town, at an adjourned session of the probate court on Thursday.

The following scholars were perfect in attendance during the winter term in district No. 6: Lora Webber, Minnie Webber, Mary Walker, Eliza Walker, Enos Upham, Harry Graves.

The class of '82 are to give an entertainment at the academy hall next Wednesday evening, consisting of the drama "The Flower of the Family" and the comedy "A Thorn Among the Roses." Music will be furnished by the Arion Club Orchestra of Springfield.

Mr. Wm. Jarman, for twelve years a Mormon elder and priest in Salt Lake City, will deliver his thrilling lecture on Mormonism at Central Hall, March 20. He will appear in his priestly robe, illustrating his subject by calcium lights and exhibiting curious relics of Mormonism. A life among the Latter Day Saints qualifies Mr. Jarman to truthfully portray this gigantic evil. The press and clergy give him the highest commendation. See advertisement in another column.

WARREN.

The musical association will probably adjourn their rehearsals till fall.

Dr. J. W. Hastings has sold his land on Crescent street to James Hill.

Miss Hattie Tyler has a number of pupils here in painting, also a class in Spencer.

Mrs. Morgan has disposed of her stock of millinery goods to parties from Springfield.

Mrs. Margaret Campbell spoke on woman suffrage at Brigham's hall Thursday evening.

The Sabbath school of the Congregational church are preparing for a concert Easter evening.

Otto Roloff & Co. of Springfield are frescoing the Methodist church, also the residence of Mr. Strickland.

The Sons of Temperance gave an entertainment and supper in Grand Army Hall Thursday evening.

The young ladies of the Catholic church gave an apron and rosette party at the town hall Friday evening.

Rev. Washington Gladden delivered the fifth lecture in the course Tuesday evening. Subject, "Best Society." The last lecture in the course will be by Rev. Mr. Hamilton Monday evening.

Mrs. Richardson has presented the public library four volumes of "History of Music," from the earliest ages to the present time. There was an exhibition of fancy skating at the rink Friday evening, by a gentleman from Springfield and a lady from Worcester.

LUDLOW.

The following town officers were elected at Monday's town meeting: Clerk and treasurer, Warren D. Fuller; selectmen, Benjamin F. Burr, Charles F. Grosvenor, Franklin Bramble; assessors, Henry S. Jones, Austin F. Nash, E. E. Fuller; school committee for three years, James Haviland. Appropriations: Schools, $2400; poor, $1500; highways and bridges, $1000; town charges, $1200; town debt, $1000.

The first parish held its annual meeting last week Monday. G. D. Atchinson was chosen moderator, Charles F. Jones clerk, treasurer and collector, Deacon G. R. Clark, C. L. Buell and Lucien N. Lyon parish committee. It was voted to hold but one preaching service a day during the ensuing year. The treasurer's report showed a balance against the parish of something over $38. Letters were read from several applicants, but the supply of the pulpit was left with the parish committee.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Whitmore & Clark's minstrels hold forth in Wight's Hall Monday night.

The ladies' benevolent society met at Mrs. A. H. Howland's Wednesday afternoon and evening.

Edward Richmond, for about three years clerk in Chapman's drug store, has gone to New Britain, Conn., as clerk in a drug store there.

The reading room is having a decidedly good effect, and if twice as large a room were to be occupied for it, there would be a full house.

Halford & Miller have put in a new office in their hardware store, and have engaged E. C. Macier, late clerk in E. J. Tatrault's grocery store, as bookkeeper and clerk.

Fred L. Lane, who was married last week to Miss Nellie Waid, has returned from a brief wedding trip to Albany, and the happy pair are quartered at the National House, where the boys can smoke cigars at the expense of Fred.

Mr. Braman and Peter St. John, Jr., were to run a race on Main street Monday, but Mr. Braman backed out, and then St. John was run by Thomas Clifford. The latter fell, however, and so lost the race. Another race may come off this evening.

James H. Losee, foreman of hose company No. 5, and clerk in the post office, went to Attleboro to visit the firemen of that city last week, and when he came home was the possessor of an elegant gold watch chain, ring and pin, presents from the firemen.

BRIMFIELD.

J. W. Draper of Fiskdale has sold his saw mill, grist mill, box shop and other property south of the river at East Brimfield, to a party at Chicopee, who has taken possession, or will soon.

As the result of the efforts of the young people of the First Congregational church, they have secured a fine George Woods & Co. organ, with pedal attachment, for the audience room of the church. Two hundred dollars of the cost is a gift from Mrs. W. H. Wilkinson of Springfield, a native of this place, the balance coming from the proceeds of concerts and other entertainments the past winter.

One of our town officials who lives within walking distance of the post office, having been engaged during the day in looking over town accounts for the purpose of making out the annual report, returned home at night and went to his barn to do his usual farm chores. When he came to the horse stall he found the horse gone. Thinking his wife had let some of his neighbors have it, he took no further notice of its absence. Afterwards he recollected that he rode to town, and left his team at the shed, and retracing his steps he found his team where he left it, all right. The joke was too good to keep.

Perhaps the sale of mill property at East Brimfield, recorded above, led to great expectations in the minds of the residents there. A few days afterwards a well-appearing man called upon a widow lady at the village, and informed her that the mortgagees of the factory property on the north of the river had bought all other rights in the property, and leased it to parties at Chicopee for 10 years, who proposed to engage in the manufacture or army blankets. He was to have charge of the manufactory, and had been recommended to her for board. He was cheerfully given entertainment for the night, and the news of the proposed change was duly announced, and traveled with the usual speed. In the morning the man said he was going down to the mill to take some measurements, and he has not been seen since, and the widow is minus a supper, breakfast and lodging.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Lucy M. Gould has sold her Hardwick farm to Joseph L. Paige for $500.

Crusade lodge of Good Templars have been invited to assist their deputy and Mrs. Sarah A. Leonard, Grand Secretary, to organize a lodge next Monday evening at Barre.

It is stated for a fact that for more than 35 years no board of selectmen, nor any individual member of the board, has been known to sign a complaint against any liquor seller.

It is with regret we have learned that E. H. Vaughan has resigned his position as principal of the grammar school, where he has been the past five years. He has accepted a situation with the Mass. Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Springfield.

Although Dr. Reynolds canceled his engagement to lecture in town this week, we have had several good addresses. That of Rev. Dr. Ela of Springfield on Tuesday night was a strong prohibitory plea, and was well listened to by the audience.

Thomas Naylor, Jr., who has been employed by the Otis Co. for the past eight years, closed his labors last Saturday evening, and was presented by his friends with a valuable gold watch and chain. He leaves to attend a business college in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and has the best wishes of his friends for his future success.

The Dominican fathers opened a mission at St. Williams church Sunday morning. They are eloquent speakers, and on Sunday fell into line on the temperance question. Their hours of service this week have been at 5 and 8.30 a. m., and 7.30 p. m. Crowded houses at all the services have been the rule. The mission closes to-night.

On Sunday morning last the store of Wm. F. Coney was for the second time broken into. Entrance was made through the basement door, which was stove in. Cigars, candy and fruit were taken. This was between the hours of 9 and 11 a. m. On Monday night J. B. Green's store was entered, evidently from the method of entrance by the same parties, and the sum of three cents found. It is about time that some way was taken to rid our town of this gang of thieves. An officer the other day said they hung together too well to ever prove anything against them. Let our selectmen offer a reward large enough to secure the services of first-class detectives, and then see if conviction cannot be obtained. We find no fault with our local officers, but outsiders can here do more than home talent.

FIRES.—Goodrich & Co's. large carriage factory at New Haven, Ct., was destroyed by fire last week Friday night. Loss $60,000.

——Two summer hotels, the Highland and Sea View houses, at Biddeford Pool, Me., were burned Monday. Loss $90,000.

For artistic posing of the sitters, Hardy's studio, 310 Main street, Springfield, has a very fine reputation. You ought to see some of the work done there.

E. Brigham & Son, Springfield, report a big rush on custom orders for spring suits and overcoats, and say that those who haven't yet ordered should call early before the rush becomes still greater.

SHILOH'S CURE WILL immediately relieve croup, whooping cough and bronchitis. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

We always take pleasure in doing our patrons a favor. This week we do it by calling their attention to a chance where they can earn good wages and have all expenses paid. Read the "ad." of D. F. Attwood & Co., in another column.

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY—a positive cure for Catarrh, Diphtheria and Canker Mouth. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

COLORED SILKS.—W. L. Barnard & Co., 370 Main street, Springfield, would call especial attention to one lot of 50 pieces silk at three-quarters their value. This they guarantee to be the greatest bargains in silks ever offered in Springfield, and every lady intending to purchase a silk this season should not fail to examine them before the line of colors is broken.

FOR DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

The color and lustre of youth are restored to faded or gray hair by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, a harmless dressing highly esteemed for its perfume and purity. m

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

It is useless to deny that the brightest and fairest fall easy victims to consumption, and equally fruitless to ignore the fact that decline has its origin in many cases in neglected catarrh. Sanford's Radical cure is a pure, sweet, balsamic specific. m

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Death to rats, mice, roaches and ants—PARSON'S EXTERMINATOR. Barns, granaries and households cleared in a single night. No fear of bad smells. Best and cheapest vermin killer in the world. sold everywhere. m

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

We have seen the new Fulton Gravity scales sold by M. C. Stebbins & Co. These scales have no spring or adjustable weights. They are accurate, very convenient and durable. They are always ready so that you have only to lay the article to be weighed upon the scale pan and the weight is at once and exactly indicated. It is just the thing for office tables, for housekeepers, grocers, druggists, etc. Send for circular to M. C. Stebbins & Co., dealers in books, stationery, etc., 422 Main street, Springfield, Mass.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER.—For the three-fold purpose, 1st of testing the value of advertising, 2d to close our rubber goods out clean, and 3d to give additional interest to our "Great Spring clearing out sale of boots and shoes," we make the following proposition, good any time this month: To any one who will bring us a paper containing this notice, we will sell one or more pairs of men's best pure gum boots for $3.25; one or more pairs of men's 2d quality pure gum boots, $2.90; one or more pairs of men's rubber lined boots, $3.25; one or more pairs of men's common rubber boots bright finish, $2.25; boys' rubber boots, $1.50; misses' rubber boots, $1.25; men's best quality F wide sandal rubbers, 55 cents; women's best quality F wide sandal rubbers, 40 cents; men's best buckle Arctics, (Wales) $1.25. Remember, bring the paper. Come this month, and the terms are cash down every time. O. D. Morse, "Central Shoe Store," Springfield.

WHY WILL YOU cough when Shiloh's Cure will give immediate relief? Price 10c., 50c. and $1.00. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cts. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston. wholesale agents. 1y32

TOWN WARRANT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, HAMPDEN, S. S.—To H. A. Northrop, Constable of the Town of Palmer, Greeting: In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs to meet at the Town House in said Palmer, on Monday the twentieth day of March inst., at ten o'clock a. m., to act on the following articles, viz:

Article 1. To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

Art. 2. To determine the number of selectmen, overseers of the poor, assessors, school committee, and constables the town will elect for the ensuing year.

Art. 3. To act upon the reports of the school committee, selectmen and other town officers.

Art. 4. To see if the town will vote to determine the compensation of the collector of taxes for the ensuing year.

Art. 5. To see if the town will allow a discount upon the taxes that may be assessed for the ensuing year.

Art. 6. To determine the manner the town will take to collect taxes that may be assessed for the ensuing year, and state terms and conditions of the same.

Art. 7. To elect all necessary town officers for the ensuing year.

Art. 8. To raise such sums of money as may be necessary to defray the current expenses of the town for the ensuing year, and to appropriate the same.

Art. 9. To see if the town will authorize its treasurer to borrow money in anticipation of the taxes of the current year, the same to be payable from said taxes.

Art. 10. To determine the manner of repairing the highways and bridges for the ensuing year.

Art. 11. To see if the town will continue to hire the rooms now occupied for a lock-up and tramp room.

Art. 12. To vote by ballot, which shall be, yes or no, according to the provisions of chapter 54 of acts of 1881, in answer to the question, "Shall licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors be granted in this town for the ensuing year?"

Art. 13. To see if the town will by its vote or otherwise ask the Legislature to extend to women who are citizens the right to hold town offices and to vote in town affairs on the same terms as male citizens.

Art. 14. To see what action the town will take in regard to choosing a Board of Health.

Art. 15. To see if the town will accept the list of jurors as revised by the selectmen.

Art. 16. To hear reports of committees and act thereon.

Art. 17. To choose committees and give them instructions.

Art. 18. To see if the town will make an appropriation for the benefit of the Young Men's Library Association.

Art. 19. To see if the town will raise any money for the celebration of Decoration Day, or towards building a soldiers' monument, and appropriate the same.

Art. 20. To see if the town will accept of the provisions of chapter 158, acts of 1871, being entitled: An act to provide for the election of road commissioners.

Art. 21. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in Bondsville, beginning near the pond on the old county road and running northerly to the Boston Duck Company canal, thence northeasterly to the center of the Swift river.

Art. 22. To see if the town will vote to discontinue the town way in Three Rivers leading from the old county road to the point where the said town way is intersected by the new road leading to Gilbert Barker's house.

Art. 23. To see if the town will build a new school house at Three Rivers, or otherwise increase the school accommodations in that village, and appropriate money for the same.

Art. 24. To see if the town will vote to lay a drain to connect with one already laid in front of the house owned by N. K. Rogers, to connect with one now laid near the store of Daniel F. Holden, and appropriate money for the same.

Art. 25. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in Thorndike village, beginning on the county road near the house of William Harvey, and running to the house of Henry McGilp.

Art. 26. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in the Depot village, on the easterly side of Central street, at corner of land of James Henighan, and running south 31° east by land of said Henighan and land of estate of A. Burleigh to Maple street.

Art. 27. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in the village of Three Rivers, commencing at a point on the highway near the house owned by Thomas Sullivan, and running thence in a southwesterly course to intersect a town way near the former residence of Hall J. Kelly.

Art. 28. To see if the town will take any action in regard to removing obstructions from the road leading from Three Rivers to the house of Oscar B. Sikes.

Art. 29. To see if the town will build additional drains and sewers at Palmer Depot Village, and appropriate necessary money for building the same.

Art. 30. To see if the town will vote to accept a town way as laid out by the selectmen in the village of Bondsville, commencing on the Ware road near the house of Luther Collis, and running south of land formerly owned by Cheesboro Lewis.

Names of Selectmen, Overseers of Poor, Assessors, School Committee and Constables who are voted for, must be all on one ballot, Town Clerk and Treasurer on a separate ballot; and you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof at the different public places designated by the vote of the town seven days at least before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal, at least two issues before the holding of said meeting.

Hereof fail not, and make due return of this warrant, with your doings thereon, to the Town Clerk, on or before the time of said meeting. Given under our hands this fourth day of March A. D. 1882.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE

WONDERFUL SURGICAL OPERATION—REMOVAL OF URINARY STONES FROM THE BLADDER—SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they called Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their re-formation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from the constitutions of women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. 4w49

CLEOPATRA.

Cleopatra has left a fame hardly second to that of any other woman, but without securing our respect, either as a sovereign or as a woman. Her name is forever linked with Julius Cæsar and Mark Antony, from the love with which she inspired the two great generals of the age. She was the incarnation of that goddess whom the Greeks and Romans worshiped under the name of Venus. She was Queen of Egypt before it was incorporated with the Roman Empire, and when Alexandria was the largest commercial centre in the world—a Greek city, a city of arts and sciences as well as commerce. Cleopatra herself was a Greek woman, and from the ancient coins and medals it would appear that her features were severely classic, not African, and she had no negro blood about her, as Story has represented in his statue. She was simply a beautiful and precocious Greek girl, highly educated, when, at 14, she appeared on the stage of history. She was 16 when she caught the eye of the great Cæsar and made him her captive. She was 28 when she made the acquaintance of Antony—when her beauty was most splendid and her intellect in full maturity—a luxurious, yet intellectual woman, with charming manners and musical tones of voice, and most enticing seductiveness of person. She retained her hold of Antony until his death—for 14 years—with an "infinite variety" of attractions, and she retained this hold on a man who was himself the leading general and statesman, and one of the greatest orators of his day, showing by this that she must have had extraordinary intellectual gifts as well as physical graces, for a man like Antony was not to be held and chained by other than a very gifted woman for so long a period.

It was when Antony was at Cilicia preparing for his Parthian expedition that Cleopatra was sent for to answer the serious accusation of having rendered aid to Cassius. On her arrival Antony invited her to supper, but she declined and invited him. Her banquet astonished the Roman general for its superb magnificence, and so bewitched was Antony with her charms that he gave up his expedition and followed her to Alexandria, a captive and a slave, to the disgust and scandal of the Roman world. But for a time he made his escape, went to Rome, and married Octavia, the sister of his rival, thereby showing that political considerations were more important to him than was the love of Cleopatra. But this did not last long. In the life and death contest between Antony and Octavius for the empire of the world, Antony was vanquished, although his forces were superior to those of Octavius, chiefly in consequence of the desertion of the ships of Cleopatra in the height of the battle at Actium. Antony ingloriously followed her to her capital. There he made another stand, at this time without reasonable hope of success. Defeated, he mortally wounded himself, but not until he heard the false rumor that Cleopatra was dead, and when he discovered that he had been deceived he caused himself to be drawn up to the window of the castle into which Cleopatra had retired, and expired in her arms. But she did not die for him. She dried her tears, and prepared to win the favor of Octavius—as she had won Cæsar and Antony—for ambitious and selfish ends. This time her charms failed. She dealt with a cold, politic, astute young man. Finding that she was to be reserved to grace his triumph at Rome she killed herself—some say by the poison of asps—probably by swallowing some potent poison known so well in her times. Thus ended the tragedy. Antony had surrendered a world for the caresses of a woman. What a fall! He lost fame, and empire, and life; and she her honor, her virtue, and her life.—From lecture of Dr. John Lord.

A man went into a drug store and asked for something to cure a headache. The druggist held a bottle of hartshorn to his nose, and he was nearly overpowered by its pungency. As soon as he recovered he began to rail at the druggist and threatened to punch his head. "But didn't it help your headache?" asked the apothecary. "Help my headache!" gasped the man. "I haven't any headache. It's my wife that's got the headache!"

"How is it, Mr. Brown," said a miller to a farmer, "that when I came to measure those ten barrels of apples I bought of you, I found nearly two barrels short?" "Singular, very singular; for I sent them to you in ten of your own flour barrels." "Ahem! did, eh!" said the miller; "well, perhaps I made a mistake. Let's imbibe."

Will any rumseller tell us of one good thing that has come to our commonwealth as a result of rumsellers? Rumsellers are licensed for the "public good"; what public good have they ever done?—N. Y. News.

Adam missed one of the luxuries of life. He could'nt laugh in his sleeve.

How the hearts of a crowd swell and throb with pitiless hatred against the man who coughs during the performance at a theatre, when they know he is too stingy to invest twenty-five cents in a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup.

It is worth remembering that nobody enjoys the nicest surroundings if in bad health. There are miserable people about to-day with one foot in the grave, when a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic would do them more good than all the doctors and medicines they have ever tried. See adv. m

MOTHER DIED OF SALT RHEUM.—J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this county. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies." m

STONES in the KIDNEYS

AND BLADDER EXPELLED—LONG SUFFERING OF ONE OF TROY'S BEST PEOPLE—A LUCKY MAN.

It is by no means a strange thing that Dr. Kennedy should have received the following letter. By reading it you will see in one minute why James Andrews was thankful:

TROY, N. Y., April 8th, 1880.

Dr. D. Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—Until within a recent date I had for several years suffered greatly from gravel, called by the doctors the Brick-Dust Sediment. For about a year past this sediment has not passed off in the usual quantity, but has accumulated, causing me untold pain. Having heard of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" I tried it in my case, and after using about one and one-half bottles, I voided a stone from the bladder, of an oval shape, 7-16 of an inch long, and rough on its surface. I send you the largest piece that you may see of what it is composed. Since then I have felt no pain. I now consider myself cured, and cannot express my thankfulness and gratitude for so signal a deliverance from a terrible disease. You have my consent to use this letter, should you wish to do so, for the benefit of other sufferers.

Yours truly, JAMES ANDREWS.
No. 10 Marshal St., Ida Hill.

When we consider that the medicine which did this service for Mr. Andrews costs only one dollar a bott , it would seem that persons afflicted in like fashion can afford the expense of testing its virtues. Get it of your druggist, or address Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" sold by all druggists. 48

THE STEINWAY PIANO

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE.

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of people best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway Pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers by paying $75, $100, $150, $200, or $300, according to the style, more for them than for any others; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "a foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scale," etc., etc., all proclaim that the

STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWLEDGED STANDARD PIANO.

This fact is being established that the Steinway is the best: of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

"Had You Loved Me Then."

And had you loved me then, my dear,
And had you loved me there,
When still the sun was in the east
And hope was in the air—
When all the birds sang to the dawn,
And I but sang to you,
Oh had you loved me then, my dear,
And had you then been true.

But ah! the day wore on, my dear,
And when the noon grew hot
The drowsy birds forgot to sing
And you and I forgot
To talk of love, or live for faith,
Or build ourselves a nest,
And now our hopes are shelterless,
Our sun is in the west.

—Louise Chandler Moulton.

THE THREE-TOOTHED RAKE.

I suppose the girls of Milburn would all resent the imputation, if I should say any of them envied little Phebe Bird when she set up housekeeping with Ridgeway Dayton, on the finest farm the country afforded, in a house that was in thorough repair and fully furnished. It was an establishment to be proud of, and people said if that young couple did not prosper it would be their own fault.

'There, Ridge,' said Uncle Aleck, 'is your farm and stock and house all paid for, and now I shall do no more for you. If you don't hoe out your row you'll have to starve. I am going abroad, so I shan't be coming around to advise you and scold you, and I expect it will come pretty tough with you for a while. But Phebe is a sensible girl, I am happy to say, and I think I leave you in pretty good hands.'

Ridge secretly felt rather pleased at the prospect of being 'left,' but he did not say so. Uncle Aleck was an excellent man to provide, but he was a little sharp in his way, as the young man had occasion to know at times in his juvenile years. The old gentleman himself had been reared under a system which might be formulated in the old couplet—

'A boy, a dog, and a walnut tree,
The more you thrash them, the better they be.'

The system had been greatly toned down in the case of his orphaned nephew, but Ridge thought it strict enough.

His choice of a wife had pleased his uncle as well as himself, for Phebe was a very domestic girl as well as a cultivated one, and it was the general verdict that 'both had done well.' Still Aunt Cynthia did tell Ridgeway she wished he 'had got a wife who would make him stand around a little more.'

'Oh, she'll make me stand around enough,' laughed Ridge. 'You need not be concerned about that.'

'She'll have need to,' said Aunt Cynthia, nodding her head sagaciously. She had known his manner of life from his youth up, and said he was always a very good boy if he only had a steady hand with him to keep him in order. But Ridge believed 'aunts and uncles never did appreciate a fellow.' Now it was worth while to have the worshipful direction of such a sweet, appreciative little soul as Phebe Bird's, and he did think himself a lucky fellow; and he was.

A stout, capable hired man was engaged at the outset, who understood his business, and, appropriately, received good wages. So the cares of life sat very lightly on the young farmer's shoulders, though he felt the responsibility of Atlas when he shouldered the world, having not only his own, but his wife's domain to look after.

Just when the serpent entered into this little Eden could not distinctly be told. I have no doubt he 'wired in and wired out' among the vines and shrubbery of that 'first garden' for some time before he presented himself to our first mother.

If Ridgeway was a little exacting and very particular, Phebe was self sacrificing and painstaking; so there was little jar in the machinery. He thought strict order and system about work a very excellent thing—for other people—especially for a man's wife. Breakfast at seven, dinner at twelve and supper at six, always on the table at the minute, was his standard; but of course if he could not be on hand just at the time it was only necessary to keep things hot and at their best for half or three-quarters of an hour, and it would be nice for her to fill up the time with sewing, or some little thing of that kind. It need not be lost time to her, by any means. Of course a man's work is the important work of the world, always.

Ridge, from his inexperience in household affairs, had imbibed a theory that if a woman is but economical, it costs 'next to nothing' to support such a small family 'on a farm.' He was astounded at the cost of sugar and coffee and tea, and the dozens of little outgoes every week. It must be there was something wrong somewhere. All his pet theories were getting knocked in the head. In vain Phebe mildly reasoned with him; showed him how long supplies could reasonably be made to last; proposed retrenching on cake for tea, but of course he would not hear of that. He liked cake. She never spoke of retrenching on cigars, though some women would. But all her 'argufying' was without avail.

'A man convinced against his will
Is of the same opinion still.'

Somehow, the more Ridge thought about it the more convinced he was that his wife could hardly be a wise manager. He was disappointed because the money did not pile up quite as he expected. This was another demolished theory which considerably set him back. But then he remembered an old adage which says, 'a man must ask his wife's leave to thrive,' and he was somewhat comforted. Phebe was young. She might yet be induced to change her manner of doing business. Perhaps he had been too indulgent himself, and had provided too lavishly for the supposed wants of the household. He might, and indeed he must, turn over a new leaf. In other words, he would tighten the thumbscrews a little, and see if the effect on his victim would not be salutary.

Phebe had grown very reluctant to ask for what was really needed in the house, so sure was she of that adverse criticism so intensely humiliating to a woman of fine nature. If water will wear a stone, so will perpetual petty fault finding eat away all home happiness. If Phebe had been more self-asserting in the start it would have been far better. She could have educated the young man into a reasonable householder. But instead, she took a very wrong course, and, by dressmaking in over hours, contrived to earn a little money. This went to eke out the scanty allowance her husband thought so munificent for the expenses of 'so small a family.'

When supper was over, Ridge harnessed up and drove to the village in his fresh, cool suit, to get the evening mail. It would have been a rest and refreshment to Phebe to go too, but there was the supper to clear away, the milk to set, little Aleck to care for, and Ridge would have thought all things going to wreck and ruin if she should so desert the ship.

'Uncle Aleck is at home, Phebe!' said Ridge, one evening, in great excitement, as he returned with a letter. 'Now I need not tell you how important it is for all of us that we make a good impression upon him. My uncle is a good man, but he has his peculiar notions. He was always lecturing me on economy. If he gets the impression that we are living extravagantly, he may cut me off with a shilling. Try to have little Aleck at his best, and, if possible, keep him from crying. We must study to provide his favorite dishes, for he always feels crusty if his meals do not please. I have laid by a little money, though not half what I expected—our living expenses have been so high; but I know Uncle Aleck will be gratified to know I have saved even a little.'

'There are a number of things we need,' suggested Phebe, wearily. 'I suppose your uncle will always prefer white sugar in his coffee, and it is much the best for everything. We have none. And the coffee pot is so leaky I can hardly make coffee in it; and the tea kettle is a great trouble for the same reason. They really ought to be mended.'

'And the same of half the tin ware in the house, I suppose;' he said with a lofty smile, as he lighted his cigar.

'It is very true,' said Phebe, with no smile either.

'Now, don't it seem to you, Phebe,' he said, argumentatively, 'that three years is a very short time for tin ware to last? I think my Aunt Lucinda has pieces she bought forty years ago.'

'Tin ware is not what it used to be.'

'I know women say so, but after all it depends a great deal upon the way it is used.' Whereupon followed a discourse on the use of pans and basins that was supposed to effectually settle the question about the necessity of her particular stock being mended.

The modern Pharaoh still persisted in demanding bricks without straw, so with the very scanty resources Phebe set about preparing for the dreaded visit. She would have liked a little girl to help take care of baby, but her husband objected on principle. It might look extravagant to Uncle Aleck, and the board of such a girl would be more than her wages.

It was a beautiful day in June, and the country at its best, when Uncle Aleck came. He gave his nephew a hearty hand shake, and looked over his added pounds of avoirdupois with laughing eyes.

'Farm life hasn't worn you down, I perceive,' he said, as he stepped into the buggy.

The supper was excellent, the house like a new pin, baby sweet and fresh in his clean white tucker, and there was only one shadow that those keen gray eyes detected, and that was the worn and faded look of the young mother. It filled him with solicitude, and gave him real pain, as he feared the young wife might be in failing health, and his poor boy be left early with only a memory and a pictured face, as he had been these many years. One thing which had so drawn him to Phebe was her resemblance to that little ivory-painted picture he bore with him over land and sea. He wondered if there was not a cause for her pallid cheek, that might yet be discovered and remedied. Full of this intent, he kept a sharp lookout from under his shaggy eyebrows, as he walked around the premises. The farm was kept up to a state of high thrift and neatness by the hired man, and Ridgeway got the credit of it. But indoors there was a scrimped, unhandy look about most of the working implements, which did not escape observation. He saw Phebe tinkering her tins with bits of twine drawn into holes, and he heard Ridge expostulating with her in the kitchen about some supplies she needed. He sat through a Monday in the cozy sitting room, where he could hear her toiling at the wash-tub, and hurrying to get up the meals, while she attended to the neglected baby when she could catch a moment's time. His indignation was at white heat by night, and he felt that he could have caned 'that graceless scamp,' his nephew, with pleasure, for permitting such a state of affairs.

They walked out after tea and looked at the growing crops, Ridgeway feeling unusually well satisfied with himself and all his doings.

Uncle Aleck's first remark hardly chimed in with this sentiment.

'Didn't it ever seem to you, Ridge, as a rather one-sided arrangement that you should have a stout man to help you out of doors, and your wife no help at all indoors? Turn about is fair play. Suppose now that you try the business for three years alone, and let her have the help.'

'Oh, uncle,' expostulated Ridge, 'there is steady work for two men on the farm the year around.'

'And steady work in the house for two women; and yet you have let a young, delicate wife carry it on single handed, and, as far as I know, have never remonstrated with her on the slow suicide she was committing. Such havoc as three short years have made! It ought to make a man ashamed, if his feelings are not iron clad, to so overwork a woman he has vowed to love and cherish.'

Ridgeway reddened at his uncle's plain-dealing, but he was not disposed to admit that he was the one so much to blame.

'I tell you, uncle, Phebe has not the faculty of getting along with her work that some women have. It takes her longer than it needs to get every meal. I am sometimes almost surprised.'

'It certainly does take her longer than it need to. I have plainly seen that, and now, young man, I'll teach you a lesson. You are to rake hay to-morrow, I believe. I'll fix you a rake, and I'll see you use it.' And the irate old man smashed all but three teeth out of a good rake and handed it over to his nephew. 'There's your implement, and I'll come out and see how you get on with it. There'll be no shirking either. Everything I have seen of your in-door home conveniences have been just of that order. Your wife works with a three-toothed rake from morning till night. It is good to be saving and lay up money, but not if you must grind it out of the life-blood of those who should be nearest and dearest to you. No more new rakes for you until I see a different order of things in the house! Let Phebe make out a list of all she needs as we are together this evening, and then do you draw a check and foot the bill.'

'Why, uncle, you have never kept house. You know nothing of a woman's demands. It would sweep every cent I have.'

'Let it sweep, then! Money gotten dishonestly as that was had better go to the place it was stolen from. You have been robbing your wife of her life-power, her health and her happiness, these three years. It is time you make reparation. I have preached economy to you, it is true, but I never preached dishonesty. If you can't keep your wife in a decent way, break up and let Phebe go back to the good home she came from. You can go into a store in the city and make your own living.'

What a desolate picture it was! Leave his pleasant home, his wife and boy and take up with the old solitary lodgings in a boarding-house! He felt lonesome at the bare suggestion. Uncle Aleck went on:

'I should like to give your wife this piece of advice: The next time you even hint about what is needed in the housekeeping line, and what is not, and suggest a retrenchment here and a cutting off there, I want her to walk out and give orders to your hired man; tell him how much grain he must give the horses, how much salt to the sheep; how he must scrimp the wheat when he sows it, and the corn when he plants it. She may tell him to tie up the broken harrow with a string, and not go to the expense of having it mended, and shall insist on his going ahead if the plow handle is broken—it is too trifling a thing to stop the work for that. All the fault I find with Phebe is that she did not do this long ago. If she had given you a good setting down in the start, and taught you to mind your business, it would have been a blessing all around.'

It was pretty plain dealing, but it was a great eye-opener to the young man. He sat upon the piazza for an hour in the moonlight and thought, and thought. Whatever his meditations were, one thought was uppermost—he must gain ground with Uncle Aleck or his chances were slim. The little talk had, as Mark Twain would say, 'knocked more conceit out of him than a fit of sea sickness.' 'Humble pie' may not be very palatable, but it is sometimes just the diet to bring one around right. Slowly and soberly the young man 'came to himself,' and then the foremost thought was—'What a wretch I have been! can Phebe have a spark of love or respect left for me?'

There must have been something good in that youth, or that loyal heart could not have held her affection for him through thick and thin, as she had done. Uncle Aleck's visit was a godsend to her. He saw a new order of things established in the house, and hung up the three-toothed rake in a conspicuous place in the barn as a standing object-lesson. Phebe scarcely knew how to get meals in her renovated kitchen, but her face was as bright as her new saucepans.

Phebe soon won back her roses, and went about her duties blithe as a singing-bird. She would always laughingly head her husband off whenever he began to allude to the old times, and 'set down naught in malice,' but charged the whole to 'our youth and inexperience.'

When Uncle Aleck came back the next year to the christening of the 'little Caroline,' he made out to her the deeds of some valuable property, and added a codicil to his will in which the ivory picture was bequeathed to this namesake of the fair lady who, to him, was always young and beautiful.

WHERE BUTTONS COME FROM.

The button trade of New York is estimated at from eight to ten million dollars a year. Last year the importation of buttons exceeded three and a half million dollars, the aggregate for the four years just passed being but a little short of thirteen million dollars. At American rates of wages many of the imported buttons could not be put upon their cards for the price they sell for.

Glass buttons are made mostly in Bohemia, and children are largely employed at the work, which they do as quickly and neatly as adults. The children get ten cents a day, men from forty to fifty cents, and women a little less. Pearl buttons are imported from Vienna, where they are almost exclusively manufactured; and the all-important shirt buttons are received mostly from Birmingham, England, where the majority of metal buttons are likewise procured. The most extensive of all the button manufacturing, however, is that of the Parisian and Berlin novelties. In one manufacturing village near Paris, where there are from 5,000 to 6,000 inhabitants, all the working people are engaged in making the agate buttons, which, even with thirty per cent duty added to the cost, sell, when imported into this country, at the extremely low figure of thirty-one cents per great gross. The material alone, it is reported, could not be procured here for double that amount.

While American manufacturers make no attempt, and probably have no desire, to compete with European producers employing hand processes, they excel in making bone, composition, brass, ivory, and gold buttons by machinery, and are able to export considerable quantities of these styles. In Providence, R. I., for example, sleeve buttons and jewelry buttons are largely manufactured expressly for exportation.—Scientific American.

HIS SIGN.

Three or four years ago a colored man living in Detroit hung out a sign on his house which read 'For sail.' He happened to be at the gate when a white man came along and said, 'You'll never get an offer for your house with any such spelling as that.' The owner of the place was greatly puzzled to improve the orthography, but finally took his wife's advice and made it read 'For sell.' This seemed to be all right for a day or two, and then a school-boy halted and said, 'If you don't fix that sign, all the children will be laughing at you.' There was another convention of the family to see where the mistake came in, and the sign was made 'Fur sall.' It had not been up an hour when an old colored man came and queried, 'Does you mean dat dis place am fur Sally? What yer gwine to gib de place to Sally fur?' 'Am you findin' fault wid dat sign?' asked the other. 'Well, I doan' quite cotch on to de spellin'.' 'You doan', eh? Has you got seven hundred dollars to pay cash down fur dis place?' 'No, sah.' 'Den you pass on and shet up! Maybe I doan' spell jist de same as you do, but I'ze got prospects of handlin' seven hundred dollars while you has got boaf knees out to de wedder. I doan' ker to use high-flown language an' have to w'ar a shoe on one foot an' a bute on de odder. Go long ole man—you am too fly on geog'aphy."—Detroit Free Press.

An elderly Scotchwoman went one day to an apothecary's shop with a prescription for two grains of calomel for a child. Seeing the druggist weigh the medicine with scrupulous exactness, and not thinking he did this from anxiety not to get an overdose, but from his penuriousness or desire to give as little as possible for the money, she said: "Dinna be sae mean wi'it, man. It is for a puir faitherless bairn."

I think it must somewhere be written that the virtues of mothers shall occasionally be visited on their children, as well as the sins of fathers.—Worcester Times.

It Never Comes Again.

There are gains for all our losses,
There are balms for all our pain,
But when youth, the dream, departs,
It takes something from our hearts,
And it never comes again.

We are stronger, and are better,
Under manhood's sterner reign;
Still we feel that something sweet
Followed youth with flying feet,
And will never come again.

Something beautiful is vanished,
And we sigh for it in vain;
We behold it everywhere,
On the earth, and in the air,
But it never comes again.

Richard Henry Stoddard.

RESISTED.

Four young men, clerks and students, while on a summer vacation tramp through Northern New England, engaged for a guide to a certain romantic waterfall a boy named Forrest Graves. Forrest was a fine athletic fellow, who could outwalk or outclimb any amateur in the mountains, and his moral courage was equal to his physical health and strength.

After he had guided the young men to the waterfall, and they had satisfied themselves with sightseeing, they invited him to lunch with them.

'Thank you, I have my own lunch,' and the boy went away by himself. Later, when full justice had been done to their repast, and a flask of brandy had furnished each of the young men with a stimulating draught, Graves was called.

'You must drink with us, if you will not eat with us,' now said the owner of the flask, and the most reckless of the party.

'No, sir, thank you,' was the courteous response.

'But I insist upon it.'

'You can do as you please, and I shall do as I please.'

The young man sprang to his feet, and with a bound stood beside the boy, too much absorbed in his own purpose to heed the quivering lips and flashing eyes of another.

'Now you are bound to try my brandy; I always rule.'

'You can't rule me.'

These words were scarcely uttered when the flask was seized and hurled into the stream, where the clinking of glass betrayed its destruction. Then a clear, defiant tone rang out:

'I did it in self-defense. You had no right to tempt me. My father was once a rich and honorable man, but he died a miserable drunkard, and my mother came here to live to keep me away from the liquor till I should be old enough to take care of myself. I have promised her more than a hundred times I wouldn't taste it, and I'd die before I'd break my promise.'

'Bravely said. Forgive me and let us shake hands. My mother would be a happy woman if I were as brave as you; I won't tempt you to do wrong. I shall never forget you nor the lesson you have taught me.'

The most reckless was the most generous, and seeing his error apologized frankly.

How many boys need to keep from strong drink, and, alas, how many men and women! Who dares tempt them? Let it not be you and I.—Youth's Companion.

HINTS ON CALLING.

Do not wear your muddy gums in the parlor, and wipe them on the carpet. It isn't æsthetic.

If you are asked to 'call again,' suggest that you are willing to take something on account.

Do not attract attention by consulting your watch. You might be mistaken for a car starter.

On leaving, never mistake a silk umbrella for your cotton one. You may be termed eccentric.

Do not talk too much of your valuable jewelry. The hostess may think you have too much 'brass.'

Never commence a conversation by referring to the weather. You may be taken for a lightning-rod agent.

Do not ask point blank how much the paintings cost. Just casually inquire where the lady buys her tea.

Beware of making free with the dog. He may be capable of distinguishing between a gentleman and a rogue.

Do not carry your lighted cigar into the drawing-room. The odor of cabbage may be distasteful to the hostess.

Do not make the first call if you are a newcomer in the neighborhood. Just wait until you have had several.

On entering, always let your lady precede you. If the family you are visiting keep a savage dog you may find it healthier to do so.

If the baby is handed you to hold, do not stick pins in the cherub's body. It may be a little sensitive, and you may hurt its feelings.

Do not tattle. Do not carry gossip from one family to another. If you have a wife let out the job to her. She will do it more effectually.

Do not open or shut doors or windows, or alter the arrangements of the room. When you want to get out, climb through the fanlight.

When a lady has called who has recently returned from a sojourn, do not wait until she is taking her leave before you remark that you 'are glad to see her back.' It may sound a little suggestive.—Yonkers Gazette.

THE KIND ELEPHANT.—A kind-hearted she elephant, while walking through the jungle where the spicy breezes blow soft o'er Ceylon's Isle, heedlessly set foot upon a partridge, which she crushed to death within a few inches of the nest containing its callow brood. "Poor little things!" said the generous mammoth, "I have been a mother myself, and my affection shall atone for the fatal consequences of my neglect." So saying she sat down upon the orphaned birds. Moral—The above teaches us what home is without a mother; also, that it is not every person who should be entrusted with the care of an orphan asylum.

"Ah, dearest," sighed the young man, kneeling at the feet of his ownest own, "dost thou know what of all outward things is nearest my heart?" "Really, I can't say," she replied, "but if you have any regard for your health in this changeable weather, I should think it was a flannel shirt." She was too practical, and it broke the engagement.

Captain Percival, a Cape Cod mariner of the old school, was once awakened in his bunk by a shipmate with the announcement that the vessel was going to eternity. "Well," replied the captain, "I've got ten friends over there to one in this world; let her go." And he turned over and went to sleep again.

HISTORICAL FACTS CONCERNING GARFIELD.

Mr. Garfield was chosen to the Ohio Senate in 1859, but not to take his seat until January 1, 1861. The secession of South Caroliaa in December, 1860, convinced him that there would be a civil war of unusual duration and vigor. He resolved to enter the army when the time came. At Columbus there was a federal arsenal nominally garrisoned by two or three officers, a sergeant, and a file of foot. He procured from one of the officers a complete list of the West Point text books, bought them and mastered them between January 1, 1861, and July 1, 1861, when he entered the army and hired the sergeant to drill him two nights each week, in the sabre, musket, bayonet and drill exercise. He was made a West Pointer and a soldier in all acquirements by this method in seven months, besides attending to all his senatorial duties at the same time. Both Buel and Rosecrans, on these accounts, put him ahead at once, and he justified their confidence by his efficiency. In 1863, when he entered Congress, he was put on the banking and currency committee, and found he knew nothing of finance. So having acquired German at Williams, he set to work and mastered a reading knowledge of French, with which he learned from original sources the details of the John Law experiments in fiatism and inflation. This grounded him in his hard money views forever. He rose always at seven o'clock, and occupied the half hour which he gave to bathing and dressing with translating daily ten lines of some classic in a dead, and ten lines of some classic in a modern language. He alternated French and Latin with German and Greek in this way, and got up over 3,000 lines of them in each year. Between 7.30 and 8 o'clock he always read some English book, of which he wanted the information. At 8 o'clock he breakfasted, and then punctuated his meal with the newspapers and his mail. His aim was, after he retired from the presidency, to found a college equal to Yale or Harvard at Cleveland, and die a university president, "going out at the same hole at which he went in."

WASHINGTON'S STRENGTH.

Great commanders have not, as a rule, been notable for the possession of extraordinary physical power. Washington was an exception, being a man of great strength. In his youth, he was once an onlooker at a wrestling contest, and, growing weary of the sport, threw himself at the foot of a tree to enjoy his book. By-and-by he was challenged to try a fall with the hero of the day. At first he declined, until finding his refusal attributed to fear, he entered the arena, and, without taking off his coat, grappled with his opponent, and, after a brief struggle, hurled him to the ground with such force, that the best wrestler in Virginia was in much the same predicament as the Duke's wrestler when he tried conclusions with Orlando. Later on in life, while watching some young fellows contending at throwing the bar, Washington asked to be allowed to try what he could do; and, grasping the bar, sent it flying through the air, to land many feet beyond the limit attained by any of the competitors. And still later, when he might be said to be getting old, he showed that he had not lost his strength of arm. Taking a morning ride, he saw three of his workmen vainly endeavoring to raise a large stone. Jumping off his horse, Washington pushed the men aside, and, without any apparent effort, lifted the stone to its proper place, and then remounting, rode on.

White Rock Peak, of Buffalo Mountain, in Tennessee, which recently fell with a terrific crash, was about 1500 feet high, and almost a perpendicular cliff. It was composed of white sandstone. People who witnessed the fall describe the scene as awful in its character. It looked as if the entire mass of the mountain was falling. Rocks as large as houses were hurled into the valley with a terrible force. Trees were uprooted and cut down as if they were mere brittle hairs. With a force that made the ground shake the avalanche came down the mountain side, carrying everything that stood in its course for the distance of a mile. The catastrophe is attributed to the action of water, which, filling the crevices and freezing year after year, finally split the peak from the rest of the mountain.

A Virginia Nimrod writes to a Richmond paper, describing an incident of one of his hunting expeditions, which he says he can prove. He discovered a hen-duck within easy range of his gun and discharged both barrels, breaking her wing. Pulling his boat a little nearer, he fired again, killing the duck apparently. He then picked her up, removed the feathers and entrails, cut off her head, and put the body in the water to wash off the blood, when to his amazement it swam away at a lively pace. He seized the oars again, and after an animated chase secured his game, which gave him no further trouble.

I neither drink wine nor give it to my guests. Strong drink is the curse of the country and age. Sixty thousand men in America every year lie down in the grave of the drunkard. Drink has murdered my best friends; I hate it. It burdens me with taxes, and I denounce it as a nuisance, on which every honest man should put his heel.—Dr. J. G. Holland.

An old man, with a head as destitute of hair as a watermelon, entered a drug store and told the clerk he wanted a bottle of hair restorer. "What kind of hair restorer do you prefer?" "I reckon I'll take a bottle of red hair restorer. That was the color of my hair when I was a boy."

Dickie, six years old, had a pair of boots. He cut one of them with his hatchet. The father became very angry, and scolded incessantly. The little fellow looked his father in the face, and said: "If you don't stop talking you'll get me mad, too!"

Of the thirty inebriate asylums established in this country during the past twenty-five years, but four have gone out of existence. This would seem to prove something, but for the life of us we don't know what.—Oil City Derrick.

One boy is a boy; two boys are half a boy; and three boys are no boy at all.—Ben. Franklin. It is different with girls, Benjamin. One girl is a girl; two girls are more girl and three girls are an entire circus.

The despotism of custom is on the wane; we are not content to know that things are; we ask whether they ought to be.—John Stuart Mill.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MARCH 25, 1882.

THE anti-polygmy bill has been signed by the President. Now let the government see that it is enforced.

POSTMASTER GENERAL HOWE has been in Boston this week, and has taken the opportunity to talk up increased postal facilities between Boston, New York and San Francisco.

E. H. LATHROP of Springfield was elected representative from that city on Tuesday, to fill out the term of John L. Rice, who gave up Legislative honors for the position of city marshal.

THE Senators at Washington pine for a restoration of the franking privilege, and have passed a bill reviving it. The members of the House would be glad to follow suit if they dared, but will hardly care to risk the censure they would encounter by such a step.

THE Pacific Mills at Lawrence shut down on Tuesday, in consequence of a strike among the weavers and spinners, and over 5300 employes are out of work in consequence. The strike was caused by a reduction of wages in the worsted department.

WILLIAM BROWN of Kentucky is the "prominent Republican" who wrote the infamous attack upon Gen. Garfield alluded to in last week's JOURNAL. Brown was a delegate to the Chicago convention, it seems, and voted steadily for Blaine. Brown wants to win notoriety, that is plain, and he seems likely to succeed, in much the same way that Guiteau did.

THE anti-Chinese bill was passed by the House at Washington, Thursday, by a vote of 177 to 65. Nearly all the New England members voted against the bill, and Congressman Robinson made a stiring speech against it. It will practically shut off all Chinese immigration for twenty years, if it becomes a law. It is un-American and unjust in its provisions, and is a disgraceful concession to the Dennis Kearney element. There is some hope that President Arthur will veto the bill, as being a violation of our treaty obligations.

A STRANGE STORY comes from Washington, in regard to the conduct of the Congressional delegation which attended the funeral of President Garfield at Cleveland. The House last month voted to pay the sergeant-at-arms of the last House $8245 for expenses incurred in connection with this trip and the funeral, and it is now said that there was one item of $1700 for liquors, cigars, etc., and that there was a disgraceful orgie at some time during the party's absence. The vouchers were examined by a sub-committee, and are said to have been burned. If the story be true, it is not strange that the members of the delegation wanted the evidences of their shame safely out of human reach.

WHILE the worst of the great flood in the Mississippi valley is probably over, reports are received daily of fresh breaks in the levees along the lower parts of the river. The devastation wrought by this flood is great and widespread. Between Cairo and the gulf the river is from 30 to 140 miles in width, covering probably 100,000 square miles of land, while at least 85,000 people are so destitute as to need help. In many places the flood came like a sudden wave, and families lost everything. The suffering from exposure and hunger has been terrible among isolated families, and live stock has also suffered greatly. Relief steamers have been busily at work hunting up the sufferers, who have been promptly provided with rations by the government, and everythlng possible has been done for their comfort.

Emigrants are passing through St. Paul on their way to new homes in the far northwest at the rate of nearly a thousand a day. They necessarily travel in jolting, ill-smelling emigrant cars, but palace cars will be none too good for their children a few years hence.

It is estimated that nearly a thousand horses are suffering and a good many valuable animals have died in Boston from the effects of what appears to be blood poisoning, caused by the use of impure salt on the streets by horse railway companies.

Wooden shoes are worn in the West, and enough of them are sold to keep a large factory going at Green Bay. They are cut of green basswood, are then smoked and dried, and sell for 35 cents a pair.

Dr. Gray, of the Utica (N. Y.) insane asylum, was fired at by a lunatic the other day, who claimed to be an embassador from heaven sent by Guiteau to remove him. The doctor was not seriously injured.

It is believed that the Gloucester schooner Bellerophon, with fourteen men, has been lost off the Banks. This swells the number of men lost from Gloucester since the new year came in to 75.

The boiler of a Philadelphia tugboat exploded Thursday, killing four men. A building and another tugboat were set on fire by the explosion and destroyed.

Leopold Morse, the only Democratic member of Congress from Massachusetts, announces that he will not be a candidate for reelection under any circumstances.

The city of Elizabeth, N. J., which has been groaning under a debt of $6,400,000, has compromised with its creditors for 50 cents on the dollar.

The American Association of the Red Cross has issued an appeal to the people of this country in behalf of the sufferers by the Southern floods.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

This is Annunciation Day.

The moon is lighting up again.

Maple sugar festivals are in order.

Easter cards are plentiful and handsome.

The frost is not quite all out of the ground yet.

Under the Old Style, to-day would be the first day of the year.

E. P. Bowen has this week received $800 back pension money.

O. C. Marcy has bought the Marshall place on Pleasant street, for $1800.

H. A. Bigelow starts for Vermont next Monday, to buy a lot of horses.

M. Fox has sold one of his houses on Fox avenue to E. P. Bowen for $1500.

Rev. C. H. Gates, of Kennebunkport, Me., occupies the Congregational pulpit to-morrow.

Rev. T. B. Thayer, D. D., of Boston, preaches at the Universalist church to-morrow.

Tuesday and Wednesday gave us a couple of inches or so of snow, but it has mostly disappeared.

There is a call in our advertising columns for a number of carpenters, to work on the new wire mills.

The dramatic club will turn over about $30 to the band, as the net receipts of their last week's entertainment.

New maple sugar is in the market, and sells for 20 cents a pound. There promises to be a scarcity of the article this spring.

Landlord Turner of the Tockwotton House has sold out to Seth Stone of Maynard, a cousin of Captain C. P. Stone of the Nassowanno House.

The skating party at Wales Hall Monday evening was attended by a goodly number of masqueraders and others, who had a pleasant evening on the rollers.

Mrs. Albert Burleigh will sell a lot of household furniture, a phæton, and other articles at auction next Wednesday afternoon, at her residence on North Main street.

The village schools will close next Tuesday, for a rest of a couple of weeks. The high school, however, will continue in session another week, and will have a recess of only about one week this spring.

The Methodists had a very pleasant festival at the town house Tuesday evening, and though the attendance was not as large as it would have been with more favorable weather, there was a goodly number present, and the net proceeds of the evening amounted to about $65.

Rev. O. L. Leonard, the evangelist whose revival work in this place and at Three Rivers a year ago will be pleasantly remembered by many, is now holding a series of meetings in Burlington, Ia., where he is meeting with a large measure of success. He is assisted by Prof. F. W. Messe, of Concord, N. H., the gospel singer.

Baird's Minstrels filled Wales Hall "cram jam" full last week Friday night, and gave a capital entertainment, with several fresh and pleasing features. This is the largest and as a whole probably the best troupe which has ever visited Palmer, and they will be certain of another crowded house if they ever come this way again.

The Masonic social Wednesday evening was attended by about 80 members of the order and their ladies, and was a very enjoyable occasion. Mrs. S. S. Taft was expected to give some readings, but was kept at home by sudden sickness. There was singing by a quartet from Three Rivers, and several after-dinner speeches by some of the brethren.

It is said that oleomargarine can be bought in at least two places in this village, and that it is sold as butter. The law is very explicit on this subject, and requires that every package of oleomargarine sold shall be distinctly labeled as such. Any person who sells it in any other way is liable to a fine of $100 for the first, and $200 for each subsequent offense.

The American Express Company has just instituted a system of money orders, which will be found very convenient and useful in sending small sums of money. The charge for an order of $5 or under is five cents, and eight cents for any sum between $5 and $10. This is cheaper than postal orders, and the orders are issued by and payable at any office of the company.

The new school board met Tuesday evening and organized with Rev. Charles H. Ricketts as chairman, and H. C. Strong as secretary. In the division of work, the schools at Three Rivers and Bondsville will be under the special care of Mr. Stoughton, and those at Thorndike, Palmer Center and Whiting's under the care of Mr. Ricketts, while Mr. Strong retains his present field.

The new switch board has been placed in the telephone office this week. The central office call is now one ring instead of two, and other changes are made in the calls which greatly facilitate the work in that office, while the new board dispenses entirely with the ringing of bells in the office, which was so constant and tiresome with the old board. A portion of the office has been partitioned off for a sleeping room, and the night service will be in working order in a few days.

Capt. Otis Whitcomb of Swanzey, N. H., father of Mrs. Wm. Merriam of Springfield, and grandfather of Mrs. J. F. Holbrook of this place, died at his home last Saturday night, at the age of 86 years and 6 months. He was a man of sweet and lovable disposition, and was known throughout the country as the original of "Uncle Josh Whitcomb," the play in which his character is so faithfully portrayed by Denman Thompson. He raised a family of 18 children, of whom 9 are still living.

The contract for building the new wire mills has been awarded to W. C. McClallan of Chicopee, who has sub-let the wood work to C. L. Shaw of Springfield. Geo. A. Griffin of this place does the grading and puts in the foundation, and is already at work. The buildings will be pushed forward as fast as possible, as the contract calls for their completion by the tenth of June. The drawing house will be of wood, 125 by 60 feet, two stories high, and the annealing building of brick, 112 by 80, one story, with a monitor roof.

John B. Gough's latest book, "Sunlight and Shadow," has already attained a sale of 26,000 copies. The name of the author is sufficient proof of the desirability of the book, for his lifework has given him great knowledge of all phases of human nature, and much experience in all classes of society, out of which his remarkable faculty for seeing the ludicrous, combined with his wonderful talent for description, has enabled him to produce a work full of interest, pathos and humor. It is sold only by subscription, and an agent will soon call upon the people of this vicinity, when they can judge for themselves.

The Mormon question does not excite much interest in Palmer, judging from the slim attendance at the lecture of Wm. Jarman Tuesday evening. The lecture was somewhat disappointing, in that the speaker entirely failed to give a full and complete exposition of Mormonism, as indicated by his circulars. He gave a partial description of the interior workings of the Endowment House, and touched upon numerous other points concerning the polygamists, but was tantalizingly brief and indefinite in many places where the audience naturally expected more than mere allusions. With more facts, less rambling and verbosity, and an exclusion of much of his uncalled-for diatribe against Congress, the lecture would be one of intense interest. The views were an excellent and very interesting part of the evening's entertainment.

THE FARMERS' INSTITUTE.

The fourth and last Farmers' Institute of the season was held by the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society at Weeks Hall on Tuesday. It was fully attended by farmers from all the surrounding towns, and was one of the most interesting meetings the society has held. W. R. Sessions of Hampden opened the discussion, by reading an essay on "Fertilizers and their Application to Crops." He thought the farmers should chiefly rely on home-made fertilizers; that they should save all the liquid portions by absorbents, either sand, sawdust or some similar article. He had rather a poor idea of commercial fertilizers. Had used them, but had not made them pay as a general thing. He recommended that the sod should often be turned under, its decay greatly enriching the earth. Ashes were one of the best fertilizers, either sown broadcast on grass land or used in the hill for corn or potatoes. It was an article that would continue to benefit the land for a long time. Plaster is also good on some lands. Irrigation he thought should always be resorted to when practicable; it is a great benefit to grass land. Deacon White of Monson had used fish and potash as a fertilizer with good results. Mr. Prouty of Brookfield thought commercial fertilizers paid well, according to his experience. He said, however, the farmer should use his judgment as to the best kinds to be used on different soils. George E. Tucker of Monson said they were a great stimulant to crops, and this gave them an early start in the first part of the season. Mr. Chamberlain of Brookfield thought the Stockbridge fertilizer the best, and that he obtained all from its use that ought to be expected. Still, he said we should not depend too much on the commercial article, for home manures were the best. He would recommend the use of both the barnyard manure and the commercial, to get the fullest benefit. Deacon White of West Brookfield used fertilizers and manure together with good success. He thought the use of the commercial brands alone for crops, for a series of years, would result to the disadvantage of the soil. Mr. Tufts of Monson had had fair success in the use of the Stockbridge and other brands on potato crops, also on grass land. Mr. Bruce of West Brookfield used Stockbridge to give his crops an early start, but relied on the barnyard to help them the remainder of the season. Judge Robinson reported good results from the use of different brands, but he uses barnyard manure, harrowed in, and the commercial kinds dropped in the drill with the seeds. Other gentlemen spoke of their experiences in similar strain to the above. All went home feeling that the day had been well spent.

THE TOWN MEETING.

A finer day than Monday is not often vouchsafed for town meeting day, and the clear skies, spring-like air and good traveling brought out an attendance somewhat larger than last year, the whole number of votes polled being 492, just 20 more than a year ago. The general popularity of the old board of selectmen was attested by the fact that two of its members were reelected with practically no opposition. An effort was made to return Joseph Kerigan to the board in place of Mr. McMaster, but without success. The vote for selectmen stood as follows:

Elijah G. Murdock,	444	A. L. Haynes,	79
Henry G. Loomis,	435	David Knox,	37
Henry McMaster,	235	F. A. Packard,	4
Joseph Kerigan,	200	Scattering,	5

The contest for the office of school committee excited the greatest interest, and the candidates were so numerous and the ballots so split up that few were ready to venture a prediction as to the result, which was as follows:

For three years.		For two years.
H. R. Stoughton,	158	C. H. Ricketts,	260
E. B. Gates,	137	G. A. Murdock,	151
Silas Ruggles,	122	E. B. Gates,	65
Wm. Holbrook,	59	H. R. Stoughton,	16
Scattering,	3	Wm. Holbrook,	2

Mr. Gates received the largest number of votes, next to Rev. Mr. Ricketts, and would have been elected had they all been for the same term.

The full list of officers elected is as follows:

Moderator.—S. S. Taft.
Town Clerk and Treasurer.—James B. Shaw.
Selectmen and Overseers of the Poor.—E. G. Murdock, H. G. Loomis, H. McMaster.
School Committee.—For three years, H. R. Stoughton. For two years, C. H. Ricketts.
Assessors.—John Clough, David Knox, D. B. Bishop.
Tax Collector.—H. A. Northrop.
Constables.—J. A. Palmer, H. A. Northrop, Merrick Whitney, H. W. Stimpson, C. L. Holden, N. K. Story, Samuel Brown, D. W. Palmer, Michael Foley 1st, H. D. Shaw.
Fence Viewers.—J. K. Knox, M. C. Fenton, R. S. Hastings.
Field Drivers.—J. R. Wellman, C. H. Grout, P. S. Trumbull, Frank Angell, H. L. Canterbury, T. V. Kent, D. W. Taft, H. W. Stimpson.
Surveyors of Lumber.—M. C. Morey, D. M. Stebbins, F. F. Marcy, A. J. Parker, D. B. Bishop, H. A. Northrop, S. W. Smith, Charles Smith, John J. Sugrue.
Measurers of Wood and Bark.—D. M. Stebbins, J. P. Barnes, D. B. Bishop, George C. Buell, H. McMaster, S. W. Smith, A. R. Murdock, Joseph Thompson, H. P. Holden.
Sealer of Weights and Measures.—John Clough.

Action on the appropriations was wisely postponed to an adjourned meeting to be held on Monday, April 3, at 10 a. m., when the voters can give their undivided attention to the business in hand. The tax collector's compensation was fixed at $200, and it was voted to allow 5 per cent discount on taxes paid on or before Aug. 20th. The selectmen were instructed to appoint a highway surveyor in each district, who will be accountable to the selectmen, as last year.

The vote on the question of licensing the sale of liquor was unexpectedly close, but the friends of license carried the day by a vote of 210 to 206. No particular effort was made by the opposition, further than to supply a good quantity of ballots, and the vote shows that there is a growing feeling against the present practically unrestricted sale of liquor.

Only two ladies availed themselves of the privilege of voting for school committee this year.

It proved a cold day for some of the candidates. But they will have a chance to try their hand again next year.

It was to be expected that the gallant Colonel would come off victorious. He was never in the habit of leading to defeat.

Voters had their choice of about 17 varieties of ballots. Among the curiosities of the day was one ballot bearing the names of "Joseph Carangan" for selectman, "John Cluff" for assessor, and "Timo. Keef" for constable. Men who go away from home to get their printing done, however, need not be surprised at such mistakes.

The air of the town house was refreshingly free from tobacco smoke, thanks to the new law upon this subject, but peanut shells and tobacco spit abounded as usual.

BRIMFIELD.

On Monday evening Margaret W. Campbell, agent of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association, presented the claims of their organization at the town hall, in a very able and candid address.

The summer term of the Hitchcock Free High School commenced on Tuesday, with 88 pupils. More are expected.

LUDLOW.

The butchers of this town and vicinity had a ball at the town hall last evening, with music by Bryant's orchestra of Springfield.

There was an interesting fellowship meeting at the Congregational church at Ludlow Mills Wednesday, with instructive discussions which were participated in by Rev. Drs. Eustis and Gladden of Springfield and other clergymen and laymen.

WILBRAHAM.

The spring term of the academy has begun with a large attendance.

The report of the selectmen shows the expenses of the past year to have been as follows: Schools, $2200; paupers, $1100; highways, $1200; contingencies, $1200, including $417 for the public watering place and $283 for the Moulton law suit, leaving a balance in the treasury of over $100.

WARREN.

The high school closed Friday for a vacation of one week.

The Universalist society had a social dance in the town hall Wednesday evening.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. A. L. Converse Wednesday evening.

Miss Herrick, former teacher at East Brimfield, takes the place of Miss Tyler in primary school No. 1.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

A. D. King will commence work at the market again April 1st.

There are to be numerous changes at Cutler's mill the first of the month.

On Wednesday evening Mr. Dowd of Springfield organized a boxing school.

The jurors' list to be voted upon at the town meeting is posted at the post office.

The committee appointed to make arrangements for a supper, decided to have a "baked bean supper" at the chapel April 12th.

Last Wednesday evening, at the meeting of the ladies' benevolent society at the chapel, the friends presented E. W. Wall with a Webster's unabridged, as a small consideration for his services as organist the past three years.

BONDSVILLE.

These pleasant days begin to remind us that lawn parties will soon be in vogue.

Marbles have put in an appearance on our streets, a sure sign that Spring has come.

The public schools opened last Monday with a fair attendance, and the same teachers as last term.

The ladies of the M. E. church met at the house of Mrs. S. P. Weld Wednesday afternoon and evening.

The Boston Duck Co. are soon to re-cover and slate the roof of their mill, and put in dormer windows.

A little girl 5 years old wandered away from the house of F. S. King the other day, and after an exciting search was found at H. Cobleigh's, nearly two miles distant.

The new hotel has received one coat of paint, and with the addition of another coat will make quite a respectable appearance. The proprietors have built a new barn, and intend to furnish first-class livery teams, a want long felt in this village.

WALES.

Thomas J. Weaver lost a valuable Jersey cow last week.

George Bradway was arrested Monday for breaking into the house of Charles Corbin, and stealing several articles. He goes to the Reform School.

The flash boards gave way Sunday night, about 12 o'clock, on the old Shaw dam, causing a good deal of excitement, and the water washed the road considerably, but no serious damage was done.

Mrs. Alvin Colburn was thrown from her carriage last Saturday, near the old Merrick place, while coming home from Palmer, and was quite seriously injured. Mr. Royce, who was driving, was thrown out, but not injured.

The annual reports of the town officers are out this week from the JOURNAL press, and show the principal expenses of the past year to be as follows: Schools, $1057; roads and bridges, $818; paupers, $664; town officers, $282; contingencies, $890. The town has liabilities outstanding to the amount of $675, and assets of $1653, showing a balance of $978 in favor of the town. The estimates for the coming year are: For schools, $800; paupers, $700; roads and bridges, $800; town officers, $300; discount on taxes, and incidentals, $300; total, $3050.

BELCHERTOWN.

Landlord Barry has rented nearly all his rooms at the hotel for the coming summer.

Edward Hopkins is making quite extensive repairs on his house, by putting double bay windows on the front. It is much improved in outward appearance.

During the past three weeks the people of this village have been saddened by the death of two of our prominent citizens, Mr. Calvin Bridgman, and Mrs. S. W. Longley, the latter having passed away this week, with typhoid pneumonia. Mr. Bridgman had a wide circle of friends, and by his death the community in which he lived feel they have lost a friend, as he was always kind and affectionate, and willing to give a helping hand to those in need. In his will he showed the interest he felt for the people of the town by leaving $6000 to be invested as a fund towards a select or high school, and $4000 to be kept in the same way for a library. He also left the Children's Mission in Boston $1000. After providing generously for his wife, the remainder of his property he left his nephews, sons of P. S. Bridgman. Mr. Bridgman had been a patient sufferer for the past five years, and often said he was ready when his summons should come. He leaves a wife, who feels his loss very keenly. Mrs. Longley was sick but a few weeks. She was an amiable lady, and in her home, as well as abroad, was cheerful and happy. Her husband is very feeble, not able to leave his house, and it is not expected he can long survive his wife. She left one child, George Longley, who is carrying on the mercantile business in this place, four children having passed from earth in former years. Her funeral was attended by Rev. P. W. Lyman Friday, at her home, at 2 1-2 p. m.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. M. C. Stebbins of Springfield will preach at the Union church to-morrow.

Rev. W. L. Noyes will commence his labors as pastor of the Union church the first Sunday in April.

Prof. Turner's entertainment for the benefit of the Union Sunday school came off on Monday evening.

The village schools began their spring term this week with an attendance of something over 200. The schools in the Baptist vestry now have some 70 scholars, and will probably number 80 when all are in.

Rev. Mr. Ricketts of Wales is supplying the Baptist pulpit regularly now. It is thought probable that the society at their annual meeting next month will vote to call W. A. McKillop of Newton to the pastorate of the church. He has preached here two or three times, and is very much liked by all who heard him.

About 75 members of the Union Sunday school called upon their superintendent, J. I. Milliken, on the evening of the 10th inst., to remind him of his 32d birthday. The company had not been long in the house when the Three Rivers Cornet Band commenced playing outside, and upon being invited in, entertained the company with their music very acceptably. During the evening, Mr. Buell, in behalf of the school, presented Mr. Milliken with a copy of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary and a copy of Smith's Bible Dictionary, making some appropriate remarks, to which Mr. Milliken responded. The whole affair was an entire surprise to Mr. Milliken, but was none the less enjoyable.

MONSON.

C. H. Dudley has sold his house on Washington street to W. H. Horton.

Whitmore & Clark's minstrels appeared at Central Hall Wednesday evening.

The public schools will commence April 10th. But few changes in the corps of teachers are expected.

P. A. Butler of Boston, who frescoed the library building, is now at work in A. D. Ellis's new house.

R. M. Reynolds bought the Hiram Newton homestead and thirty-two acres of land at auction on Thursday, for $6650.

Rev. C. H. Merrill will preach a temperance sermon Sunday afternoon in the Methodist church. The friends and enemies of license are invited.

David McMillen, who killed Father McCarthy, formerly of this place, at Greenfield last December, was indicted by the grand jury for manslaughter, on Wednesday.

The selectmen have secured the services of C. M. Stevens and wife to take charge of the poor farm for another year. They have already served in this capacity for the past nine years. There are 15 paupers on the farm at the present time.

There were 75 births, 35 marriages and 67 deaths in Monson last year. Fifty-five of the births were of American parentage, 14 of Irish, 3 of English and 1 each of French, Swedish and Norwegian. Of the deaths 63 were American, 3 Irish and 1 Swedish.

The library association have received possession from Chalmers Dale of New York of the library building erected by Mrs. Carrie R. Dale in memory of her father, Horatio Lyon, with a fund of $2,000, the income to be used in keeping the building in repair, paying the librarian, and purchasing and keeping in repair the books, etc. The building will be dedicated next Tuesday evening, the exercises being held in the Congregational church, and Rev. E. H. Byington will give the address. The library building will be open for inspection an hour after the dedicatory exercises, and no books will be issued till the next day.

Wm. Jarman, the ex-Mormon elder and priest, lectured at Central Hall Monday evening to an appreciative and intelligent audience. His thrilling statements of Mormon misery, crime and political aspirations, illustrated by calcium lights, so interested the people that he has been requested to come again, to which he has consented, and of which due notice will be given. It seems Mr. Jarman was not the only ex-Mormon priest present, for at the close of the entertainment in the semi-darkness of the room, he was addressed by an elderly man who said, "Brother Jarman, I know that all you said is true. I have been a Mormon elder and priest myself. The half can never be told," and giving the lecturer the Mormon grip, which none save those who have passed through the Endowment House can give, the stranger vanished as the lights were turned on.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The pay roll of the Otis company this month was over $30,000 for 24 days.

The new bell in the tower of Fireman's Hall was placed in position Tuesday.

The Boyle farm was sold Wednesday afternoon to Fred Sturtevant, of Ware, and Benjamin F. Davis, of Enfield, for $2400.

Business is increasing in town. A new bakery has been erected in the vicinity of Vigeant street, and is in active operation.

The council which met in reference to the ordination of Henry P. Perkins, on Thursday, adjourned for further consideration of the matter.

Arthur Campbell will take Harry Thurman's place as clerk in the post office. Thurman goes, April 3d, to Eastman's Business College.

W. L. Davison left for the West on Monday. If he finds business satisfactory, and does not return, Ware has lost one of her best young men.

Edgar H. Guild of this town graduated recently with high honors from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia.

The school board organized for the ensuing year Tuesday with Dr. W. W. Miner as chairman, and Charles E. Blood as secretary and treasurer.

Mrs. A. P. Clark, evangelist, will commence a series of meetings in Ware, to-morrow, in the Methodist church, assisted by other willing workers.

The new board of selectmen have posted notices notifying all persons illegally selling or having for sale liquors in the town of Ware to desist under penalty of the law.

Frank W. Sweet, of Hopkinton, is to be the new grammar school teacher. He is a graduate from the Bridgewater Normal school, and ex-teacher at the Westboro Reform school.

We clip the following from the Amherst items in the Springfield Union: "Messrs. Gilbert of Ware have given to the Gilbert museum a valuable collection of Indian relics collected by William Webster in the vicinity of Northfield."

A gang of boys, whose names are known to the police, prove to be the parties that have broken into Coney's store and other places in town. They ought to be sent to Monson for a while, and it is to be hoped that the authorities will see to it that they meet their deserts.

The village improvement society have chosen the following officers: C. C. Hitchcock, president; F. M. Sibley and E. H. Baker, vice presidents; F. D. Gilmore, secretary; W. H. Cutler, treasurer; L. W. Robinson, J. H. G. Gilbert and Chas. E. Blood, executive committee.

Maggie Connor, at work for Charles Harris on West Main street, in the house of John M. Barnes, fell on Wednesday from a platform, which was left without railing, some 12 or 15 feet to the ground. Although no bones were broken, it is feared that she is so injured that she may be crippled for life.

A boy by the name of King was found Saturday evening secreted in the engine house with two watches, $17.50 in money, and some other property he had taken from the stock of the auction store in the hall. He was brought before Justice Richards on Thursday, and after a hearing was let off on his good behavior, with L. W. Robinson as guardian.

It rejoices the hearts of all lovers of temperance that F. C. Blood has taken a firm stand in this matter by refusing to sell any spirituous liquors, except for strictly medical and mechanical purposes. It has been said that a temperance drug store cannot be made to pay. Now, then, let us practice as we pray, and patronize wholly and solely those who are willing to stand squarely by the right.

On the first Sunday in April the Unitarian church will again be opened for worship, as Rev. Mr. Stevenson has accepted the call. He will share his time with Hardwick. All our citizens will rejoice that the glad tidings of salvation will once more be told from all the churches in our village. May the parish experience continued prosperity, and the clouds that have overshadowed them so long now be forever dispersed.

The Clipper Base Ball Club have elected the following officers for the coming season: Manager and treasurer, Henry M. Clark; captain, Thomas Haley; first assistant, Geo. E. McGrath; secretary, Charles E. Cregan; field director, Joseph Thornton. The Clippers were very successful last year, winning 17 of the 21 games played. They expect to open the season Fast day, by a game with the Warren boys on Storrs' grounds.

Monday was a fine day for town meeting, and a large delegation of voters was out. Hon. Lewis N. Gilbert was chosen moderator and A. F. Richardson town clerk. But little scratching was done, and the result proved a Waterloo for the old board of officers. The following were chosen: Selectmen, J. H. Greenville Gilbert, Charles C. Hitchcock, Patrick McManus. Assessors, J. W. Breckenridge, Henry Basset, Wm. C. Eaton. Overseer of poor for three years, Ozias B. Owen; school committee for three years, John W. Cummings; road commissioner for three years, Francis Blair; treasurer, Otis Lane; auditors, F. M. Sibley, F. D. Gilmore; collector of taxes, D. P. Billings; constables, Henry O. Caryl, Maurice Fitzgerald, Henry Connell, Harry A. Carlin, Wm. Murray, Frank Ward. Four women voted for school committee. The only thing to be regretted is that the town voted in favor of license, by a vote of 269 to 243. The following appropriations were voted: Town debt, $5000; interest on debt, $2000; rent of Music Hall, $75; library, $1000 and dog tax; schools, $8000; school incidentals, $1000; salaries town officers, $1200; cemeteries, $200 and income from Ware R. R. stock; highways and bridges, $3500; street lights, $600; support of poor, $3000; Memorial day, $100; discount on taxes, $1500; sidewalks, $500; contingent expenses, $900; police, $1000; school house on North street, $5000; total, $34,475.

SHILOH'S COUGH and Consumption Cure is sold by us on a guarantee. It cures consumption. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

"A Royal Gentleman" is the title of another book from the graphic pen of Judge Tourgee, the famous author of "A Fool's Errand." It is to be sold by subscription.

It gives with wonderful power the very color and air of that sweet Southern land; the bright and sunny pictures of plantation life; the pleasant relations of white and black; the generous, impulsive, wayward character of the "young Southern blood;" the quaint, queer, and yet unmistakably accurate portraits of the Poor White, the Old Lawyer, the antique County clerk, and other local personages; the growth of the little quadroon darkey into the beautiful woman; the quick blast of coming battle; rapid pen-pictures of war and hospital scenes, with actual incidents in which Abraham Lincoln, Sumner, and other men of note figured during that grand period—and innumerable elements beside, go to help form this brillant and instructive picture of an era in our country's life that has now passed away forever.

It is the strongest presentation of the blighting effect of slavery upon the master race that has ever been penned. And it takes its place among Judge Tourgee's striking historical pictures as a worthy peer of the best of them, destined to hold his name in remembrance forever.

The book is brilliantly illustrated. Price $2.00. Where there is no agent for the work, it will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price. We understand the publishers desire to appoint an agent in this county. There ought to be no lack of applicants to represent an author like Judge Tourgee, whose books are for the million. For particulars, address D. L. Guernsey, 61 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

The Girl He'll Wed.

I shall wed a fair æsthetic,
Quite regardless of expense,
All I ask is that she's utter,
And in all things quite intense.
Limp, of course, and lank she must be,
Clad in minor tones of green,
Consummately soulful, earnest,
Must she be, my pretty queen.

We shall feast on lilies daily,
Quaffing draughts of beauty fair
With a dish of ferns on Sunday,
Or a peacock's feather rare.
Thus shall flow our lives forever,
Like two gently gurgling rills,
Breathing poesy and too-too,
And her dad shall foot the bills.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT.

AN UNUSUAL EXPERIENCE OF A PROMINENT MAN MADE PUBLIC.

The following article from the Democrat and Chronicle, of Rochester, N. Y., is of so striking a nature, and emanates from so reliable a source, that it is herewith republished entire. In addition to the valuable matter it contains, it will be found exceedingly interesting.

To the Editor of the Democrat and Chronicle:

Sir:—My motives for the publication of the most unusual statements which follow are, first, gratitude for the fact that I have been saved from a most horrible death, and, secondly, a desire to warn all who read this statement against some of the most deceptive influences by which they have ever been surrounded. It is a fact that to-day thousands of people are within a foot of the grave and they do not know it. To tell how I was caught away from just this position and to warn others against nearing it, are my objects in this communication.

On the first day of June 1881, I lay at my residence in this city surrounded by my friends and waiting for death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous, any one told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, had weighed over 200 pounds and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times that they are unusually tired and cannot account for it. They feel dull and indefinite pains in various parts of the body and do not understand it. Or they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me first began. Still I thought it was nothing; that probably I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a dull, and at times neuralgic, pain in my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid but little attention to it. However, my stomach was out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet I had no idea, even as a physician, that these things meant anything serious or that a monstrous disease was becoming fixed upon me. Candidly, I thought I was suffering from Malaria and so doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I next noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that a persistent froth and scum appeared upon the surface, and a sediment settled in the bottle. And yet I did not realize my danger, for, indeed, seeing these symptoms continually, I finally became accustomed to them, and my suspicion was wholly disarmed by the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I cannot understand.

There is a terrible future for all physical neglect, and impending danger usually brings a person to his senses even though it may then be too late. I realized, at last, my critical condition and aroused myself to overcome it. And, Oh! how hard I tried! I consulted the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the prominent mineral springs in America and traveled from Maine to California. Still I grew worse. No two physicians agreed as to my malady. One said I was troubled with spinal irritation; another, nervous prostration; another, malaria; another, dyspepsia; another, heart disease; another, general debility; another, congestion of the base of the brain; and so on through a long list of common diseases, the symptons of all of which I really had. In this way several years passed, during all of which time I was steadily growing worse. My condition had really become pitiable. The slight symptoms I at first experienced were developed into terrible and constant disorders—the little twigs of pain had grown to oaks of agony. My weight had been reduced from 207 to 130 pounds. My life was a torture to myself and friends. I could retain no food upon my stomach, and lived wholly by injections. I was a living mass of pain. My pulse was uncontrollable. In my agony I frequently fell upon the floor, convulsively clutched the carpet, and prayed for death. Morphine had little or no effect in deadening the pain. For six days and nights I had the death-premonitory hiccoughs constantly. My urine was filled with tube casts and albumen. I was struggling with Bright's Disease of the Kidneys in its last stages.

While suffering thus I received a call from my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, rector of St. Paul's Church, of this city. I felt that it was our last interview, but in the course of conversation he mentioned a remedy of which I had heard much but had never used. Dr. Foote detailed to me the many remarkable cures which had come under his observation, by means of this remedy, and urged me to try it. As a practicing physician and a graduate of the schools, I cherished the prejudice both natural and common with all regular practitioners, and derided the idea of any medicine outside the regular channels being the least beneficial. So solicitous, however, was Dr. Foote, that I finally promised I would waive my prejudice and try the remedy he so highly recommended. I began its use on the first day of June and took it according to directions. At first it sickened me; but this I thought was a good sign for one in my debilitated condition. I continued to take it; the sickening sensation departed and I was able to retain food upon my stomach. In a few days I noticed a decided change for the better as also did my wife and friends. My hiccoughs ceased and I experienced less pain than formerly. I was so rejoiced at this improved condition that, upon what I had believed but a few days before was my dying bed, I vowed, in the presence of my family and friends, should I recover I would both publicly and privately make known this remedy for the good of humanity, wherever and whenever I had opportunity. I also determined that I would give a course of lectures in the Corinthian Academy of Music of this city, stating in full the symptoms and almost hopelessness of my disease and the remarkable means by which I have been saved. My improvement was constant from that time, and in less than three months I had gained 26 pounds in flesh, became entirely free from pain and I believe I owe my life and present condition wholly to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy which I used.

Since my recovery I have thoroughly investigated the subject of kidney difficulties and Bright's Disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately, and as a physician, that I believe more than one-half the deaths which occur in America are caused by Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. This may sound like a rash statement, but I am prepared to fully verify it. Bright's Disease has no distinctive symptons of its own, (indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the Kidneys or their vicinity,) but has the symptoms of every other known complaint. Hundreds of people die daily, whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate of "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," and other common complaints, when in reality it was Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence by the commonest symptoms, and fastens itself upon the constitution before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, and as such is usually supposed to be heart disease. As one who has suffered and knows by bitter experience what he says, I implore every one who reads these words not to neglect slightest symptoms of Kidney difficulty. Certain agony and possible death will be the sure result of such neglect, and no one can afford to hazard such chances.

I am aware that such an unqualified statement as this, coming from me, known as I am throughout the entire land as a practitioner and lecturer, will arouse the surprise and possible animosity of the medical profession and astonish all with whom I am acquainted, but I make the foregoing statements based upon facts which I am prepared to produce and truths which I can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may possibly be sufferers such as I was, is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if I can successfully warn others from the dangerous path in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all professional and personal consequences.

J. B. HENION, M. D.

Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 30, 1881.

For the first time in ten years Governor Long failed, the other day, to attend the Hingham town meeting, of which he had been moderator nine times in succession.

WHAT WE OWE TO EARTH WORMS.

Dr. Charles Darwin has published a book which is destined to create a profound as well as an amusing impression. It is entitled "Vegetable Mold and Earth-Worms," and it goes to prove that this wriggling, slimy little creature is one of the most useful and beneficent of the various forms of life inhabiting the globe.

The earth, it seems, would practically be a desert were it not for the worm. The vegetable mold which makes soil fruitful is due to its labors, and the secret of its value is that it eats dirt, which has been so well characterized as "matter in the wrong place." In one acre there is an average of 53,767 worms. The prodigious result of their labor is shown by an investigation of a field in Kent, England, where Dr. Darwin found that the worms had thrown up digested soil amounting to eighteen tons to the acre in one year. On a sandy soil at Leith-Hill the investigation showed sixteen tons per acre. Although at work only half the year, the sum total of their activity is stupendous. The great naturalist calculates the actual weight of the soil rendered serviceable by the worm for Great Britain alone, since its appearance there, at the enormous total of 320,000,000,000 of tons. Man subsists on animal and vegetable food, but there would be very little of either were it not for the worm.

It will not do, therefore, any longer to despise the worm. Indeed, not only is it useful in creating the mold which makes the earth fertile, but it helps also to preserve for man the memorials of the past. Its mission is to cover all naked surfaces with its ejecta. The earth which passes through its intestinal canal is rendered soft and fertile, and covers and preserves whatever it is deposited upon.

The legislature to be elected next month in Rhode Island will choose a successor to Senator Anthony. He is now approaching the close of his fourth term of continuous service in the Senate, and if he lives to complete another term, to which there is little doubt of his election, he will have equaled the famous thirty years of Thomas H. Benton.

A recent examination of the physical causes which may produce shortsightedness so common among students and others who work by artificial light tends to show that it is not the light so much as the heat which produces that abnormal condition of the eye. This fact, if it be a fact, furnishes another argument for the electric light.

After examination of more than 18,000 persons by the London Ophthalmological society, its secretary publishes some curious information about color blindness. One of the most singular facts recorded is that this defect in vision is far more common among men than among women, the exact percentage being respectively 4.16 and 0.4.

It is announced that a herd of 11,000 sheep has just arrived at Lincoln, Nebraska, from Washington Territory. The journey has occupied two years. The trail from Washington Territory to the Missouri River is said to be the longest and hardest known to stockmen. Three years is often consumed in a drive over it.

Richard Jahr, a German student in photography, has successfully accomplished a scientific feat never before attempted, in photographing President Garfield's tomb by moonlight. The camera was in position seven hours before the negative was perfected.

A newspaper advertisement reads thus: "Wanted: A saddle horse for a lady weighing about 950 pounds." Another reads: "Wanted—A young man wanted to take charge of a pair of horses of a religous turn of mind."

When Vermont was first admitted into the Union it was given two representatives in Congress. This number was afterwards increased to six. Now, after a period of 90 years, the State returns to the original number.

The House committee on ways and means at Washington is in favor of the Carlisle internal revenue bill, which proposes to reduce the taxes on whisky, and repeal the tax on proprietary medicines, matches, perfumery, etc.

Francis Murphy, the Pennsylvania temperance advocate and originator of the "blue ribbon" movement, has been conducting successful temperance mass meetings in Manchester, England.

A dancing master at Ithaca, N. Y., waltzed for three hours without losing step. He got over ten miles of space in the time, used up seventy partners and wearied two orchestras.

The violation of any of nature's laws brings its warning by the feeling of discomfort. Exposure will induce colds, throat diseases, consumption etc., all of which give warning by a troublesome cough. Use Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in time, and remove both the cause and effect of your discomfort.

It is worth remembering that nobody enjoys the nicest surroundings if in bad health. There are miserable people about to-day with one foot in the grave, when a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic would do them more good than all the doctors and medicines they have ever tried. See adv. m

MOTHER DIED OF SALT RHEUM.—J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this county. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies." m

A PLEASANT LETTER.

IT RINGS OF A GRATEFUL HEART AND GIVES HONOR WHERE HONOR IS DUE.

Mr. William W. Chadwick, of Hatchville, Conn., writes under date of June 14, 1880, to Dr. Kennedy, to say that the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" has cured him of Gall Stone, from which he had experienced anything but comfort for a long time. Mr. Chadwick felt wholly cured when he wrote, and says: "I have had no pain for six months, and have also regained my flesh and can stand a fair day's work. I recommend 'Keunedy's Favorite Remedy' to any one suffering from a deranged liver." Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them, expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your liver disordered? Have you derangement of the kidneys or bladder, associated with constipation of the bowels? If so, you want "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Dr. Kennedy practices medicine and surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. WHEAT BITTERS.

THE BEST AND THE RICHEST

BLOOD, BRAIN AND NERVE FOOD.

CAREFULLY PREPARED,
THOROUGHLY TESTED,
ACCEPTABLE & RELIABLE

The Phosphates of the Wheat are its most valuble food property, and are, when properly prepared, the most acceptable nutriment with which to build up the system.

The Blood, Brain and Nerves are the forces which bear the strain of every day work and life, and in order to save sickness it is wise to

BUILD FOR HEALTH.

Wheat Bitters are prepared, not by fermentation, but by solution, and are richest in the Phosphates, while the starch and impure matter are eliminated. These make in themselves a basis, to which is added the best and choicest medicinal qualities, necessary to make it a tonic and bitter. It is at once healthful, pleasant to the taste and must not be confounded with the thousand and one cheap alcoholic bitters which are sold as cure-alls. Medicine is doubly effective when used with food, so as to nourish while it corrects.

Sold by druggists, $1.00 per bottle.

GOLD. Great chance to make money. Those who always take advantage of the good chances for making money that are offered, generally become wealthy, while those who do not improve such chances remain in poverty. We want many men, women, boys and girls to work for us right in their own localities. Any one can do the work properly from the first start. The business will pay more than ten times ordinary wages. Expensive outfit furnished free. No one who engages fails to make money rapidly. You can devote your whole time to the work, or only your spare moments. Full information and all that is needed sent free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

THE STEINWAY PIANO

IS THE

STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE.

Facts, say the professors, are obtained by the concurrent opinion of the largest number of people best able to judge. This principle applies to the Steinway Pianos, as the largest number of people pronounce them to be the best, and the firm is doing the largest volume of business of any piano-making concern in the world. Purchasers by paying $75, $100, $150, $200, or $300, according to the style, more for them than for any others; dealers, by comparing every other piano with them; makers, by putting their pianos below them in price, and then claiming that they are pretty nearly as good, because they "have some of Steinway's workmen," or "a foreman from Steinway's," or "use Steinway's scale," etc., etc., all proclaim that the

STEINWAY

IS THE ACKNOWLEDGED STANDARD PIANO.

This fact is being established that the Steinway is the best: of course the next best is that which is nearest like it, which purchasers can decide for themselves by listening and comparing with the standard.

CUTICURA.

Geo. W. Brown, 48 Marshall St., Providence, R. I., cured by Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) of a Ringworm Humor got at the barber's, which spread all over his ears, neck and face, and for six years resisted all kinds of treatment.

SKIN HUMOR.

F. H. Drake, Esq., agent for Harper & Bros., Detroit, Mich., gives an astonishing account of his case (eczema rodent), which had been treated by a consultation of physicians without benefit, and which speedily yielded to the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally.

SCALD HEAD.

H. A. Raymond, Auditor F. W., J. & S. R. R., Jackson, Mich., was cured of Scald Head of nine years' duration by the Cuticura Remedies.

ECZEMA.

Hon. Wm. Taylor, Boston, Mass., permanently cured of a humor of the face and scalp (eczema) that had been treated unsuccessfully for twelve years by many of Boston's best physicians and most noted specialists, as well as European authorities.

MILK CRUST.

Mrs. Bowers, 143 Clinton St., Cincinnati, speaks of her sister's child, who was cured of milk crust which resisted all remedies for two years. Now a fine healthy boy, with a beautiful head of hair.

FALLING HAIR.

Frank A. Bean, Steam Fire Engine 6, Boston, was cured of Alopecia, or falling of the hair, by the Cuticura Resolvent (blood purifier) internally and Cuticura and Cuticura Soap (the great skin cures) externally, which completely restored his hair when all said he would lose it.

TREATMENT.

The Cuticura treatment consists in the internal use of the Cuticura Resolvent, the new blood purifier, and the external use of Cuticura and Cuticura Soap, the great skin cures.

CUTICURA

REMEDIES are for sale by all druggists. Price of Cuticura, a Medicinal Jelly, small boxes, 50c.; large boxes, $1. Cuticura Resolvent, the new blood purifier, $1 per bottle. A Quaker Sermon.

It was the first-day meeting,
And the group of gathered folk
Sat touched by the hush of a voiceless spell;
No sound the silence broke.

Until, in her place on the woman's side,
With a sweet and tender face
That bore the pure and peaceful sign
Of the inward spirit's grace,

A white-haired woman rose with the word
That was laid on her heart to say—
The word that the gathered people
Were waiting that sunny day.

"Sister Tabitha all to pieces
My best china teapot broke;
But I kept my soul in patience,
Not a word of anger spoke."

That was all; and down with the sunshine
The silence again fell sweet,
Till the elder people gave the sign
That the service was complete.

Do you say that the hour was wasted?
That the sermon was trivial, vain,
Textless, devoid of logic,
Unthrilled by one eloquent strain?

Not so; for that gospel is sweetest
That is won through life's fret and its pain;
That softens the jar of its friction,
And lightens the stress of its strain,

And the love that is over the erring,
The peace untouched by surprise,
The quiet that keeps its sweet patience,
Are dear in its Master's eyes.

While many a rhetorician
Might learn from this homily brief,
A truth that the wearied people
Would hail as a glad relief—

That the lesson is most enduring,
Close to life's practical lines,
And not the length, but the fitness,
The heart of the hearer inclines.

And we all in our plain home duties
Find the thought in this first-day word,
That the least of our trials and triumphs
Has a worth in the sight of our Lord.

GIANT'S CASTLE.

The western sun was resting for a single moment upon the shoulders of the gray and hoary mountains, casting a last bright glance behind him, ere he sank to rest beyond the faraway Pacific, the purple shadows of the ridge creeping slowly downward over bluff and precipice waved a silent greeting to their graver sisters, as, slowly uprising from the canons and gorges, the distant cry of a lonely bird floated downward through the listening air, and as it passed a mighty stillness fell over all, while along the eastern horizon black night began to frown.

Two weary travelers—nor yet travelers, for both were frontiersmen and miners—who were slowly climbing the rugged face of the ridge, paused as they reached its verge, and without speaking, looked sharply about them for several moments, examining all the ground carefully; then one uttered a low growl of satisfaction, and, pointing through the gloaming toward the south, he turned to his waiting companion and said:

"Here's the trail, Tom, an' the reds 'll pass the Giant's Castle over there afore moon up to-night, if they're after us. This yer war the way Black Jim went, an' he war a p'intin' for the Apache country fast enough. Ef the bloody cut-throat can git the Injuns to help him, they'll go for our ranche sure, but ef they don't come, we're safe, for to-morrer we will light over the range for good. The minin's good, but the country is gettin' too hot for us. It's a shame ye missed that dog to-day, fur otherwise we'd been safe under cover now, an', the world rid of a rascal, instead of dodging about hyar in the shadders to save our scalps. Howsomever, ye missed him, an' now my plan's to climb the Giant's Castle an' wait fur morning. Ef the reds come they won't find us at home, an' ef they don't come no great harm's done; and ef they smell us out of the castle, we could kill the entire party afore they could get at us."

The speaker paused and drew a long breath, fairly astonished and wearied at his own unusual loquacity, and his companion, changing his Winchester from one shoulder to the other, replied:

"Ye're right, Dick! It war a pity that I missed the outlaw, but it war only a snap shot. I won't do so again. Yer plan fur the night is a good one. Lead on!"

With rapid and almost silent steps the two passed over the ridge into the blackness of the gulf beyond.

And as they disappeared, there arose close to the ground whereon they had been standing, from behind a gnarled and stunted cedar-thicket, the figure of a man. Carefully he peered about him, gazing sharply into the darkness that had swallowed up the others, listening with waiting ear for any sound that might indicate their return, and at last rising to his full height, he stepped quietly forth and dropping his rifle-stock to the earth, he chuckled softly and with a wicked meaning to himself:

"So ye'll hide from Black Jim an' the Apaches in Giant's Castle? Good! Ye thought Black Jim would be simple when he failed yer swag once, to run away. Fools! I had a chance at yer gold to-day an' lost it; ye had a crack at me, an' missed. We're even, but it's my turn next; an' the shinin' dust that you fellers have in yer waist-belts shall be mine afore sun-up, or I'm a half-breed. What I'm after is the gold, my pards, an' ef ye stay on Castle rock, it's mine."

As he ceased his soliloquy, the outlaw, stooping almost to the earth, crept rapidly away into the darkness, following the course taken by the others.

Tom Nutting and Dick Moore had been for a month prospecting in Hidden valley without molestation. Fortune had smiled upon them, and their buckskin bags were almost full, when returning unexpectedly to their rude cabin that very afternoon, Tom had surprised Black Jim, the noted deperado of the mountains, and a man who had been driven from mining camps as a thief, prowling near, had shot at and missed him, and had seen him speed away to the westward, toward the section where were roving the blood-thirsty Apaches.

Thoroughly acquainted with the immediate danger of their situation, for their visitor was in league with all the Indian bands for one hundred miles about, the two miners at once packed the gold dust in their belts; seized their arms and pursued the scoundrel—only to lose him, however, in the windings of the mountains and the shadows of the coming night. Then dreading the fate that might overtake them in their cabin, should Black Jim return, they decided to remain in the mountains till morning when, protected by the daylight, they might gather their few effects and escape over the range.

They chose Giant's Castle—a massive pile of ragged rock some two hundred feet in height, with but two points where it could possibly be scaled,—for their refuge, on account of its inaccessibility, and as well for the guard which they might maintain therefrom upon all the Indian country and the trail into Hidden valley.

A brisk walk of twenty minutes brought the miners to the foot of the castle; a struggle of ten minutes placed them at its summit.

Night had now fairly fallen, and the stars were beginning to shine. The howl of a distant coyette calling to his faithless mate was the only sound that broke the quiet night air. The two men seated themselves.

"Tom," said Moore, in a half-whisper, "ther's jest two places where the reds could get up if they tried, and one man armed as we are," —patting his Winchester and touching his knife—"kin keep an army down. You stay here ahind this yer rock, an' I'll take keer of the other place over yonder. We'd better not sleep—anyhow not until after moon-up. Should anything happen, jes' croak twice, an' I'll be with ye. The same for me. Watch out now!"

"Agreed," said Tom.

And his companion crept away in the shadows, to hide himself close to where the other pathway reached the top of the castle. This point faced the east, while the one guarded by Nutting was approached only from the west.

Black night had now drawn its sable curtains, and but for the rents through which peeped the winking stars, entire darkness shrouded the scene.

Yet to the watches this made little difference. Educated by frontier life, and trained in Indian warfare, their ears were eyes to them when the light was gone, and the slightest sound was easily understood in the absolute quietness of the night, as though they plainly saw the thing which caused it. And so, motionless, each in his place, they kept their solitary guard.

Far away a lonely wind soughed among the tall pines upon the ridge; but its breath swept not about the Giant's Castle, and the ever repeated cry of the wandering coyette, now near and again far, was for a long time the only animate sound that broke the hushed silence.

The moments passed, slowly it is true, and yet one by one until hours had fled, and away to the east there came a brightening glow, as of a growing fire, and beyond the ragged mountain tops the night blush, "faint and silvery," then Dick knew the moon was rising.

"This 'ere's a hard bed," muttered that worthy, as he cautiously arose from his half-reclining position and stretched himself. "It's nigh about midnight, I reckon, an' I doubt the red's comin' after this. I wonder how Tom stands it?"

Leaning his rifle against a jagged boulder, the frontiersman stepped lightly across the rough summit of the castle a half-dozen rods to the spot where he had left his companion.

To his surprise it was empty.

"Where the deuce,"—he growled, when he was suddenly interrupted by the cry of a coyotte near at hand.

He started and listened intently.

"Ef that ain't a two-legged wolf," he whispered excitedly to himself, "then I never heard one. Where is Tom?"

He dropped on his hands and knees and crawled around the verge of the rock. At this point there was an almost perpendicular descent of some twenty feet to a ledge or shelf of rock upon the face of the cliff, which shelf was a part of the very pathway by which they had ascended and might be easily reached by a winding trail. As he peered into the darkness beneath him, the coyotte's howl rang out mournfully from below, and was answered from a ridge half a mile away.

"That's queer! The cry was human, or I am no jedge, but the other was a genuine Kiote. What kind of trickery is this? Ah, ther's Tom!" he continued, joyfully, "asleep below thar. Jest like the careless cuss. The reds might carry him off 'eff he didn't depend on my ears!"

The silver rim of the coming moon appeared above the distant mountains. Moore drew himself carefully into the shadow, so that he might see but not be seen.

"Now, I'll watch a bit. Ef that wolf howls again, I kin spot him certain an' know whether he is copper-colored or gray."

Motionless as the rock about him he waited.

Once or twice the distant, genuine whine reached his listening ears, but there came no response from below.

The queen of night climbed slowly up the eastern sky, flecking the plain with moonlight and shade. The soft breezes that always travel in her train swept gently by, laden with fresh and piney odors.

Tom's figure, outstretched in deep slumber upon the rock-shelf beneath, came more boldly into view, but the suspicious wolf-bark did not sound again.

A full hour passed, and there had been no repetition of it.

"Thar's somethin' wrong," muttered Dick, with bated breath—"somethin' wrong. The more I think o' that call, the more sure I am that it war out of a human throat. I'll go down an' wake Tom an' talk a bit with him."

He arose to his feet, still standing in the shadow, and was on the point of turning toward the trail that led to the ledge whereon Tom was, when he suddenly paused—motionless, as if cut from stone!

And this is what he saw:

Close beneath him, at the very edge of the shelf where his friend lay, appeared a wolf, nose in air, his ears up-lifted—a wolf with shaggy head and hide, but with hands and feet for paws! It was an Indian!

Horror-stricken, poor Moore could not move, he was helpless. The savage was almost within arm's reach of his still sleeping companion; an instant more and the fatal blow would be struck with the long knife that glittered in one hand, while he (Moore) was unable to prevent it, for he had but his knife by him, and a single move to regain his rifle would but discover all and hasten the horrible tragedy.

Knowing the bloody deed that was about to take place before his very eyes, while he stood helpless, the hunter fairly sickened. It was terrible.

Suddenly, however, a gleam—a desperate gleam—lit his bronzed features. He leaped a little forward and gazed sharply down.

The murderer was at Nutting's side. Already he had drawn his arm back for the fatal blow. Moore waited no longer.

Crouching a single breath's space, he uttered a wild yell, and sprang outward and downward, shooting through the air with fearful momentum, and falling with a mighty crash directly upon the redskin, crushing him senseless to the earth.

Instantly Nutting was upon his feet, wide-awake, and as Dick, bruised and half-stunned, staggered backward, clutching his knife, Tom thrust him away and sprang to the side of their prostrate enemy, his own weapon upraised.

But the man never moved; he was dead.

And as the miners drew the wolf-skin mask from his face, there peered out at them, not the copper-hued visage of an Indian, but the face of the desperado—Black Jim!

* * * * *

Moore's arm has knitted long since—it was badly broken by his wild fall—and both Tom and he mine the western wilderness no more; but above their cabin door, in the little town where they dwell, there hangs a heavy knife, whose blade is deeply bitten by red and dark stains, and to each it vividly recalls the memory of the night they passed long ago on Giant's Castle.

CONTRARY BILLY.

Billy was a peddler's horse. Every day he drew a large wagon along the country roads. This large wagon was loaded with tin and brooms. It was a heavy to load to draw. He stopped at all the houses, so that his master could sell the brooms and tins. One day, after he had trotted along for several miles, Billy stopped where there was no house in sight.

"Go along!" said his master.

"I won't!" said Billy.

"This is the way Billy said "I won't." He set his fore feet out. He laid back his ears and shook his head.

His master got out of the wagon and patted him on the neck.

Billy would not stir.

He moved all the harness here and there, and patted him more.

Billy would not stir.

He talked to him in a very pleasant tone. What was to be done?

The peddler wished to sell his brooms and tins, and go home to supper. But he could not do this if Billy refused to do his part. He went to the back of the wagon. A gentleman who passed by thought he was going to whip the horse with some heavy thing. Instead, the peddler took a pail from the wagon. There was some meal in this pail. He showed this to Billy—then he walked on and set the pail down.

Billy could see the pail.

Pretty soon Billy lifted his ears. He looked very good-natured. He went forward to the pail.

Then his master let him eat the meal. Then put the pail back in the wagon, and Billy trotted off briskly with his load.

The meal was better for Billy than the whip.—Little Folks' Reader.

MARRIED FOLKS WOULD BE HAPPIER

If home troubles were never told to neighbors.

If they kissed and made up after every quarrel.

If they tried to be agreeable as in courtship days.

If household expenses were proportioned to the receipts.

If each would try and be a support and comfort to each other.

If each remembered the other was a human being not an angel.

If women were as kind to their husbands as they are to their lovers.

If fuel and provisions were laid in during the high tide of summer.

If both parties remembered that they were married for worse as well as for better.

If men were as thoughtful for their wives as they are for their sweethearts.

If there were fewer silk and velvet street costumes and more plain, tidy house dresses.

If there were fewer "please darlings" in public and more common manners in private.

If wives and husbands would take some pleasure as things go along, and not degenerate into mere toiling machines. Recreation is necessary to keep the heart in its place, and to get along without it is a big mistake.—Sunday Courier.

FERRETS.

The full-grown ferret is about fourteen inches long, and is noted for its great strength and boldness. Ferrets are bred quite extensively in Europe, for hunting rabbits, rats, and mice. Though regarded as a domesticated animal, the ferret is far from docile, and never shows an affection for those who care for it. The natural instinct of the animal is so strong that it does not need to be trained to attack its prey, though practice improves the animal in its work, the chief gain being in allowing themselves to be more readily caught. The ferret is always muzzled to prevent it from killing its prey; if this precaution is not taken, it will suck the blood of its victim, and fall into a sleep from which it will not arouse until the food is digested. When sent out muzzled the ferret will return after the hunt to receive food. It runs into the burrows of the rabbits, for which animal the ferret seems to have a natural enmity, and drives the timid creatures out, where they are caught in nets and snares set for the purpose. A ferret will soon rid a house of rats and mice, and it is for this purpose principally that the animal is now bred and cared for by man.—American Agriculturist.

An Italian who it is, perhaps, unnecessary to say has lived some time in America, has come to the conclusion that it is a huge basin of petroleum under Vesuvius which keeps the bowels of that interesting mountain in a constant state of ebullition, more or less active. He therefore proposes to dig a tunnel at its base, tapping the great cauldron, and thus putting the mountain at rest and securing an unlimited supply of petroleum.

A gentleman met an "uncertain" acquaintance, who said: 'I'm a little short, and should like to ask you a conundrum in raental arithmetic.' 'Proceed,' returned the gentleman. 'Well,' said the 'short' man, 'suppose you should have ten dollars in your pocket, and I should ask you for five dollars, how much would remain?' 'Ten dollars,' was the prompt answer.

A contempory asks: "How shall women carry their purses to frustrate the thieves?" Why, carry them empty. Nothing frustrates a thief more than to snatch a woman's purse after following her half a mile, and then find that it contains nothing but a recipe for spiced peaches and a faded portrait of her grandmother.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

My little brother was about four years old when his father died. He had been taught that God formed man out of the dust of the earth. In order to comfort his sorrowing mother, he said to her one day: "Can't God get dirt enough to make another father?"

A Wife's Appeal.

Thou hast a sorrow,
Confide it, love, to me;
Let me help thee bear it,
Whatever it may be.
Have I not been faithful?
Have I not been true?
Ministering to thy happiness
As only love can do.

Then let me share thy burden,
Whatever that may be,
Be it of sin or sorrow,
Lay it in part on me.
I will be forgiving
If wrong thou'st done by me,
If thou by others hast been wronged
I'll share thy griefs with thee.

I know thy heart is troubled,
I see thy brow o'ercast,
And thou hast had some struggle,
Some conflict scarce yet past.
Then suffer not in silence,
To me thy grief impart,
And learn how true th' devotion
Of a loving, faithful heart.

MORMONISM IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

A writer in The Congregationalist recalls memories of the attempt of Mormonism to gain a permanent footfold in New Hampshire. The mother of Joseph Smith was a native of the town of Gilsum in that State. Naturally, therefore, efforts were early made by the 'apostles' to convert their relatives there. Accordingly Smith and some of his associates labored there for some time, but without success. But in 1841 certain 'elders' from abroad held a protracted meeting in town, the result of which was a small band of converts from this and surrounding towns, who were organized into a 'branch' of the Church of Latter Day Saints. This had an existence of a few years, with meetings held in various places, and then had to pass through the fire of internal dissensions over the matter of discipline. In 1849 a new branch was formed, one of the elders of the parent church coming here for the purpose. It was made up largely of those who had been excluded from the original branch. In 1855 this was reorganized by one of the elders from Utah. But these Latter Day Saints never have been very active or harmonious, and so never have gained many to their belief. However, for forty years, at times, they have contrived to act as a thorn in the flesh to the little Congregational church in the place. Of the original members, some went to Utah, a part perishing on the way, and some became apostates, so that now only a very few open believers are known to remain. One of these was ordained to the eldership, in Peterboro', N. H., in 1844, by Brigham Young and Orson Pratt, and to the high priesthood in Philadelphia, in 1856, by John Taylor and N. H. Felt.

OIL UPON THE TROUBLED WATERS.

The completest demonstration ever made that the soothing effect of oil on troubled waters can be put to practical use was made by Mr. John Shields of Perth, England, on March 1. Having chosen Peterhead as the most suitable place for his experiment, Mr. Shields caused iron and lead pipes to be laid from the beach into the sea in front of the entrance into the harbor. A force pump was attached to the land end of the piping, and near it was placed a large barrel containing 100 gallons of oil. On the above date Mr. Shields, having been informed by the Meteorological Office that the sea was rough at Peterhead, went thither from Perth, accompanied by several seafaring men from Dundee and Aberdeen. When the white-crested waves were rising to a height of ten to twenty feet at the harbor entrance the oil pump was put in motion, causing the oil to spread in the bottom of the sea, and on its gradually rising to the surface the white foam entirely disappeared, and, although the swell continued, the suface of the sea was perfectly smooth, so that a ship or a small boat could have entered the dock without the slightest danger—an impossibility before the oil was distributed in the water. The experiments satisfied the shipmasters who witnessed them. Mr. Shields is willing to give any harbor board the benefit of his invention, and render assistance in carrying it out.

A man from the country stepped into a gun shop on Austin avenue to purchase a gun. A muzzle loading gun was shown him, but he said he preferred a breech loader. 'On account of its being easier and quicker to load?' 'No, it's not that. I had an old musket I loaded at the muzzle, but it went off at the breech, and nearly blew my head off. Instead of a gun that loads at the muzzle and fires off at the breech, I want one that I can load at the breech and fire off at the other end.'

A young curate having preached before his vicar for the first time, asked that worthy at the close of the service which passage in his sermon he thought the best, to which the vicar made reply: 'Your passage from the vestry to the pulpit was very fine; but commend me to that from the pulpit to the vestry for downright, heart-relieving effect.'

"Don't waste your time clipping off the branches," said a woodman to his son, "but lay your axe at the root of the tree." And the young man went out and laid his axe at the root of the tree, like a good and dutiful son—and then went fishing. Truly, there is nothing so beautiful as filial obedience!

The importance of a knowledge of the culinary art to ladies is illustrated by this incident: An old woman who had never fallen out with her husband, on being asked the reason, said: 'When I was young, I won my husband's heart; now I am old, I have won his stomach.'

'What good deed have you done to-day, Johnny?' said a benevolent father to his heir. 'I gave a poor boy a cent papa,' was the good child's answer. 'Ah! that was right. And why, my son, did you give him the cent?' 'I gave it to him, dear papa, for a good three cent stamp that he thought was only a piece of green paper.'

A Philadelphia man went to Washington on purpose to get Guiteau's autograph in his album, and then proudly exhibited the trophy to his pretty sweetheart. The girl explains the scene that followed by saying that "she was not anxious to marry a born fool."

Anna was out one afternoon with her parents when a well dressed colored woman met them. The little girl looked at her very attentively, and just as she was passing, said: "I think that is a burnt lady.

VERBOSITY.

Young newspaper reporters and writers usually have a good deal of "overflow"—some so much that they seem to think the main object of writing is to fill up space. They make a paragraph out of a squib, and a page out of an item. The New Haven Register thus caricatures one green hand:

Young Fitznoodle has just entered journalistic life, and is going to "cut a swath." He believes in putting in a good deal of "color" in his items, and prides himself on his work. He sharpened a couple of pencils at both ends, this morning, and began:

"We regret to inform our readers that the estimable Mrs. Jones, of Jonesboro, daughter of Congressman Jones, and grand-daughter of the well-known founder of the village of Jonesboro, has met with a fearful accident.

"As she was driving along the boulevard at the speed of the wind, the horse, a half-brother of Maud S., and full sister of St. Julien, became suddenly startled by the uprising of a covey of partridges, which are unusually numerous in that section this season, and promise a great deal of fun for the sportsmen when the law is off—and as they circled, the frightened steed tore down the avenue like mad, until stopped by the gallant hand of Officer 73, of the Ninth Ward.

"Her injuries were a contusion of the ankle, which did not amount to a fracture; and the unfortunate girl was carried home to her grief-stricken parents and sympathizing friends."

The city editor, at this point, was anxious for copy, and glancing it over rapidly, crumpled it in his hand, remarking: "Fitzy, you have piled up the words, haven't you. You have given all your fancy painted. Good boy! But remember, this department is the domain of fact." He then scribbled:

"The daughter of Congressman Jones was run away with by a spirited horse, on the avenue, yesterday afternoon. Injuries nominal."

GONE WITH A HANDSOMER MAN.

A Burlington man recently wedded a young wife. The lady became enthused over Will Carleton's tale of the elopement of a handsome young woman with a "handsomer man" and determined to try the same thing herself. She wrote a neat little note, stating that she had left home with a gentleman whom she dearly loved before she had met her husband, and that he need not trouble himself to look for them. Then she called her younger brother and went calling with him, arranging to return and hide where she could witness her liege lord's dismay when he came to read of her flight. She, from her place of concealment, saw him enter, saw him look all around in surprise at her absence, and finally saw him discover the note. He opened and read it, while her heart beat high with excitement in anticipation of the breaking out she expected to hear. The poor fellow finished the cruel missive, tore it up and threw the fragments on the floor, and then, without a moment's warning, he drew a revolver and fired point blank at his breast, and fell without a sign of life to the carpet. With a terrified scream, the woman was at her husband's side in a moment, lifting his head, rolling him, shaking him, turning him, and hunting for blood, all the time shrieking to her William to speak to her, to forgive her, to only look at her. William lay motionless, however, and the neighborhood, aroused by the shot and screams, came flocking in to learn the excitement, when suddenly a score or more being gathered, the dead leaped up from the floor as well as ever, at which the wife fainted away. She soon revived, however, and then it all came out that the younger brother being in sympathy with William, had let him into the scheme, and he had chosen that mode of punishing his joking wife. She jokes no more, but her husband has compromised on a pony phaeton to keep peace in the family.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Once upon a time a woman died, and, as the mourners were carrying her to the grave, they tripped against a stump and let the coffin fall. She revived, having only been in a deep trance. Two years afterward she really died, and as they were carrying her down the same road and neared the same stump, the disconsolate widower sobbed: 'Steady, boys! Steady there! Be very, very careful!'

SATURDAY, APRIL 1, 1882.

MASON, the soldier who attempted to shoot Guiteau, is likely to be released from imprisonment soon, Judge Advocate Swaim having decided that the proceedings of the court martial were invalid.

WHITTAKER, the colored cadet whose ears have given the military authorities so much trouble, has been dismissed from West Point because of deficiency in studies, and this is the last the country will probably hear of him.

SPEAKER NOYES put his foot in it badly, Wednesday, when he declined to vote on the prohibitory bill. The tie vote put him in an unexpectedly tight place, and he hadn't the courage to put himself on record either way. Massachusetts is not in the habit of electing for Governors men who dodge in this way, Mr. Speaker.

AFTER debating the subject at length for several days, the House of Representatives at Boston on Wednesday refused to pass the prohibitory bill to be engrossed, by a tie vote of 110 to 110, Speaker Noyes declining to vote. No effort was made to reconsider the vote on Thursday, and the measure is accordingly dead for this session, which is probably just as well, in the existing state of public sentiment. If the license law continues to be enforced as loosely in the future, however, as it generally has been in the past, there will in time be a change in public sentiment which will demand and rigidly enforce a prohibitory law.

IN the death of Henry W. Longfellow, which occurred last week Friday afternoon, at his home in Cambridge, not only has Massachusetts lost an honored citizen, but the world has lost one of its leading and most charming poets. He was a writer of verse before entering college at the age of 14. He graduated at 18, was a professor at Harvard 17 years, and was twice married, the sudden death of his second wife giving him a shock from which he never fully recovered. He was eminently the people's poet, and in all lands his work was known and loved, while he was personally as lovable as his sweetest poems.

"Death makes no conquest of this conqueror;
For now he lives in fame, though not in life."

Official statistics show that in Connecticut there is one liquor shop to 235 inhabitants; in South Carolina, one to 910; in Maine, one to 791; in Massachusetts in 1881, one to 245. Last year there was substantially the same number of liquor shops in Massachusetts that there was in North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Florida combined, although this vast territory contained a population nearly three times as great as that of the Bay State.

Governor Jerome, of Michigan, has given public recognition to the benevolence of the country in relieving the forest fire sufferers, by issuing a card of thanks. He says that "the need of individual assistance is now happily ended. Contributions at the present time have been equal to the earlier and most pressing necessities, and the State has made provision for the future."

Eight Frenchmen landed in New York the other day, each of them leading a huge bear. The custom house officers didn't feel like confiscating the bears when they found that the owners were impecunious, and gladly passed them, duty free. The Frenchmen propose to use them in the West for drawing carts, work to which they have been trained.

Gen. George E. Lane, a member of the Governor's staff in New Hampshire, treasurer of the county of Rockingham and president of the Union Five Cents Savings Bank of Exeter, is confessedly a defaulter in the sum of $45,000. About $20,000 was taken from the county and $25,000 from the bank treasury. Stock speculation.

A tremendous storm beat upon Cape Ann on March 18, and the next day the waves ran so high that hundreds of weather-seasoned people to whom great seas are no novelty gathered along the shore near Rockport to watch the breakers. The breakwater, which had never been properly finished, suffered severely.

The people of New Orleans have decided to abandon the idea of celebrating the bi-centennial anniversary of La Salle's discovery of the mouth of the Mississippi River, on account of the prevailing flood, and they almost wish the river had never been discovered.

The steamer Thomas Cornell, from Rondout for New York, was wrecked on the Hudson River, 10 miles south of Poughkeepsie, Monday night, by running on the rocks. No lives were lost. The loss on the boat will exceed $200,000.

Casey, who has had charge of the blacksmith department of Tuthill's carriage shop for the past three years, has this week moved to Springfield, where he takes the foremanship of the same department in Rogers's carriage manufactory. G. G. Belcher of Spencer succeeds Mr. Casey in Tuthill's shop.

Brick, stone and lumber are arriving daily now at the site of the new wire mills. The excavation for the drawing house is complete, and work is now begun on the foundation. Four double tenement houses, each 29 by 41 feet, are to be built soon, near the mills, by Madison & Lyman, for the use of the employes of the mills.

The directors of the Palmer National Bank have declared a semi-annual dividend of 3 per cent, payable to-day. The business of the bank continues in an excellent condition, and the surplus fund now amounts to $15,000, $1500 being added to it from the earnings of the last six months, while $750 has been applied to the reduction of the furniture account, and $300 was carried to profit and loss.

Catherine Griffin of Bondsville was before the district court last Saturday on the charge of illegal selling of liquor, and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment, and to pay a fine of $250 and costs. She appealed, and furnished bonds in the sum of $500. There were three other cases against her, which were continued until to-day. Catherine is an old offender, and seems determined to sell liquor without a license in spite of the law.

Miss Emma Weller of Winchendon sang in the Universalist choir last Sunday, and is expected to sing there again to-morrow. Miss Weller has sung in opera during the winter, and is a most accomplished soprano. The audience were so delighted with her voice that four members of the parish at once pledged $100 apiece if her services could be secured. A subscription paper is in circulation for this purpose, and it is probable that Miss Weller will be engaged for the coming year at a salary of $500 and expenses. Dr. Stowe, the leader of the choir since its organization, has been induced to reconsider his recently-tendered resignation, and will continue in his old position for another year.

The annual meeting of the Universalist parish was held on Monday evening, when the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: Clerk, George Robinson; treasurer, Samuel W. French; parish committee, Marshall W. French, R. L. Goddard, J. A. Squier, O. M. Graves, Stillman Ellis; music committee, Dr. W. H. Stowe, Frank Sedgwick, Miss Jennie Kenerson, Samuel W. French, A. H. Willis; ushers, Truman Griswold, W. Barnes, Everett Sedgwick, Frank Hamilton, William B. Ham. A committee consisting of Mrs. S. S. Taft, Mrs. E. H. Davis, Mrs. J. F. Holbrook, George Robinson and Frank Sedgwick was also appointed to make arrangements for the installation of the new pastor, Rev. E. A. Perry. The pews in the church will be rented this evening.

Mrs. Stevens, sister of Mrs. J. A. Squier of this place, and wife of Merrick R. Stevens, a prominent citizen of Newton, was instantly killed by the cars at the Newton station last week Thursday afternoon. Her husband had left her at the station to take the 4.30 train for Worcester, and when in two or three minutes he returned from hitching his horse, he was met at the door of the waiting room by some ladies who told him that his wife had been killed. For some unknown reason she had started to cross the track to gain the opposite platform, not noticing that the 4 o'clock fast New York express from Boston was rapidly approaching the station, and she stepped directly in front of the engine, which struck and threw her a considerable distance, killing her instantly, though her body was hardly mangled at all. The engineer, when he saw Mrs. Stevens on the track, sounded his whistle, but she was so close to the engine that it was too late for her to get out of the way. She was 66 years of age, and leaves one son and four daughters, one of whom is teacher of vocal music at Wilbraham Academy.

The Palmer correspondent of the Sunday Republican sets forth the attractions of our village in these words: "Only a few years ago Palmer village was regarded by outsiders, far and near, and somewhat justly, as a 'hell on earth.' The rum sold and consequent drunkenness on our public streets, and our general depravity, made the name of Palmer an unenviable by-word. The building of a lock-up, the establishing of a district court and the advent of so efficient an officer as Deputy Sheriff Palmer has changed all this. To-day Palmer village is one of the most orderly in the State. To the person of comfortable means it really has become one of the most desirable locations for a home. Situated as we are at the intersection of important railway lines, with 38 passenger trains each day coming and going in all directions, we feel that we have every convenience the cities enjoy for the rapid dispatch of business. Our town finances are in admirable shape, and we are of that happy, though limited, band of towns enjoying the real blessing of being out of debt, with money in the treasury. Taxes in Palmer for years to come, if no unforeseen calamity befalls us, will be reasonably low. A good percentage of the moneys raised are already expended for improvements that still further strengthen our position instead of going to lessen a debt that slowly consumes the vital energy of so many towns. Our mortality statistics show us to be one of the healthiest villages in the country. A naturally dry situation renders us free from malaria. Our national and savings banks are models of their kind and our hotels have an equally good reputation far and wide. Our social characteristics are superior to those of most villages. With manufacturing concerns all about us we are particularly free from the unpleasant raw foreign influence common to a "mill town." Our Good Templars, Odd Fellows and Masonic lodges are in a flourishing condition. The churches, five in number, financially are sound and their doctrines usually well followed, but, as in all villages, there is plenty of Christian work for home missionaries to do. With a large public hall, a really flourishing agricultural society, an excellent free public library liberally maintained by the town and good citizens, a high school and superior schools of different grades, reliable merchants, good physicians, lawyers plenty, a model newspaper, lots of good citizens, fair ladies, now and then a dismal 'old maid' and 'crusty bachelor' and occasionally a 'hard citizen' for comparison, who can but admit that Palmer village is certainly a desirable abiding place?"

Editor Journal:—Have the voters of Palmer examined that portion of the town report which refers to the addition to the school house in our village? In 1880 the town appointed a committee to examine the house in question, together with other duties, and report at a future meeting whether or not an addition could be made that would meet the needs of the school and at the same time look well architecturally. That committee reported at a subsequent meeting that such an addition could be made, having employed an architect from Springfield, by the name of Gardner, to examine the building and estimate the cost, which would not exceed $1700. Last Spring the town voted to build on an addition, and appropriated $2,500 for the same, and appointed as a building committee, the school committee, selectmen and the town treasurer (a committee which surely should have guarded the funds of the town), but as usual with large committees they delegated to one or two of their number who lived in the village the duties of construction. What is the result? We find probably the most dangerous building, in case of fire, in all Western Massachusetts. Six school rooms to be emptied through one spaceway about eight feet wide, with doors opening in, and a stairway at each door. Shall we school our children in such a death trap? What has it cost us? We find on page 27 of the report twenty items under the head of general repairs, twelve of which (being about two-thirds of all the money expended for repairs) should be added to the construction account, and we have the sum of $4,037.98; and we are told in Mr. Strong's report that the committee were unanimous, with but one exception, and the money has been paid from the treasury—$1,537.98 more than the appropriation—and what can we do about it? From three to five hundred dollars more must be expended to put the building in a safe condition, and should be done before another session of school is kept. We learn from two members of the committee that the plan adopted embraced a stairway and entrance upon the north side, which would have made the building safe. Why was it not done? Who took upon himself the responsibility to change the plans? Let the town inquire. Is it not about time we gave our treasurer positive instructions not to pay out one dollar of the town's money except for the object for which it was specially appropriated? no matter if he is one of the committee on school houses.

TAX PAYER.

THORNDIKE.

A sociable was held at the vestry of the Congregational church Friday evening.

A collision occurred Tuesday afternoon between two teams near the bridges, which badly damaged one of them.

The old storehouse at the corner of Church street and the Ware road, which was recently sold, is being prepared, apparently, for occupancy.

WALES.

E. Cady has built an addition to his barn for sheds and storing purposes.

Carlos E. Bond narrowly escaped a 25-foot fall by a staging giving away Wednesday, while painting on Mrs. Carlton's house.

J. Bissell has put a veranda on the front of Mrs. Carlton's store, which adds much to the comfort of the place, as well as beautifying it.

E. Sibley, having sold all his real estate in Warren to Mrs. E. Ramsdell, and closed his business in this town, will, much to the regret of his many friends, leave town to sojourn in some other portion of the globe. He leaves here next Tuesday.

BONDSVILLE.

F. C. Cook, our new livery man, has arrived, and will occupy a tenement in Mrs. Squier's house.

It is rumored that we are to have a new dealer in ice, from Palmer. Nothing certain, however.

The bridge material has arrived for the new iron bridges which are to span the river and canal near the proposed new mill, and they will at once be placed in position.

John Johnson, a machinist who has been in the employ of the Boston Duck Co. for the past ten years or more, and a faithful workman, has started for Minnesota, where he will engage in farming. He has the best wishes of all his numerous friends.

BRIMFIELD.

A citizens' caucus was held last evening, to nominate officers for the town election next Monday.

The parishioners of Rev. S. V. McDuffee called upon him Thursday evening in goodly numbers, and spent a pleasant evening in social converse.

John Haley of this town was the recipient of a valuable present last Saturday, the occasion being his birthday. Reference to our birth column will more fully explain matters.

The report of the town officers shows that the expenses of the past year have been as follows: Highways, $1120; bridges, $374; snow paths, $249; schools, $1751; school houses, $67; paupers, $1413; officers' salaries, $567; miscellaneous, $502; unusual, $270.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. W. L. Noyes will occupy the pulpit of the Union church for the first time as pastor Sunday morning.

The breaking of a gear in one of the wheels in the Palmer mill, made it necessary to shut down the mill for repairs about 11 o'clock Thursday. It started up again Friday morning.

The Baptist vestry in this village has been in great demand the past winter. Besides being used by the church for prayer meetings, Sunday schools, sociables, etc., and by the town for two of its public schools, it has been occupied by bell ringers, traveling theatricals and clog dancers, gift entertainment, spiritual seances, dramas in both the English and French language, etc. During the present week the French Catholics have been holding services in it. There is a feeling on the part of some of the members of the church that the vestry should not be let so indiscriminately, while others say that the condition of the funds justify them in letting it to any one whom they think will not "pull it down."

LUDLOW.

Herbert Paine has been elected superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school, and Alfred Putnam secretary.

Ludlow bears off the palm as an anti-license town, only one vote being cast in favor of license at the late town meeting, while over 60 were thrown on the opposite side.

A. H. Putnam of Rockville, Ct., has bought the Fletcher place, and proposes to build a house for himself on one of the vacant lots. Mr. Putnam has spent a busy life at railroading, as agent at Windsor Locks and Rockville, Ct., and superintendent of the Rockville Railroad in its day. He resigned recently, and now proposes to return to his native place to spend the remainder of his days.

The Methodist church elected the following officers at the last quarterly conference: Trustees, E. E. Fuller, Wesley Alden, C. S. Bennett, H. Barker, George Green and Adin Whitney; stewards, Marvin King, John Banister, A. Bennett, C. L. Bennett, Wesley Alden, Adin Whitney and E. E. Fuller; district steward, E. E. Fuller. It was unanimously voted to request the return of the pastor, Rev. W. H. Adams, for another year.

WILBRAHAM.

Town meeting comes next Monday.

James King sold all his personal and real estate at auction Thursday.

Miss Carrie Farnham has opened a select school in Prof. Parker's house.

Chas. Corbin entertained the last farmers' club of the season Monday evening.

Geo. Eddy has been widening his store and repainting both store and barn, and Wells Phelps's house has received a new coat of paint.

At the Republican caucus Wednesday the following nominations were made: Selectmen, M. F. Beebe, Hiram Danks, P. P. Potter; assessors, C. E. Peck, H. H. Burbank, A. Chilson; town clerk and treasurer, C. E. Stacy; school committee for three years, Jesse L. Rice. Dr. S. Foskit and E. H. Cutler are the Republican town committee.

About 125 of the friends of Dr. and Mrs. S. Foskit gathered at the hotel on Thursday evening, and the doctor and wife were sent for. On their arrival they were presented with two easy chairs as a token of good will, Rev. M. S. Howard making the presentation speech, which was happily replied to by the doctor. A collation was partaken of, and a social time enjoyed by all.

HAMPDEN.

Some loud talk was heard at one John Sweeney's a few nights since, but Sweeney's nephew, John Smith, was only on a little "bum." If John does not mind, he may find himself in smaller quarters than with his uncle.

Political matters connected with town offices are all the talk just now. Mr. Spellman, who has the past year been one of the selectmen, leaves town May 1st, and cannot serve another year. It is also understood that Mr. Smith, another of the old board, desires to be left off. Mr. Beebe, the chairman, would like another year's service, and should be elected. On Wednesday evening the Republicans nominated Decius Beebe, Wm. R. Sessions and Andrew Beebe for selectmen. They are not all Republicans, but all should be elected. There are those who are not quite satisfied, however, and a citizens' caucus was called for Thursday evening. If the Republican nominees will stand, they cannot be equaled; the other officers nominated by the Republicans might be improved. We have had much fault with the former board of assessors. Next Monday is the time for improvement; all can use pasters and scissors, and get the best. There should be this year a complete revision of the property of the town, and a new valuation made, and voters should think of this when voting for assessors.

WARREN.

Union services Fast day.

All the schools commence next week.

The public library have added 1500 new books the past year to the library.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. Emery Shumway Wednesday evening.

The Ladies' Missionary Society hold their annual meeting Fast day and choose officers for the year.

A party of young people spent a very pleasant evening with George Tarbell at his home in Brimfield Thursday evening.

The Warren Congregational Society held their annual meeting Wednesday afternoon, and chose officers for the ensuing year.

Joseph Ramsdell has sold his residence on Crescent street to Mr. Comins, and purchased a building lot of Frank Sibley, and will erect a house this spring.

Lewis Elwell, postmaster at West Warren, has sent in his resignation, and a petition has also gone to the department for the appointment of Charles B. Elwell to the office.

There was a temperance praise meeting last Sabbath evening at the town hall. Much interest was manifested, and an earnest appeal made to citizens to be at the town meeting next Monday, and elect officers who would see that the law was enforced.

The receipts of the town last year, including balance of $689 brought over from the previous year, were $41,167. The expenses were $41,498. The selectmen expended $26,651 and the school committee $8499, the latter exceeding the appropriation by $726. The net debt is $24,615, a decrease of $2433 from last year.

MONSON.

Patrick Shea has his dwelling nearly completed, the painters being at work finishing the inside.

W. K. Stebbins, a long-time teacher in our public schools, has accepted a position in the Springfield post office.

Uncle John Ferry is gladly welcomed by the people, as he visits us with choice and fresh garden vegetables.

Both the straw shops are rushing on spring orders, and the woolen mills and quarry are having their full quota of help.

Joel H. Thompson has his new dwelling house on Hampden Avenue up and inclosed, and hopes to have it finished by the first of May.

G. H. Newton sells the furniture of the North Village boarding house at his auction rooms next Wednesday, commencing at 10 o'clock.

E. P. Newton has under consideration the purchase and occupancy of the old Newton homestead, where his father and grandfather lived and died.

The painters and paper hangers are now so driven that it is almost impossible to get any work done in that line, unless previous engagement has been made.

W. K. Flynt has been quite ill of late, being troubled with two abscesses, but is now somewhat improved, and his friends hope to see him out before many days.

As the M. E. Conference does not sit until April 12th, Rev. Mr. Merrill will furnish his parishioners with extra sermons, getting in one or two more Sabbaths than usual.

The entertainment given by the senior class of the academy last week passed off very pleasantly. The excellent music furnished by the Arion Orchestral Club of Springfield was highly appreciated.

Another story is being added to Hutchinson's blacksmith shop, which will be used in the wagon business, and Mr. Hutchinson has excavated in the hill and will put up another building in the rear of the shop.

At the sale of slips of the Congregational church last Wednesday evening, although the premiums did not draw out many large bidders, the slips were freely taken, and a good start made for another year.

Mr. Jarman, the ex-Mormon elder, will deliver his second lecture at Central Hall next Tuesday evening. He will give an account of the Danites, Mormon dungeons, and his own personal experience, as far as time will permit. A change of views is promised. Any of the views shown before may be seen again if desired. This will doubtless be a lecture of intense interest, and a large house is anticipated.

Town meeting occurs on Monday, and it is probable the old board of officers will be continued, their showing for the past year being very acceptable to the tax payers, as the town was some $4000 in debt at the commencement of the year, and is now reported to be out of debt, with a $600 balance in favor of the town. It is probable that the town will vote the usual appropriations for yearly expenses, and there would seem no reason why the taxes should be increased the coming year, unless a new school house or town hall shall be projected, of which there is some talk.

The Congregational church was literally packed last Tuesday evening, the occasion being the dedicatory services of the Lyon Memorial Library building, which was presented to the library association by the late Carrie Lyon Dale, as a memorial of her father, the late Horatio Lyon. Dr. G. E. Fuller gave a very interesting account of the rise and progress of the association, and also the architectural plan, design, and features connected with the building, which is of granite, built by Messrs. W. N. Flynt & Co., is fireproof, and has all the modern conveniences, water, gas, etc. The interior is handsomely frescoed and well furnished. The oil painting, true to nature, of the late Mr. Lyon, hangs opposite the main entrance. The stained glass windows, and in fact everything connected with the building, is first class, and can but be appreciated by a discerning public. The clock, with illuminated dials, is from the Howard Manufacturing Co. of Boston, and is the third clock the Howards have put in town. Mrs. Lyon has given $20,000 as a fund for the support of the library, and the town has annually voted from $300 to $500 for new books. Rev. Mr. Byington delivered the dedicatory address, and pointed out the differences between the old libraries of our fathers, and the free libraries of to-day, together with many other items of interest in connection with the new library, all of which, by vote of the audience, will soon be published in pamphlet form.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The organization of an encampment of Knight Templars in Ware has been given up.

An unknown man and woman were seen a few days since coming down South street, the woman too drunk to go, and the man pounding her to make her stand up.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union have engaged Mrs. M. A. Livermore to give her new lecture, "The Boy of To-day," in Music Hall the 17th of April.

C. W. Eddy delivered his illustrated lecture, "An Evening with the Microscope," to a good audience at the Congregational church, Gilbertville, Wednesday evening.

T. E. Busfield, who was for a short time teacher of the high school here, has won a $300 prize for excellence in all departments in the theological school at Rochester.

Dr. King, a native of this town, who for some years has been located at Otis, has returned to Ware to reside, and it is reported that he is to open an office in the village.

C. F. Edmonds was surprised by a large party of his friends on Wednesday evening, his birthday, and presented with an elegant easy chair. They staid late and had a very enjoyable time.

All of the village schools begin on Monday, with few changes in teachers. Frank W. Sweet takes the grammar school, and Miss Susie Bond is to take the school on West street formerly taught by Miss Byrns.

Some of the saloons here, in obeyance of the orders of the selectmen, stopped selling liquors, probably imagining that by so doing they are more likely to get licenses by the first of May; but the prospect looks dark for some of them at least.

Rev. Mr. Holt of Creighton, Nebraska, where C. F. Pierce, formerly of this town, resides, has been in town the past week, and preached for Dr. Perkins Sunday in the forenoon, in the interest of his church in Nebraska, and in the evening an earnest discourse on temperance. While in town he received over $400 for the aid of his church.

The annual meeting of the Unitarian society was held on Monday evening. The following officers were elected: Prudential committee, C. A. Stevens, Aram Warburton, S. S. Bonney; clerk, John W. Robinson; treasurer, C. E. Stevens. Voted, that services commence Sunday at half past one in the afternoon, and each Sunday hereafter at the same hour. The pews are to be rented this (Saturday) afternoon at 5 o'clock.

At the parish meeting of the East Congregational society, W. C. Eaton, C. C. Hitchcock and E. H. Baker were chosen parish committee; clerk, G. K. Cutler; treasurer, P. H. Sagendorph. Voted, to grant to Dr. Perkins a four months' vacation, with his salary continued, for his European trip, the pulpit to be supplied by the society during his absence. Voted, that the thanks of the society be given the Otis Company for the conveyance of land upon which the new chapel stands, for a small part of its value.

The musical people of the town are looking forward with anticipations of a rich treat in the concert by the Ware Musical Society on the evening of Fast day. The society has had an unusually successful season of rehearsals under the direction of Mr. E. N. Anderson, who is doing more than any one we have ever had in town before to educate the people of the town to an appreciation of the best in the musical line. Mrs. G. Arthur Adams of Boston will assist at the concert, and all who heard her when she was here before, will be sure to want to hear her again. The following programme will show that the tastes of all have been cared for in its preparation:

Chorus: "Heavens are Telling,".....Haydn.
Trio: "Now to the Forest,".....Bishop.
Quartette: "Soft Floating on the Air,".....Root.
Chorus: "Italia,".....Donizetti.
Song: Selected, by Mrs. Adams.
Trio: "Ye Shepherds Tell Me."
Chorus: "Loud the Storm," air from Ricci.
Chorus: "Zion Awake," .....Costa.
Song: "The Vagabond," by Mr. Anderson..Mallay.
Quartette: "The Old House.".....McGranahan.
Solo and Chorus: "Hail, Festal Day," air from Rossini.
Quartette: "Pro Phundo Basso,".....Bliss.
Song: Selected, by Mrs. Adams.
Chorus: "Hallelujah,".....Handel.

FIRES.—Richmond, Va., was visited last Sunday by a serious conflagration, second only to the one which occurred in 1865 on the evacuation of the city by the rebel troops. The loss is estimated at over half a million dollars.——A large tenement block at Ansonia, Ct., was burned early Monday morning, two men perishing in the flames, while several barely escaped with their lives.——Amherst College suffered a great loss Wednesday evening in the burning of Walker hall, the finest of the buildings, together with its valuable mineral collection of over 10,000 specimens, paintings, and valuable archives. The building was of granite, and only the walls are left standing. The total loss is $225,000; insured for $72,000. The cause of the fire is a mystery.——The steamer Golden City was burned on the Mississippi, near Memphis, Thursday morning, and 20 lives were lost.

Dr. D. N. Lewis of Louisville, who is dreadfully deformed, has been sentenced to pay $3000 damages to Miss Sallie Johnson, a noted beauty, for breach of promise of marriage. A mutual friend induced them to correspond, and Lewis made such an impression by his letters that the lady was ready to overlook his unpleasant physique. They became engaged, but he broke the engagement, and a suit ended in his defeat, in spite of the argument of his counsel that she ought to be glad of a release from so unsightly a lover.

The South church at Springfield celebrated its 40th anniversary last Sunday. Rev. Dr. S. G. Buckingham, the pastor, preached a historical discourse in the morning, and in the evening Rev. Dr. Noah Porter, president of Yale College and first pastor of the church, reviewed the theological changes of the past forty years.

A man at Sheffield, Ga., while plowing, the other day, turned up a glass jar containing several thousand dollars in gold. If his success would only induce the lazy "crackers" of the South to go to plowing generally, it would be a fine thing for them, whether they found any gold or not.

According to the Delaware papers the prospect is good for the coming peach crop in the great peach-growing region along the middle Atlantic seaboard. The outlook is excellent not only for peaches, but for an abundant fruit supply generally.

The revision of the Old Testament is finished, with the exception of Ecclesiastes and the Songs of Solomon. The second revision will take the whole of 1882, and the finished work will be published in 1883.

Iowa has finally abolished its October elections and joined the November States. As Indiana has made the same change, Ohio remains the only important State voting in October.

Another unsuccessful attempt was made last week Thursday night to burn the Highland Military Academy at Worcester, and three of the boys are under arrest on suspicion.

Capt. Stewart, of the steamer City of Lincoln, jumped overboard off Fire Island, Sunday, while in a fit of delirium tremens, and was drowned.

The Catholics of Holyoke are about build another $50,000 school [illegible] of their parochial schools.

Books and Magazines.

The April number of the Eclectic is at hand and contains a large number of noteworthy and readable articles. The table of contents is as follows: "Science and Morality," by Professor Goldwin Smith; "A Modern Solitary" (meaning Obermann, the German Mystic); "Romance of Business;" "Electric Progress;" "Lines to a Lady who was Robbed of her Jewels," by Francis Hastings Doyle; "The Revision of the French Constitution," by Joseph Reinach; "Mr. Swinburne's Trilogy on Mary Queen of Scots," by G. A. Simcox; "Fashions and Physiology," by J. Milner Fothergill, M. D.; "'Let Nobody Pass:' A Guardsman's Story;" "National Wealth and Expenditure," by M. G. Mulhall; "Oddities of Personal Nomenclature;" "Crab Gossip;" "The Ameer's Soliloquy;" "The Crisis in Servia," by O. K.; "Robert Southey and Caroline Bowles;" "Prince Potemkim;" "Degeneration." Besides these there are four well-filled editorial departments, literary notices, foreign literary notes, science and art and miscellany. Published by E. R. Pelton, 25 Bond Street, New York. Terms, $5 per year; single copy, 45 cents; trial subscription for three months, $1.

The April Atlantic maintains well the high standard of varied excellence and interest which recent numbers have reached. Besides two additional chapters of Mr. Bishop's serial, "The House of a Merchant Prince," and the conclusion of Mr. Lathrop's serial, "An Echo of Passion," Miss Elizabeth Stuart Phelps begins a new serial story entitled "Dr. Zay," which cannot fail to attract very general attention. The author of "The Gates Ajar" and "The Story of Avis" is sure of a host of readers for whatever she writes. John Fiske contributes a popular scientific article of great interest entitled "Europe before the Arrival of Man." Charles Wood writes an excellent appreciative article, "A Hindu Reformer," giving an account of the life and religious views of Chunder Sen. Readers of short stories will be strongly attracted by Miss Woolson's "In Venice," and Mr. Deming's account of "Jacob's Insurance." "Shakespearean Operas" are discussed by A. E. Barr; Eugene W. Hilgard has an interesting paper on "Progress in Agriculture by Education and Government Aid;" Edward Farrer contributes a very enjoyable article on the "Folk Lore of Lower Canada." There are several poems, reviews of many of the more important recent books, and a diversified Contributors' Club, completing a very interesting number of this sterling magazine. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

In the North American Review for April, Governor Eli H. Murray, of Utah, treats of the existing crisis in the political fortunes of that territory. According to the present method of local government, the minority of the population, the Gentiles, though they possess the greater part of the wealth of the territory, exclusive of farm property, and constitute by far the most enlightened and enterprising portion of the community, are practically without a voice in legislation. The author proposes a drastic yet practicable remedy for these and the other evils prevalent in Utah. An article entitled "Why they Come," by Edward Self, is devoted to the consideration of the many important questions connected with European immigration to this country. Dr. Henry A. Martin, replying to a recent article by Henry Bergh, defends the practice of vaccination, citing official statistics to prove its efficacy. E. L. Godkin has an article on "The Civil Service Reform Controversy;" Senator Riddleberger on "Bourbonism in Virginia;" and General Albert Ordway on "A National Militia." Finally there is a paper of extraordinary interest on the exploration of the ruined cities of Central America. The author, Mr. Charnay, has discovered certain monuments which conclusively prove the comparative recentness of those vast remains of a lost civilization. The Review is published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and is sold by booksellers and newsdealers generally.

It is reported that a gin house in Tensas parish, La., in which 120 negroes had taken refuge, has been carried away by the flood and all the negroes drowned.

Hardy's studio, 310 Main street, Springfield, is supplied with the latest processes for taking photographs.

Either a good many people are getting married, or Ray, 443 Main street, Springfield, is making more than his share of wedding suits.

The well-known and artistic milliners, Lazelle, Dawes & Estey, 358 Main street, Springfield, give their spring opening of millinery on Wednesday, April 5th. Their parlors are now beautiful with the new spring styles, and no lady can fail to find something choice, tasteful and elegant amid such a large stock of well-selected and handsome feathers, plumes, flowers, ribbons, laces and hats. The proprietors omit cards this season and invite all.

For lame back, side or chest use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Price 25c. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, will have their grand millinery opening Tuesday and Wednesday, April 4th and 5th. A special effort has been put forth to make this the largest and most elaborate display ever show in that city. The public are cordially invited.

Forbes & Wallace would call the attention of the wholesale millinery trade to the extensive alterations made in their wholesale millinery department. This is now up-stairs in a large and well-lighted room, easy of access from the store. They are fully prepared to show a complete line of all the latest novelties in the market at prices which defy competition.

THAT HACKING COUGH can be so quickly cured by Shiloh's Cure. We guarantee it. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

It is a year since Foster, Babbitt & Chapin, "The Three Clothiers," of Springfield, opened their prosperous clothing store. Having met with flattering success, they now come to the front with a large and choice stock of suits and furnishing goods for men, boys and children. They have secured this rapidly increasing patronage by selling at one price, low for cash, good goods in an honest way, and by their willingness to exchange or take back goods not proving satisfactory. In the line of boys and children's suits they are without a rival in the city. They have lately added a hat and cap department, and placed it in charge of C. M. Lee. They have also opened a branch store in Holyoke.

CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH and Bronchitis immediately relieved by Shiloh's Cure. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

The color and lustre of youth are restored to faded or gray hair by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, a harmless dressing highly esteemed for its perfume and purity, m

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

It is useless to deny that the brightest and fairest fall easy victims to consumption, and equally fruitless to ignore the fact that decline has its origin in many cases in neglected catarrh. Sanford's Radical cure is a pure, sweet, balsamic specific. m

WILL YOU SUFFER with dyspepsia and Liver Complaint? Shiloh's Vitalizer is guaranteed to cure you. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Death to rats, mice, roaches and ants—PARSON'S EXTERMINATOR. Barns, granaries and households cleared in a single night. No fear of bad smells. Best and cheapest vermin killer in the world. sold everywhere. m

CATARRH CURED, health and sweet breath secured by Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cts. Nasal Injector free. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

SHILOH'S VITALIZER is what you need for constipation, loss of appetite, dizziness, and all symptoms of dyspepsia. Price 10 and 75 cents per bottle. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it. Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

We Two.

My home? Well, 'tis a small affair,
I presume you'd think 'twould hardly do,
But then for style we don't much care,
And it doesn't take very much room for two.
'Tis a breezy place, where the trees embrace
And knit their boughs in a filmy lace,
But a sunbeam or two comes sifting through,
And a little makes happiness for two.

The house? Yes, 'tis old-fashioned quite;
Eight rooms or such a matter there;
But the flowers dance in the sunlight bright,
And our hearts know little or naught of care.
So the love lit days like a purple haze,
Go drifting out in a blisstul maze,
And affection anew sings the whole day through,
And we are happy enough for two.

This land is as fair as fair can be,
With the woods and hills, and the matchless sky,
With the waving grain, and the flower-decked lea,
And the beautiful brook that babbles by.
So hand in hand, by Love's breezes fanned,
We journey on to the "Silent Land."
If the world goes too, how can we rue?
When none are happier than "we two."

EXCITEMENT IN ROCHESTER.

THE COMMOTION CAUSED BY THE STATEMENT OF A PHYSICIAN.

An unusual article from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, was republished in this paper and was a subject of much conversation, both in professional circles and on the street. Apparently it caused even more commotion in Rochester, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well known not only in Rochester but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper, a few days since which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal enquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed an editorial necessity.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion, at his residence on St. Paul street, when the following interview occurred:

"That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. Few people ever get so near the grave as I did and then return, and I am not surprised that the public think it marvelous. It was marvelous."

"How in the world did you, a physician, come to be brought so low?"

"By neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had headaches; I felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull and indefinite pains and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious."

"But have these common ailments anything to do with the fearful Bright's disease which took so firm a hold on you?"

"Anything? Why, they are the sure indications of the first stages of that dreadful malady. The fact is, few people know or realize what ails them, and I am sorry to say that too few physicians do either."

"That is a strange statement, Doctor."

"But it is a true one. The medical profession have been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is high time it ceased. We doctors have been clipping off the twigs when we should strike at the root. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of Bright's disease even more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough, but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, stomach, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said that more than one-half the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it Doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of so-called diseases are torturing people to-day, when in reality it is Bright's disease in some of its many forms. It is a hydraheaded monster, and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, pneumonia, malarial fever and other common complaints, which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy—Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter and I think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also. Why, there are no end of truths bearing on this subject. If you want to know more about it go and see Mr. Warner himself. He was sick the same as I, and is the healthiest man in Rochester to-day. He has made a study of this subject and can give you more facts than I can. Go, too, and see Dr. Lattimore, the chemist, at the University. If you want facts there are any quantity of them showing the alarming increase of Bright's disease, its simple and deceptive symtoms, and that there is but one way by which it can be escaped."

Fully satisfied of the truth and force of the Doctor's words, the reporter bade him good day and called on Mr. Warner at his establishment on Exchange street. At first Mr. Warner was inclined to be reticent, but learning that the information desired was about the alarming increase of Bright's disease, his manner changed instantly and he spoke very earnestly:

"It is true that Bright's disease has increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that in the past ten years its growth has been 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off: Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wilson, Carpenter, Bishop Haven and others. This is terrible and shows a greater growth than that of any other known complaint. It must be plain to every one that something must be done to check this increase or there is no knowing where it may end."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it, Mr. Warner?"

"Hundreds of thousands. I have a striking example of this truth which has just come to my notice. A prominent professor in a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. In order to draw the contrast between healthy and unealthy fluids he had provided a vial the contents of which were drawn from his own person. 'And now, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the unhealthy indications, I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health,' and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command both left him and in a trembling voice he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery, I have Bright's disease of the kidneys,' and in less than a year he was dead."

"You believe then that it has no symptoms of its own and is frequently unknown even by the person who is afflicted with it?"

"It has no symptoms of its own and very often none at all. Usually no two people have the same symptoms, and frequently death is the first symptom. The slightest indications of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one. I know what I am talking about for I have been through all the stages of kidney disease."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful is it not?"

"A very prominent case but no more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured."

"I know it can. I know it from the experience of hundreds of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience, what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentlemen on the street one day, saying: 'there goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proven true if I had not fortunately secured and used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure."

"And this caused you to manufacture it?"

"No, it caused me to investigate. I went to the principal cities with Dr. Craig the discoverer, and saw the physicians prescribing and using it and saw that Dr. Craig was unable with his facilities, to supply the medcine to thousands who wanted it. I therefore determined, as a duty I owed humanity and the suffering, to bring it within their reach and now it is known in every part of America, is sold in every drug store and has become a household necessity."

The reporter left Mr. Warner, much impressed with the earnestness and sincerity of his statements and next paid a visit to Dr. S. A. Lattimore at his residence on Prince Street. Dr. Lattimore, although busily engaged upon some matters connected with the State Board of Health, of which he is one of the analysists, courteously answered the questions that were propounded him:

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner some three years ago, Doctor?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"The presence of albumen and tube casts in great abundance."

"And what did the symptoms indicate?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No, sir, I did not think it possible. It was seldom, indeed, that so pronounced a case had, up to that time, ever been cured."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"

"Yes, I have chemically analyzed it and upon critical examination, find it entirely free from any poisonous or deleterious substances."

We publish the foregoing statements in view of the commotion which the publicity of Dr. Henion's article has caused and to meet the protestations which have been made. The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question and the statements they make, cannot for a moment be doubted. They conclusively show that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, alarmingly increasing and that it can be cured.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

Children's books abound nowadays, but I question if children are as well off as when their libraries were scantier. The opportunity for choice is so large that parents are commonly too bewildered to make selection, and end by taking the book the bookseller recommends, or which recommends itself by having the greatest number of pictures. Of illustrated books there are now a hundred where there used to be one. Illustration is in itself a good thing when the work is as well done as we find it to-day, but, except for the smallest juveniles, it ought not to be made of more importance than the text. It is a well-known fact that many publishers select pictures, and then order a story written to fit them; an author so hampered can never produce so good work as though his invention were given free play, and the result of his labor is often of the poorest. Comparatively few fathers and mothers interest themselves seriously to provide the best possible mental food for the growing intelligences in their charge. The want of a sense of responsibility in this matter is as astonishing as with regard to matters more important still. A child's mind is just as much dependent for its best development on the quality of the food furnished it as its body is upon its physical support. A child often gets more real mental culture from browsing at will in its father's library than it gets from all its school lessons. The school-teaching is mainly good for discipline of the mental faculty, secondarily for information; while the reading of books may be made a powerful instrument for moral training as well as for education of the higher qualities of the intellect,—imagination, humor and the like. There is a notion of the necessity for 'writing down' to the supposed level of the chilish intelligence, which is quite mistaken. A milk-and-water diet is inferior to one of the milk undiluted, figuratively as well as literally speaking. A compulsory cramming of the child's mind is one thing, and a very bad one; to surround it with the best literature, and leave it to its natural reaching out after what it can comprehend and enjoy, is quite another, and a very desirable thing to be done. The intellect of many grown persons, as well as children, is dwarfed, or becomes flabby, nerveless, and inactive, for want of wholesome and substantial sustenance. Children's reading, it seems to me, is at present especially defective in stimilus to the imagination. Fairy tales have not the vogue they had twenty years ago. I have seen children whose reading I knew was limited to that class of flavorless literature so plentiful now, and it was plain that their prosaic little minds needed above all things some of this culture of the fancy and imagination. They knew nothing of those most fascinating plays of my childhood, in which my brother and I used to live out of ourselves and out of the world of every day, having transferred our personality entirely, for the time being, into that of some favorites of fiction,—Robin Hood and his men, Friar Tuck, and King Richard, or any of the long list of Waverly-novel heroes. A move has been made in the right direction, of late, by the publication of certain classics of literature in a form suited to children's capacity. Such are the abridged editions of Froissart's Chronicle, Mallory's King Arthur, and other books which I have noticed on booksellers counters. Some of these are, unfortunately, gotten up with so much elegance that people of moderate means cannot indulge in their purchase. The established favorites in the line of fairy tales ought never to be allowed to get out of print, for the newly written ones do not approach the old ones in merit.—April Atlantic.

The hotel clerk is a young man who was originally created to fill an Emperor's throne or adorn a Dukedom, but when he grew up, their being fewer thrones and doms than there were Emperors and Dukes, he was temporarily forced to take a position behind a hotel register. His chief characteristics are dignity of bearing, radiant gorgeousness of apparel, haughtiness of manner, and jewelry. His principal duties consist in hammering on the call bell, in handing guests the wrong keys to their rooms, and in keeping a supply of toothpicks on the end of the desk.—Texas Siftings.

The good that men do may be interred with their bones, but the coffins of some men are not crowded.

A man has no more right to say an uncivil thing than to act one.—Dr. Johnson.

The Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina: "Sir, the best remedy in the world is Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup," and the latter seconded the assertion.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured." See other column. a

MOTHER DIED OF SALT RHEUM.—J. W. Adams, Newark, Ohio, says: "Cuticura Remedies are the greatest medicines on earth. Had the worst case of Salt Rheum in this county. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe Cuticura would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years which nothing relieved or cured until I used the Cuticura Remedies." m

A PLEASANT LETTER.

IT RINGS OF A GRATEFUL HEART AND GIVES HONOR WHERE HONOR IS DUE.

Mr. William W. Chadwick, of Hatchville, Conn., writes under date of June 14, 1880, to Dr. Kennedy, to say that the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" has cured him of Gall Stone, from which he had experienced anything but comfort for a long time. Mr. Chadwick felt wholly cured when he wrote, and says: "I have had no pain for six months, and have also regained my flesh and can stand a fair day's work. I recommend 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' to any one suffering from a deranged liver." Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them, expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your liver disordered? Have you derangement of the kidneys or bladder, associated with constipation of the bowels? If so, you want "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Dr. Kennedy practices medicine and surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. "Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

BOSTON, October 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, ESQ.—Dear Sir: You procured for me, in 1840, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you. Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

A Spring Song.

O Springtime sweet!
Over the hills come thy lovely feet;
The earth's white mantle is cast away,
She clothes herself all in green to-day;
And the little flowers that hid from the cold
Are springing anew from the warm, fresh mould.

O Springtime sweet!
The whole earth smiles thy coming to greet;
Our hearts to their innocent depths are stirred
By the first Spring flower and the song of the bird;
Our sweet, strange feelings no room can find,
They wander like dreams through heart and mind.

O Springtime sweet!
How the old and the new in thy soft hours meet
The brightness and beauty that could not last,—
Their fair ghosts rise with the ending of snow,—
The Springs and the Summers of long ago.

O Springtime sweet!
How thou once wert dear and fair and complete!
No sweetness of words nor of music could tell
The gladness that once made my bosom swell;
And thou art not the same as the Springs of yore,
For the beauty and blessing that come no more.

O Springtime sweet!
With silent hope thy coming I greet;
For all that in Winter the bright earth lost
Doth rise, new-born, with the ending of frost;
Even so shalt thou bring me—at last, at last!
All the hope and the joy and the love of the past.

(Written for the JOURNAL.)

SAVED AS BY FIRE.

One evening in the winter of 18— a jovial party of lawyers and court officials had gathered in the old turnpike tavern at D., (a thriving town in the Keystone State) to talk over the principal events of the term just closed, and pass in social conviviality the hours that intervened before the morrow's parting. The most notable incident of the last sitting of court was a strongly contested case of homicide, in which two-thirds of the community were involved, either as witnesses or active sympathizers with one side or the other. The evidence, though wholly circumstantial, seemed very conclusive to us younger members of the bar, and we were hardly prepared to hear the jury bring in a verdict of acquittal, which they did after being out but a short time. It was a new and rather unpleasant revelation to us of the devious and somewhat uncertain methods of that palladium of our liberties, the modern jury panel, and upon this evening we cited a mass of authorities and waxed warm in denunciation of the absurdity of such a verdict, as being opposed to both the law and the facts.

"Well, gentlemen," said Judge Harlow, the presiding judge, and oldest lawyer in the circuit, "When you get to be as old as I am, you will have much less faith in legal authorities and decisions as a specific for the ills that afflict the body politic. And you will learn to distrust any evidence, that does not in your judgment combine all the elements of truth and reason. Circumstantial evidence, especially, deserves the most careful and thorough sifting, and when that is done there will remain many misgivings in the minds of conscientious practitioners.

"I remember a trial similar to this that occurred nearly forty years ago, on the northern circuit. 'Squire Brown, a well-to-do and highly respected farmer on the Cowanesque, was found murdered a short distance from his home in a clump of bushes at the forks of the road, and Edward Walton, his nephew, was arrested for the crime, and put under heavy bonds to appear at the ensuing term of court. I had just been elected prosecuting attorney for that district, and like our young brothers here, I was full of zeal for conviction in every case where there existed any evidence worthy of the name. Accordingly, I applied myself to the case with all the energy I possessed, but was somewhat taken aback to find that while all the evidence, both direct and circumstantial, was against the accused, yet nearly every person in the entire township was a firm believer in his innocence. Indeed, as I came to see more of him, it was not difficult for me, notwithstanding all my prejudice in favor of his guilt, to understand the secret of his universal popularity. A fine manly looking young fellow of frank, engaging manners, and gifted with rare, magnetic qualities, he could hardly fail to make friends everywhere, and bind them to him with hooks of steel. The romantic features of the case also served to create additional sympathy for the young man and deepened the prevailing interest in the approaching trial. His betrothed, the daughter of one of the first families in the county, a royally beautiful girl, and an heiress in her own right, was untiring in her efforts to unravel the tangled web of fate, and to sustain and shield her lover from the terrible accusation brought against him. The circumstances that told heavily in presumption of his guilt to disinterested minds, was the fact that he had had a violent quarrel with his uncle, who was a man of ungovernable temper, over some business matters, on the afternoon previous to the murder, which was followed later on by a personal struggle at the gate where they were separated by the servants of the house. The points developed at the inquest were still more incriminating, as there was found clinging to the sleeve of the dead man's coat, a fragment of a gold chain which was recognized by those present as belonging to young Walton; and upon comparing them it proved to be a detached remnant of the identical chain always worn by him.

"The deceased was known to have a large sum of money with him upon that day, also several notes covering Walton's estate, over which he was guardian. Nothing could be found of the notes or money, either upon his person or among the papers and effects at his house. As the possession of the notes would, under the circumstances, be of value to no one but Walton, it was perhaps but natural that the fact of their being missed should be counted as evidence against him. Taking it altogether the prospect was pretty dark for the young fellow, with such damaging circumstances arrayed in opposition to him, and not a thing to break the force of them but his own unsupported statement in denial.

The day of the trial dawned dreary and dismal, the sky being heavily overcast with dark, threatening clouds, which soon fulfilled their promise by a pouring rain. But the court house was filled to suffocation, notwithstanding, and it seemed as though the largest part of Tioga county was in attendance. Of course much of the interest was occasioned by the popular regard for the young man and the romantic associations connected with him; intensified somewhat by a general desire to see and hear the counsel for the defense, consisting of three of the oldest lawyers in the State, who had been retained by the defendant's betrothed, Miss Ada Carlton.

The opening testimony of the witnesses for the prosecution, namely, the servants of the murdered man and those present at the inquest was clear and comprehensive. The manifest reluctance with which they testified to any damaging fact and a palpable leaning towards the accused, combined to render their testimony doubly effective in behalf of the State. To complete the chain of evidence and establish the guilt of the prisoner beyond the possibility of a doubt, the government called to the stand a witness who had but lately revealed himself. He gave his name as John Peters from western New York, by occupation a drover, and stated that he was traveling to Troupsburg, a neighboring town, in early twilight of the evening of the murder, and as he was turning a bend near the forks of the road, he saw a man emerge from the thicket, and looking hurriedly on either side, cross the track ahead of him and disappear in the woods. On being confronted with Walton he positively identified him as the person seen by him at that time. As this testimony was especially damaging to the prisoner and in fact closed the case against him, his counsel strove desperately to break the witness down. But the most rigid cross-examination failed to weaken the force of his statement a particle, or to disturb the cool, stolid composure with which he met every assault.

Just as they were about to close there was a commotion among the crowd near the outer door, and a huge, savage looking white dog, with a black spot over one eye and a piece of rope trailing behind him, made his appearance, gazed around for an instant, then uttering a short, joyful bark, bounded toward the stand and leaped upon the witness with every expression of affection. He was removed with some difficulty by the bailiffs, and during the interval, Miss Carlton, who had been sitting near the lawyers' table watching Peters with a fixed, intense gaze, as if striving to recall a lost incident connected with him, leaned forward and held an earnest and excited conversation with the attorneys for the defense.

As soon as quiet was restored, the senior counsel arose and stated that as they had just come into possession of important evidence favoring the defendant, they would ask for adjournment till the next morning, and he also requested that the witness be placed in the custody of an officer till they were ready to proceed with him. At the reopening of court, Miss Ada Carlton was called to the stand and testified that upon the evening of the homicide, while herself and brother were returning from a distant neighbor's by a bridle path through the woods leading to the Elkland turnpike, they heard footsteps ahead, and secreting themselves, saw a heavily built man, whom they were now sure was Peters, followed by a large white dog with a black patch over one eye, turn into a by path leading to an old half-ruined cabin formerly used by coal burners. This occurred not far from 9 o'clock, at which time Peters swore he was in Troupsburg, eleven miles to the west. The brother being sworn, corroborated his sister's testimony in every particular, both stating that, but for the appearance of the dog, they would have been unable to recognize him to a certainty. The county sheriff then testified to searching the old cabin after the adjournment of court and finding there several articles of disguise, false whiskers, wigs and other smaller items, also a portion of the rope, gnawed by the dog in freeing himself, and lastly they found in a hole covered loosely with leaves and boughs, a box containing the missing notes and papers of the dead man, together with the watch and much of the money taken from his person.

"When the sheriff's statement was finished every one present felt that young Walton would be saved. Yet the excitement, though in part repressed, was still very high, and as Peters was recalled to the stand, the nerves of all seemed strained to their utmost tension. He was less composed in his bearing than on the preceding day. The marvelous self-possession that he had maintained throughout that most searching examination appeared to have nearly deserted him. When he learned that upon the evening he had testified to being at Troupsburg, he was seen in the woods near Elkland pike, every vestige of color left his face; and as the watch and papers of the murdered man were produced, his eyes seemed to start from their sockets, and with a cry more like a wild beast than a man, he leaped over the railing to a half open door, right into the grasp of two officers who were stationed there to prevent his escape.

"Young Walton was promptly acquitted amid cheers that could not be restrained, and Peters remanded to jail to await further action. On the way thither he confessed the crime to the officers in charge, and stated that he was the leader of a gang of horse thieves that infested that locality 15 years before, many of whom the 'squire was active in bringing to justice. Upon being released from prison he came hither, seeking an opportunity for revenge, which presented itself upon the evening in question. Finding suspicion had settled on Walton he resolved to testify against him and thus secure his conviction, trusting to long absence and a changed appearance for immunity from recognition by any who might have known him in the past. There was great popular rejoicing at the result of the trial, and the noble girl, whose faith and constancy were so richly rewarded, was the theme of admiration on every hand. Her marriage with Edward Walton took place the following autumn, and nowhere along the fertile valley of the Cowanesque could be found a happier home than theirs.

Peters never lived to mount the scaffold. Judas-like, failing in his attempt at betrayal, he hung himself to the bars of his cell, and there the jailor found him, cold and pulseless, beyond the reach of any human tribunal."

WHAT MAKES CORN POP?—Chemists who have examined Indian corn, find that it contains all the way from 6 to 11 parts in a hundred (by weight) of fat. By proper means this fat can be separated from the grain, and it is then a thick pale oil. When oils are heated sufficiently in closed vessels, so that the air cannot get to them, they are turned into gas, which occupies many times the bulk that the oil did. When popcorn is gradually heated and made so hot that the oil inside of the kernels turns to gas, this gas cannot escape through the hull of the kernels, but when the interior pressure gets strong enough, it bursts the grain, and the explosion is so violent that it shatters it in the most curious manner. The starch in the grain becomes cooked and takes up a great deal more space than it did before.—American Agriculturist.

"How many tenses are there?" asked the teacher of the boy. 'Seven," answered the boy; "the present, the perfect, the imperfect, the pluperfect, the first future, the second future and the Oscar Wilde." "Why," asked she, "what tense is he?" "Oh," replied the boy, "he's intense!"

WEBSTER'S KNIFE AND FORK.

When Daniel Webster's father found that his son was not robust enough to make a successful farmer, he sent him to Exeter to prepare for college, and found a home for him among a number of other students in the family of 'old 'Squire Clifford,' as we of a younger generation have always heard him called, writes the Exeter (N. H.) correspondent of the Chicago Advance. Daniel had up to this time led only the secular life of a country farmer's boy, and, though the New Hampshire farmers have sent out many heroes as firm and true as the granite rocks in the pasture, there cannot be among the hard and homely work which such a life implies the little finenesses of manner which good society demands. Daniel was one of these diamonds of the first water, but was still in the rough and needed some cutting and polishing to fit him to shine in the great world in which he was to figure so conspicuously. None saw this more clearly than the sensible old 'squire. The boy had one habit at table of which the 'squire saw it would be a kindness to cure him. When not using his knife and fork, he was accustomed to hold them upright in his fists, on either side of his plate. Daniel was a bashful boy of very delicate feelings, and the 'squire feared to wound him by speaking to him directly on the subject. So he called aside one of the other students with whom he had been longer acquainted, and told him his dilemma. 'Now,' said he, 'I want you this noon, at the table, to hold up your knife and fork as Daniel does. I will speak to you about it, and we will see if the boy does not take a hint for himself.'

The young man consented to be the scapegoat for his fellow-student, and several times during the meal planted his fists on the table, with his knife and fork as straight as if he had received orders to present arms. The 'squire drew his attention to his position, courteously begged his pardon for speaking of the matter, and added a few kind words on the importance of young men correcting such little habits before going out into the world. The student thanked him for his interest and advice, and promised reform, and Daniel's knife and fork were never from that day seen elevated at table. When, after a vacation, Daniel's father brought the lad for a second term to Exeter, he put in his saddlebags a good fat turkey from the Franklin farm, which he gave to the 'squire as an expression of his gratitude for Daniel's improved manners. We have never heard further particulars, but we hope the self-sacrificing student got the 'lucky bone' when the fowl was served.

PROFESSOR GARDNER ON HARD TIMES.

'Dis mawnin', ez I war walkin' out 'mong the sunflowers in de back yard,' began Brother Gardner, as the janitor of the Lime Kiln club finally got through sneezing, 'Mister Darius Green, the white man, come 'long, an' dere was a powerful sad look on his face ez he leaned ober de fence an' said:

'Misser Gardner, dis sufferin' hez got to come to a cease?'

'Hez ye got de shakes an' chills?' I axed.

'Wuss dan dat, Misser Gardner. Ize workin' all de long week for ten shillin' a day, an' whar de money goes I can't tell. De ole woman wants new clothes, de chillin wants dis an' dat, de rent runs behin', an' Ize gettin' desperit.'

'Shoo! now but let's make some figgers on de fence,' I tole him. 'Now den you chew terbaccer?'

'Yes, I chew 'bout ten cents' worf a day.'

'Dat's seventy cents a week. An' you drink lager?'

'Well, of course I drink a glass now and den—maybe fifteen glasses a week.'

'Dat's seventy-five cents moah, sah. What d'ye do on Sundays?'

'Oh, go up to de beer garden.'

'An' you spen' a dollar at least?'

'I guess so—maybe two of 'em.'

'Say twelve shillins, an' dat makes two dollars an' ninety-five cents per week. I reckon you frow away at least free dollars ebery week, sah.'

'Frow it away?'

'Yes, sah. Dat money would pay your rent an' buy your flour.'

'But a feller must hev some comfort.'

'De same, sah. De greatest comfort in de world am to see de rent paid up, de family dressed up, de table loaded down, an' de ole woman able to go to church. You frow away free dollars ebery week, sah, an' den you go roun' cussin' de times, de wedder, an' de man who hez saved his money.'

'Gem'len, dat white man called me an ole black fool an' a dog stealer, but dat didn't alter de case a bit. He is frowin' away one-third of his weekly wages, an' den blowin' roun' dat he's gettin' desperit an' am ready to head a riot. Doan' let me hear eny member o' dis club spinnin' dat yarn, kase if he does dars gwine to be a committee of investigashun an' dat committee won't whitewash wof a cent!'—Free Press.

Here is how, according to Eli Perkins, a young man with $500 can make a fortune: Let him go to northwestern Iowa or southwestern Minnesota and buy 160 acres of land. Let him plant 50 acres of black walnuts, 320 trees to the acre. When these 16,000 trees are twenty years old they will be fifteen inches in diameter. They will be worth $5 a tree, or $80,000. At thirty years old they will be worth $20 a tree, or $320,000. Every year after the trees are ten years old the nuts will bring in more than a wheat crop.

A clergyman aptly says that there are three theories as to the manner of world this is, that we are living in. One is, that it is God's, because he made it; the second is that it is the devil's because he has marred it; the third is that it is man's, because he esteems it only to advance his interests.

A Philadelphia boy was asked if he ever prayed in church, and answered, 'Oh, I always say a prayer like all the rest do, just before the sermon begins.' 'Indeed,' responded the astonished querist, 'what do you say?' 'Now I lay me down to sleep.'

'Very odd,' said the compositor, as he stood mournfully gazing on a mass of pi; 'very odd, indeed. Stewed tripe for breakfast and strewed type for dinner.'

A little boy who has been used to receiving his older brother's old toys and clothes recently remarked, 'Ma, will I have to marry his widow when he dies?'

It is possible for a man to be so very shrewd that in the long run he cheats himself.

Jilted.

As white as snow, once—years ago,
See, now 'tis nearly amber!
Among these criss-cross hieroglyphs,
Abounding in her "buts" and "ifs,"
How I did like to clamber!

She always wrote on "White Laid Note;"
Just feel—it seems so brittle
That one might crack it by a touch.
Love her? Yes, I did very much,
Loved me? A very little.

You may peruse it, if you choose;
Love's fragile flower has wilted,
And this is but a faded leaf,
With which I mock the knawing grief
That comes of getting jilted.

That blur of ink? I used to think,
When this was anti-yellow,
A tiny tear had left that stain.
Yes? No! He held it in the rain,
Who's he? The other fellow!

THE IMPOSSIBLE GIRL.

He offered her a handsome opal ring. 'Excuse me,' she said, while a blush crept over her velvety cheek; 'opals are unlucky.' Then he fished a package of caramels out of his pocket and attempted to present it to her. 'I never touch them,' she murmured, languidly, 'as they destroy the teeth and draw the fillings out. My mother got some between her teeth the other day, and her jaws were held together so tight for two hours that she couldn't talk.' 'You must have had quiet in the house.' 'Sir?' 'I say you must have had a riot in the house. I mean that your mother must have been so provoked that she couldn't preserve her usual state of beautiful serenity, but was obliged to give way to her feelings, in spite of her heroic efforts to appear calm. Would you like to go to the minstrels to-night?' 'No, I thank you,' she whispered feelingly, 'I am always saddened by such woful dramas as 'Camille,' 'Hamlet' and 'Miss Multon;' and the last time I was at the minstrels I saw how those plays could be made more heartrending with the jokes of the minstrels worked into them.' He then invited her to take a walk, and partake of ice cream and other luxuries calculated to thrill the feminine mind with ecstasy. But she refused each and all of them. And the young man danced around with his pocket book in his hand, and thought what expense men would be saved if all the girls were like this one. And he sang:

I've found me the wife of the future,
I've found the Impossible Girl.

Then he woke up and ascertained that he had been dreaming. The Impossible Girl has yet to be discovered.—Puck.

AN EFFECTUAL TEMPERANCE LECTURE.

A young man called, in company with several other gentlemen, upon a young lady. Her father was also present, to assist in entertaining the callers. He did not share his daughter's scruples against the use of spirituous drinks, for he had wine to offer. The wine was poured out and would have been drunk, but the young lady asked:

'Did you call upon me, or papa?'

Gallantry, if nothing else, compelled them to answer:

'We called upon you.'

'Then you please not drink wine; I have lemonade for my callers.'

The father urged the guests to drink, and they were undecided. The young lady added:

'Remember, if you call upon me, then you drink lemonade; but if upon papa, why, in that case I have nothing to say.'

The wine-glasses were set down with their contents untasted. After leaving the house one of the party exclaimed:

'That is the most effectual temperance lecture I have ever heard.'

The young man from whom these facts were obtained broke off at once from the use of strong drink, and is now a clergyman, preaching temperance and religion. He still holds in grateful remembrance the lady who gracefully and resolutely gave him to understand that her callers should not drink wine.

SIMPLE REMEDY FOR FELONS.

'Felons,' which are usually termed 'whitlow' by physicians we believe, are a very painful and often a very serious affection of the fingers, generally of the last joints, and often near or involving the nails. As the fingers are much exposed to bruises, felons are quite common among those who constantly use their hands at hard work. If allowed to continue, until matter (pus) forms, and the periosteum or bone sheathing is affected, lancing is necessary; but if taken in time, a simple application of copal varnish, covering it with a bandage, is highly recommended. If the varnish becomes dry and unpleasantly hard, a little fresh varnish may be applied from time to time. When a cure is effected, the varnish is easily removed by rubbing into it a little lard and washing with soap and water. Dr. A. B. Isham details in Medical News, a number of cases of its application with uniform success, where formation of pus had not previously occurred. In two cases there was apparently a combination of the 'run-around' with the felon, and in all of them there was swelling, redness, heat, and great pain. He suggests the use of copal varnish for felons, 'run-arounds,' boils, and any local acute inflammation of external parts.—American Agriculturist.

The Mormon church has an immense 'perpetual immigration fund' to aid the coming of converts. There is constantly a Mormon shipping agent at Liverpool, and from the time the deluded people leave their homes in Europe until they arrive in Utah they are absolutely under control of church officers. They give all their property up to the church at the outset, and in Utah are put upon Mormon 'public works' to work out their passage. According to a revelation received by Joseph Smith in 1838 the proper 'tithes' are the giving up of everything at the start and the paying of one-tenth forever after.

The two large plates of glass exhibited in the main building at the Centennial exhibition in Philadelphia as the largest ever imported into this country, and since remaining there, were blown down in a recent storm and smashed into fragments.

It takes but thirteen minutes to load an elephant on a railroad train, while it takes twenty for any sort of woman to kiss her friends good-by and lose the check for her trunk.—Detroit Free Press.

"Can a woman keep a secret?" asks an exchange. She can. That is to say, she can keep telling it.

Forget other people's faults by remembering your own.

NEWSPAPERS.

Somebody,—if we knew who, we would give due credit,—writes thus tersely and truthfully of newspapers and their worth to the world: "The value of newspapers is not fully appreciated, but the rapidity with which people are waking up to their necessity and usefulness, is one of the significant signs of the times. Few families are now content with a single newspaper. The thirst for knowledge is not easily satiated, and books, though useful—yea, absolutely necessary in their place—fail to meet the demands of youth and age. The village newspaper is eagerly sought for and its contents as eagerly devoured. Then comes the demand for the county news, state news, national and foreign news. Next to the political, come literary, and then the scientific journals. Lastly, and above all, come the moral and religious journals. This variety is demanded to satisfy the cravings of the active mind.

"Newspapers are also valuable to material prosperity. They advertise the village, county and locality. They spread before the reader a map on which may be traced character, design, progress. If a stranger calls at a hotel, he first inquires for the village newspaper; if a friend comes from a distance, the very next thing after a family greeting, he inquires for your village or county newspaper, and you feel discomfited if you are unable to find a late copy, and confounded if you are compelled to say you do not take it.

"The newspaper is just as necessary to fit a man for his true position in life, as food or raiment. Show us a ragged, barefoot boy rather than an ignorant one. His head will cover his feet in after life if he is well supplied with newspapers. Show us a child that is eager for newspapers. He will make a man of mark in after life if you gratify that desire for knowledge. Other things being equal, it is a rule that never fails. Give the children newspapers."

Prof. Cook, the State Geologist of New Jersey, in his report for last year devotes considerable attention to the encroachment of the sea upon the New Jersey coast. The whole shore from Sandy Hook to Cape May, has suffered marked diminution in the last 100 years. Near Shrewsbury Inlet the water line has moved from 165 to 330 feet inland during the last 28 years. Opposite the old Long Branch Hotel the sea has crept 375 feet further up the beach, and opposite Whale Pond the encroachment reaches 525 feet at one point. Near Cape May the encroachments have been much more marked. For a mile and a half north of New England Creek the sea has moved inland 1040 feet in the last 187 years. At Cape Island the shore has worn away a full mile since the Revolution, and many valuable islands have been submerged. Prof. Cook thinks that this is not owing wholly to the breaking of the waves on the land, but says there is evidence that the sea level is higher than formerly.

The alligator's mode of obtaining a living is thus described; "He is a lazy dog, and instead of hunting for something to eat he lets his victuals hunt for him. That is, he lies with his mouth open, apparently dead, like the 'possum. Soon a bug crawls into it, then a fly, then several gnats and a colony of mosquitoes. The alligator don't close his mouth yet. He is waiting for a whole drove of things. He does his eating by wholesale. A little later a lizard will cool himself under the shade of the upper jaw. Then a few frogs will hop up to catch the mosquitoes. Then more mosquitoes and gnats light on the frogs. Finally a whole village of insects and reptiles settle down for an afternoon picnic. Then all at once there is an earthquake. The big jaw falls, the alligator slyly blinks one eye, gulps down the entire menagerie, and opens his great front door again for more visitors."

A well-dressed, but apparently rural gentleman, who dined sumptuously and in solemn grandeur at one of our hotels the other day, was presented by the waiter, on concluding his repast, with the usual finger-bowl with a thin slice of lemon floating about in it. After viewing the utensil doubtfully for a few moments, he raised it to his lips and took a deep draught from it. A look of profound disgust succeeded this exploit, and with the muttered remark, "Well, that's the darndest weak lemonade ever I see!" he filled his vest pocket with toothpicks and started for the outer air.—Boston Journal.

Temperance advocates, as well as scientists, will be glad to know that a group of scientific men in Paris are making systematic experiments upon pigs with a view of ascertaining the precise action of alcohol upon the processes of digestion, respiration and secretion. The pig has been chosen for these experiments, it is said, because his digestive apparatus closely resembles in all essential particulars that of man, and also because he is the only animal besides man that will consent to be dosed with alcohol.

An experiment which may prove of great importance was successfully made at Pittsburg recently, the object of which was to prove that boiler explosions are caused by a sudden expansion of water into steam, and that a horizontal perforated diaphragm placed in a boiler at the water will prevent explosions when a vacuum is created in the boiler by the release of steam. A large number of experts, who saw the idea practically tested, testify that the result was a conspicuous success.

Luther said, 'If a man is not handsome at twenty, strong at thirty, learned at forty and rich at fifty, he will never be handsome, strong, learned or rich in this world.' Luther no doubt struck the bull's eye as far as beauty, strength and learning are concerned, but he died before an office-holder had acquired the art of saving $2,000 a year out of a salary of $3,000; hence his remark about riches don't fit now.—Norristown Herald.

A miller out west fell asleep in his mill, and bent forward till his hair got caught in some machinery and was yanked out; and, of course, it awakened him, and his first bewildered exclamation was: 'Durn it! wife, what's the matter now?'

Prohibition is to be strictly enforced in Madagascar. Under a new law promulgated by the Queen, the manufacture and sale of liquor are forbidden, under a penalty of 'ten oxen and ten dollars.'

Mrs. Smith—'Poor Mrs. Siren. They say that she has been ordered to a warmer climate. Do you think she will go?' Mrs. Brown (grimly)—'No, not while she lives.'

SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1882.

GEN. GRANT has been seeking glory as a financier, by proposing a scheme for issuing $200,000,000 in 2 per cent bonds; but he could not get anybody at Washington to take hold of it, and it fell flat.

THE town of Chicopee feels itself big enough to assume city airs, and voted on Monday, 269 to 86, to instruct the selectmen to procure a city charter. When they get it, what a brilliant send-off Mayor George M. Stearns will give the infant city, in his inaugual address!

FATHER MCCARTHY'S murderer was acquitted by the jury at Greenfield last week Friday afternoon, and McMillen was set at liberty. The verdict was a surprise to all, and seems to have been rendered in clear defiance of the evidence and the instructions of the judge, the jury allowing their sympathies to overcome their sense of justice.

GOV. LONG appointed Thursday as a day of fasting and prayer; and the members of the House of Representatives spent it as a day of feasting and worldly enjoyment, in the shape of an excursion to Hoosac Tunnel. It don't seem as though an intelligent body of men could be so devoid of a sense of the proprieties of official life as this action of the House would indicate.

SOUTH CAROLINA Democrats are at a white heat of rage over Attorney General Brewster's recent order for the vigorous prosecution of the election officers under whose administration gross frauds are charged as having been perpetrated in 1880, and talk wildly about its being a direct attack upon the whites, and an attempt to "Africanize" the State. The hit bird always flutters.

DURING the month of March the public debt was reduced more than $16,000,000, making a total of over $30,000,000 for the first three months of this year. Since the end of the war the reduction of the debt has averaged over $142,000 a day, including Sundays. No other nation under the sun can begin to make such a showing as this, but we Yankees have got so accustomed to this sort of thing that we take it as a matter of course, and would be growling loudly if the monthly balance was on the other side of the sheet.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR on Thursday completed his cabinet changes by nominating Senator Teller of Colorado for secretary of the interior, and Wm. E. Chandler of New Hampshire for secretary of the navy. Judge Hunt takes the Russia mission, and Mr. Kirkwood goes home to Iowa. Mr. Lincoln alone remains, of President Garfield's cabinet. The President also nominated Col. Worthington, editor of the Boston Traveller, for Collector Beard's place—a nomination not acceptable to the Massachusetts Republicans. President Arthur plainly intends that the Stalwarts shall rule.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has justified the expectation of the more thoughtful and conservative people of the country by vetoing the anti-Chinese bill, which he returned to the Senate on Tuesday with a message in which he gave his reasons for so doing at length. He shows that the bill is a violation of treaty obligations, and also objects to it because the commercial interests of the nation would suffer from its enforcement. He recognizes the need of some modified legislation of this kind, but suggests that the term should be experimental. The message is a strong one, and shows that the President is capable of rising above the demands of partisanship. The Republican party on the Pacific coast may suffer temporarily from the veto, but better this than that a gross injustice should be done; and no party will suffer in the end for dealing justly with all. The Senate has refused to pass the bill over the veto.

Cornelius J. Vanderbilt, brother of William H. Vanderbilt, committed suicide at a New York hotel last Sunday afternoon, by shooting himself through the head. He had just finished a fine new residence in Hartford. The act is supposed to have been the result of mental derangement, caused by long suffering from epileptic fits.

The long Black Canon, in the Gunnison River in Colorado, through which the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad is to pass, is so narrow and the walls so high that the stars can be seen from its depths in the brightest day. In some places the walls are a mile in height and scarcely more than forty or fifty feet apart. The engineers have zigzagged the line across the stream.

Old Hadley was settled in 1659. The homestead occupied by the late Alfred H. Cook, who died a few days since, has been in the family over two hundred years, the deed by which it is held to-day having been given by the Indians.

Moses Taylor of New York has given $250,000 in first mortgage railroad bonds to found and maintain a hospital at Scranton, Pa., for miners, railroad men and others.

The spinners in the Sagamore Mill at Fall River struck on Monday, and the mills shut down at night for an indefinite period, throwing 500 operatives out of employment.

We have had another fire warning. Shall it be heeded? The conditions were again unusually favorable for preventing the spread of the flames to other buildings, but it may be well to remember that such favoring circumstances cannot always be expected.

Business was quite generally suspended in the village Thursday afternoon, but the only public observance of Fast day was a prayer meeting in the afternoon at the Congregational church, and the regular conference meeting at St. Paul's church in the evening.

Rev. E. A. Perry was greeted by a large audience on his first Sunday as pastor of the Universalist church, and preached an instructive sermon on the duties of pastor and people, taking as his text 1 Tim. 1:11. An interesting vesper service was held in the evening.

Thursday morning's fire demonstrated the need of a good hook and ladder company here, as well as of other means for fighting fire. One or two portable chemical extinguishers would be a grand investment. They would pay for themselves in a single fire.

The selectmen have appointed the following highway surveyors: James S. Loomis, Henry McMaster, Charles D. Foster, Jerre Dutton, Samuel Brown, J. R. Wellman, E. Shorley, H. C. Smith, James Olney, C. Blodgett, J. O. Hamilton, Frank Orcutt, E. M. Bartlett.

The State inspector of public buildings looked over the school house in this village the other day, and ordered additional entrances to be made—a need which has been apparent to everybody since the building was remodeled. It would have been much better if the entrances had been properly made to begin with, though it is better late than never.

At a meeting of the school committee on Monday evening, Rev. C. H. Ricketts tendered his resignation as chairman of the committee, Mr. Strong having claimed that there had been no organization of the board at its previous meeting. A ballot was then taken, which resulted in the re-election of Mr. Ricketts as chairman, and the choice of H. R. Stoughton as secretary, Mr. Strong declining to vote or to serve as secretary.

Wm. Jarman, the ex-Mormon, was greeted by a smaller audience at his second lecture at Wales Hall, Monday evening, than when he first appeared here, and the lecture was even more unsatisfactory than the former one, being partly a repetition of it, and containing little but what is already familiar to the public. Mr. Jarman gave another lecture last evening, to gentlemen only, in which he promised to reveal the inner secrets and mysteries of Mormonism.

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Boston & Albany Railroad will be held in Boston next Wednesday, to act upon the question of accepting the proposition of the State to exchange its stock in the road for the corporation's bonds, and also to see if the stockholders will vote to make the number of directors eleven. A good many stockholders are opposed to buying the State stock, and the meeting is likely to call out a large attendance.

The annual meeting of the Baptist society was held on Monday evening, when these officers were chosen: Moderator, E. Calkins; clerk, C. B. Fisk; standing committee, E. Calkins, C. B. Fisk, S. Edgerton: treasurer and collector, F. L. Brooks; ushers, F. L. Brooks, Cambridge Moulton, J. H. Haynes. The report of the treasurer showed a small balance on hand, with no outstanding liabilities. An adjourned meeting of the society will be held next Monday evening.

A man by the name of Spencer came to town from Warren the first of the week in search of a woman to take care of his wife, who was dangerously sick, but his appetite got the better of his affection, and he finally came to his senses to find himself in the lock-up for drunkenness. He was before the district court on Wednesday, and succeeded in borrowing enough money to pay the $5.65 which set him at liberty, so that he could look after his family. The three postponed liquor cases against Catherine Griffin of Bondsville were heard last Saturday. Catherine began to be somewhat alarmed at the accumulation of evidence against her, and promised the court to go out of the business entirely, as a plea for mercy. Judgment on the cases was accordingly reserved for a while.

The probate court transacted the following business for this part of the county at its session in Springfield, Tuesday: Adminstration granted on estates of—Otis B. Griffin of Palmer, L. B. Griffin administrator; James A. Carlton of Wales, Martha Carlton administratrix; Juliette R. Gardner of Brimfield, Homer Strong administrator; Milton A. Fiske of Springfield, Mary A. Fiske administratrix; Mary A. Kinney of Holland, Elisha Kinney administrator. C. L. Gardner was appointed guardian of Etta Kinne of Palmer, and Martha Carlton of Eddie A. Carlton of Wales. Inventories were filed on the estates of—Susannah P. Goodwill of Hampden, James O. Works and Horace Wallis, Jr. Sale of property was authorized on estate of Alvin Hastings of Palmer, and distribution ordered on estate of Susannah P. Goodwill of Hampden. An allowance was granted to the widow of Edwin J. Fisk of Monson.

There was a shocking collision on the New London Northern Railroad, a few rods from the Palmer station, on Wednesday. Conducductor Bentley was taking a little airing on Road Master Shanks's railroad velocipede, and invited Charlie Fish, the genial freight clerk, to a little trial of speed. The latter accordingly took another velocipede which was standing in the freight depot, and started after his challenger. Just as they were spinning along at a rapid rate the forward machine was suddenly derailed and capsized by striking a frog. The other one was close behind. The whistle was blown and the air brakes applied vigorously, and that Fish wiggled all his fins to the best of his ability in a desperate effort to back water; but it was "no go." There was a grand crash, and a general mixture of wheels and humanity, but the two gentlemen emerged from the ruins with smiling faces and scraped limbs, not much the worse for the affair, though their machines suffered some injury.

BURNING OF THE WEEKS HOUSE BARN.

A few minutes before 7 o'clock Thursday morning, the Weeks House barn was discovered to be on fire. When first seen, there was a cloud of smoke over the rear end of the barn, but a moment later the whole interior of the upper portion was ablaze; in another moment the roof was a mass of flame, and the barn, with the adjoining sheds, was soon destroyed. A better morning for a fire could hardly have been devised. Not a breath of air was stirring, and to this fact is due the preservation of the hotel, the Baptist church, and other adjoining property. Mr. French's little garden engine did capital service in protecting the L of the hotel, which extended back uncomfortably near the burning building; and the ice house, which was still nearer, was saved by the judicious use of a chemical fire extinguisher from Goddard's hat shop. The carriage shed adjoining the barn on the side towards the church was torn down, and portions of the other sheds were also torn away, the danger to surrounding property being thus materially diminished. When the large carriage shed fell, the roof came down upon Wm. Delehanty, who was at work under it, knocking him down, but he luckily escaped without any injury beyond a slight jar.

The horses, harness, carriages, etc., were safely removed from the building. There was not much hay in the barn, but 4 or 5 tons of straw, and 50 or 60 bushels of grain, a sleigh and some blankets, etc., were burned. The total loss will probably reach $4000. The barn was insured for $1000, divided among the Hartford, Home, North America and Rochester-German companies, and the hay and grain for $100, while the loss of some $200 or so on livery material is fully covered by insurance. The cause of the fire is not known. Mr. Weeks, and the men at the barn, had just gone in to breakfast, and within five minutes the barn was all ablaze. Soon after the fire broke out a call for help was telephoned to Springfield, and the Henry Gray steamer was loaded on a car, but the order was countermanded before she started, as it became evident by that time that the fire would not spread further. An amusing incident of the fire was occasioned by the excited act of a transient guest at the hotel, who, when the alarm was given, hastily arose and dressed, and then, after carefully throwing his companion's pantaloons and shirt out of the window, awoke him, and told him to hurry up and dress himself!

THE TOWN MEETING.

The adjourned town meeting was held last Monday, and the rare beauty of the day, as well as the importance of the business to be transacted, served to bring out a very full attendance. The matters remaining to be disposed of occupied almost the entire day, and the careful manner in which they were considered clearly demonstrated the wisdom of delaying action upon them until after the election of the regular town officers. Having once tried this system with so much satisfaction, there is no probability that the town will ever be induced to abandon it.

In the matter of appropriations, while a reasonable spirit of liberality was shown, there was no disposition to loosen the purse strings too much, and no expenditures were authorized which are likely to advance the rate of taxation beyond the very moderate figures of the past three or four years. The necessity for additional school accommodations at Three Rivers was generally conceded, and in order that the town might act advisedly in determining what should be done, a special committee was raised, consisting of C. L. Gardner, John Clough and David Milliken, with instructions to report the result of their investigations at an adjourned meeting. A committee on sewers was also chosen, consisting of S. S. Taft, Jos. Thompson, Geo. Mooers, H. McMaster and O. B. Smith, with instructions to consider the needs of all the villages and report their recommendations at a future meeting. A proposition to make some slight alterations in the school house in this village provoked a lively discussion, and a suggestion that the proper way to end the controversy about Dr. Ruggles's fence at Three Rivers was to bring a law suit, although persistently urged, did not secure the approval of a majority of the voters. An auditing committee was chosen, consisting of S. W. French, D. B. Bishop and F. A. Packard, and also a committee to ascertain if a clerical error in the last year's report, by which a certain school teacher appeared to have been paid $300 when she actually received but $100, made the town $200 richer than otherwise would have been. Drs. Warren and W. E. Holbrook, and Mr. David Knox of this village, Dr. Smith of Bondsville and D. B. Bishop of Thorndike, were constituted a board of health. The appropriations were as follows: Schools, $10,000; school contingencies, repairs, etc., $2150; poor, $3500; highways, $3500; contingencies, $2500; railings, $200; bridges, $1500; public library, $500; interest, $115; soldiers' monument, $200; Grand Army post, $75 for Decoration day; altering school house in this village, $400; total, $24,640.

The treasurer was authorized to borrow money at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent in anticipation of the taxes. The reports of the various town officers and of the building committee were accepted without much opposition, although the action of the building committee in expending a sum so greatly in excess of the appropriation was somewhat criticised. It was voted to continue the use of the present tramp rooms and lock-up; to pass the article relating to woman suffrage; to accept the new town ways at Bondsville, Thorndike, this village and Three Rivers, and to discontinue the old road leading to the Gilbert Barker place in the last named village. The meeting adjourned to Monday, the 17th inst., at 10 o'clock a. m., when it is hoped that the special committees on drains and the school accommodations at Three Rivers will be ready to report.

THORNDIKE.

A union prayer meeting was held Thursday evening at Murdock's Hall, in which the Congregationalists and Methodists united.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

C. H. Haskell advertises in another column to sell his 150-acre farm at auction next Tuesday, at 10 a. m., together with his live stock and farming tools.

BELCHERTOWN.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Aldrich, formerly of this town, have resigned their charge of the Marlboro poor farm, on account of Mrs. Aldrich's health, and are now visiting friends in this vicinity.

WEST WARREN.

Work is progressing finely at the new mill. It is all ready for the machinery. Flynt & Co. have four months' work there yet.

John McCormick and Wm. McAuliffe are to open a hotel in Crossman's Block May 1st, and also a variety store in the store which is soon to be vacated by Mrs. Kennedy.

ENFIELD.

At the town meeting on Monday, the town made choice of these overseers of the income of the Whiting Street fund: W. B. Kimball, Mrs. E. C. Ewing, Mrs. N. S. Chaffee, J. W. Martindale, Mrs. A. Hess. Appropriations: Contingencies, $1000; highways and bridges, $1500; schools, $1500; paupers, $500; interest, $525.

HAMPDEN.

The result of Monday's town meeting was as follows: Clerk and treasurer, Sumner Smith; collector, Nelson V. Chaffee; selectmen and overseers of the poor, William R. Sessions, Decius Beebe, Andrew Beebe; assessors, Mortimer Pease, Matthias Casey, William Leach; school committee, Mortimer Pease, Marcus S. Beebe. Appropriations: Schools, $1100; highways and bridges, $900; paupers, $1000; contingencies, $500.

WILBRAHAM.

These officers were elected at the annual town meeting on Monday: Clerk and treasurer, Charles E. Stacy; selectmen and overseers of the poor, Marcus F. Beebe, Hiram Danks, Philip P. Potter; assessors, Chauncey E. Peck, H. Herbert Burbank, Alvin Chilson; constables, James S. Morgan, Henry Clark, Fred. L. Stebbins, Calvin G. Robbins; collector, Hiram Danks; school committee, Jesse L. Rice. Appropriations: Schools, $2000; paupers, $1400; contingencies, $1500; highways and bridges, $1000.

THREE RIVERS.

There were no services in this village Fast day.

Rev. T. G. A. Cote of Lowell was expected to preach in French in the Union church Sunday afternoon, but he cannot until the 16th inst.

Rev. W. L. Noyes, the new pastor of the Union Evangelical church, has moved his family here, and will live in the house on Front street recently occupied by S. C. Gatchell.

The special committee appointed at Monday's town meeting to consider the needs of this village in regard to more school room, will meet our citizens in the vestry of the Union church at 5 p. m. to-day, to talk over the matter with them.

The Baptist church voted at a recent meeting to invite Mr. McKillop of Newton to become their pastor. Mr. McKillop supplied the pulpit two Sabbaths, a few weeks ago, and was much liked by all who heard him. Rev. Lester Williams of West Springfield will occupy the pulpit to-morrow.

WALES.

Bertie Tarbell was kicked by a horse Wednesday, cutting his face and tongue badly and nearly taking out one tooth.

Ex-Constable Farrington has gone into the meal business, and will keep all kinds of grain and meal from J. B. Gould's, Warren.

These officers of the Wales Savings Bank were chosen on Tuesday: E. Shaw, president; Warren Shaw, N. S. Hubbard, F. L. Burley, vice-presidents; E. D. Shaw, Geo. L. Webber, Geo. S. Roger, L. Agard, J. E. Hubbard, E. C. Sherman, A. A. Hubbard, J. A. Johnson, Wm. L. Webber, trustees.

Town meeting on Monday passed off in about the usual manner, as far as the business was done, the greater part of the business being left over to an adjourned meeting next Monday afternoon. The following officers were elected: Town clerk, O. P. Royce; selectmen and overseers of the poor, A. B. Johnson, P. W. Moore, George O. Henry; treasurer, A. B. Johnson; assessors, O. P. Royce, Charles Davis, E. L. Needham; school committee for 3 years, Frank A. Royce; constables, C. M. Gale, Willie E. White, O. L. Burley. On the question of license, the vote was nearly 3 to 1 against granting licenses. Quite a number who had been kept on hand to vote for license were loaded too heavily, and when the vote was taken on the question their legs refused to go, and they lay under a shed near by.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Fast day was but partially observed, the mills alone suspending operations.

The annual business meeting of the Evangelical church took place Thursday night.

Rev. F. M. Sprague will give the last lecture of his course at the Evangelical church Sunday evening. Subject, "Amusements."

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" Monday night.

One week from to-night the ladies of St. Aloysius church will give an entertainment in Wight's Hall.

The young ladies' industrial club proposes to give the drama "Rebecca's Triumph" some time soon—but won't tell how soon—in Wight's Hall.

John E. Stone has declined a position offered him with Whitmore and Clark's Minstrels, as end man and to perform his combination club acts.

Easter Sunday will be observed at St. Aloysius church with a very impressive service. The choir will render the Gregorian chant, accompanied by the brass band of 12 pieces.

Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden of Springfield delivered a lecture in the Evangelical church Sunday night, on the subject "Honesty is the Best Policy," charming a large audience by his sensible arguments. Dr. Gladden is ever welcomed at the Orchard most heartily.

WARREN.

The Congregational society will have quartette singing the coming year.

The Ladies' Temperance Union met with Mrs. Earle Wednesday afternoon.

"Aunt Polly Basset" gives a singing school Monday evening in the town hall.

The operetta "The Sleeping Queen," was given in the town hall Thursday evening.

Five ladies voted on the school question, Monday.

On Wednesday evening a large company gathered at the house of Mr. Strickland, to witness the marriage of his daughter. The bridal pair were the recipients of numerous and choice gifts. They left on the midnight train for their future home in Cincinnati, carrying with them the best wishes of their many friends.

The annual town meeting was held on Monday, and resulted in the election of the following officers: Clerk and treasurer, Samuel E. Blair; selectmen, John M. Drake, William H. Shepard, Joshua B. Rood; constables, John B. Sibley, Hosea B. Smith; assessors, Samuel N. Gleason, John P. Combs, Samuel E. Blair; overseers of the poor, J. P. Bixby, Orrin S. Bliss, W. H. Shepard; school committee for three years, John P. Combs, J. P. Bixby, J. H. Goodhue; one year David P. Moice; collector, H. B. Bosworth, the pay being $100. Appropriations: Schools, $8600; highways and bridges, $4000; poor, $1200; contingent, $1250; debt, $4000; interest, $1200; fire department, $800; street lights, $500; sidewalks, $500; abatement of taxes, $300; cemeteries, $400; new Maple street school house, $2500; new No. 5 school house, $600; public library, $500; State and military aid, $200; repairing town hall, $500; soldiers' monument, $300.

MONSON.

The branch post office has been moved to Jesse Pierce's store.

A. D. Ellis contemplates building a two-tenement house north of his Green street residence.

O. White & Son propose to give up their milk business before long, and go into butter making instead.

W. K. Stebbins, one of our school teachers, has resigned to take a position in the Springfield post office.

The Somers dramatic club gave an entertainment at Central Hall last evening, consisting of the drama "Enlisted for the War," and the farce, "Stage-struck Yankee."

The comical comedy "Mrs. Partington" is to be presented at Central Hall next Wednesday evening by Harris's comedy company from the Howard Atheneum, Boston, where it has been played with great success. The Boston Herald says of Charles Fostelle's impersonation of "Mrs. Partington": "It was a very laughable assumption of that garrulous, good natured, but very ignorant old lady, and if at last an excess of laughter rather takes some of the fun away from the ludicrous situations at the end, it is only because the audience laughed itself tired in the beginning. There is, in Mr. Fostelle's impersonation, much business that is new, and certainly quite effective. He is a clever actor and his "make up" an improvement on the ordinary style. Of course the mischievous Ike is a prominent feature, and Judge Tiftquick and Deacon Ablebody, the dame's rival suitors, are intensely amusing."

At the town meeting, Monday, W. J. Ricketts was chosen moderator, and the following officers elected for the ensuing year: Clerk, Carlos M. Gage; selectmen and overseers of the poor, Daniel G. Potter, Horace Squier, George L. Topliff; assessors, Joshua Tracy, Horace D. Moulton, Frank H. King; treasurer, Edward D. Cushman; school committee for three years, Edson M. Walker, Jacob L. Bradway, Rev. Ezra H. Byington, Fred. W. Ellis; constables, Frank L. Styles, Frank H. King, Charles L. Jewett, Eugene Ferrell, Joel H. Thompson, David Maney, William J. Ricketts. Appropriations: Schools, $6000; highways, $3400; contingent expenses, $3000; soldiers' memorial, $300; library, $400; addition to town farm-house, $600; to suppress illegal sale of liquor, $500; total, $16,200. D. G. Potter was chosen tax collector, and receives $175 for the service. Charles R. Dudley was chosen, together with the selectmen, as town prosecutors for the illegal sale of liquor.

BRIMFIELD.

The Star Base Ball Club of the Hitchcock Free High School had a game on Thursday with a picked nine from the Wales and Fiskdale clubs.

The Brimfields have organized a base ball club with E. Bent captain, and M. H. Davis secretary and treasurer, and are ready to receive challenges from other clubs. The club has formed an association, with a large membership, and looks for a successful season. The club is named the "Stars," and they have bought new uniforms, and will appear in them in the first match game, which it is hoped may be played at an early date, as the nine wish to play the first game on the home grounds. Considerable attention has been given to leveling, grading and improving the playing ground; a new catcher's fence has been built, and everything is new respecting equipments for the in and out field. Two of the best players met with a severe accident this week, having their fingers broken, and will be unable to play for several weeks.

The annual town meeting was held on Monday, with Francis D. Lincoln as moderator. Prayer was offered by Rev. Webster K. Pierce. The following officers were elected: Henry F. Brown, clerk and treasurer; Sanford Booth, Moses H. Baker, Oscar F. Brown, selectmen and overseers of poor; Edward H. Morgan, Samuel W. Brown, Orus E. Parker, assessors; Newton S. Hubbard, school committee for three years; Jonathan P. Webber, collector; Francis E. Cook, Needham Moulton, constables; Moses H. Baker, road commissioner for three years, John C. Spring for two years, Newton S. Hubbard for one year; Thomas J. Morgan, library director for three years; David W. Jones, Amos Munroe, Rufus Fosket, measurers of wood and bark; Darius Shaw, Thomas J. Morgan, David W. Jones, D. Winslow Fosket, surveyors of lumber; Daniel L. Griggs, Francis E. Cook, Henry A. Ryder, field drivers; auditors, town clerk, chairman of selectmen, and chairman of assessors; John W. Browning, sealer of leather; Needham Moulton, pound keeper. A committee chosen at a previous meeting reported recommending the purchase of an additional Herring fire proof safe, for the safe keeping of the town records and papers, and this committee, with the selectmen, were authorized to procure one. The appropriations were postponed to an adjourned meeting next Monday. The question of licensing the sale of liquors was decided in the negative, by a vote of 17 to 59. The woman suffrage question led to a warm debate, and the result of the ballot was a tie, 26 to 26. The town debt has been reduced somewhat the past year and now amounts to only $1300.

WARE AND VICINITY.

E. C. Fenn has broken ground for his new market on Church street.

D. B. Glines has sold his place on Water street to Patrick Shea for $2,500.

Work has commenced on the highways, and some of the streets are being much improved.

Andrew Bryson will open the branch dry goods store of Forbes and Wallace of Springfield, in the store recently vacated by Henry O. Draper, about the 11th inst.

William B. Lawton has commenced work at the brick yard, with the full complement of help, but it is not expected there will be so great a demand for brick as there was last year.

Some party took Jonathan Beers's horse from where he left it while attending the Methodist meeting Tuesday evening. It was afterwards found, the horse and wagon in different places.

The Methodist society have bought ten feet front on Church street, of E. C. Fenn, for $300. This will give them the needed room on which to turn the church whenever they desire to do so.

The French Literary and Dramatic club of Ware will give an entertainment at Gilbertville on Monday evening, the 17th inst., when they will present the popular drama in three acts entitled "L'Expiation."

Mrs. Clark closed her evangelical labors at the Methodist church on Tuesday evening. It is believed that much good has been done through her influence. Quite a number united with the church on probation Tuesday evening.

Fast day passed with scarcely a drunken man to be seen upon the streets. It is reported that the bottle was passed freely among some of those who came from out of town to attend the game of base ball, which probably accounts for some of the disagreeable conduct in that part of the village.

The concert by the Ware Musical Society on Thursday evening was in every way a grand success, Music Hall being filled by an appreciative audience, who by their presence showed their respect for the conductor, Mr. E. N. Anderson, as well as their great interest in the work in which he is engaged.

In view of the intimation given to the committee of conference by Henry P. Perkins that he desires a most careful and prayerful re-examination of those points of Scripture doctrine, the discussion of which has caused the present delay, and his suggestion that his ordination should not take place at present, the members of the council are agreed that the course proposed by the candidate is a judicious one.

According to the New York Evening Post, the telephone has been improved so much that conversation has recently been carried on with ease between New York and Boston. The sound of the voice is transmitted so perfectly that the call bell is unnecessary, the voice being distinctly heard forty feet away from the instrument. It is believed that conversation between New York and Chicago will be a matter of hourly occurrence within a year, and that eventually San Francisco will be brought into telephonic communication.

The semi-annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is to be held in Westfield on the 18th and 19th inst. Papers will be read by Mrs. R. W. McLaughlin, Mrs. M. A. Dorr, Mrs. M. C. Leavitt, Mrs. A. J. Gordon, Mrs. Livermore and other ladies, and on Tuesday evening Col. Geo. A. Bain of Kentucky will deliver an address.

A Brockton man set about repairing his roof the other Sunday—which had been partly removed for repairs—to protect his house from an approaching storm, and some overzealous persons had him arrested for Sabbath breaking. But the judge decided that his work was one of necessity, and discharged him.

Calvin Bullard, who died in Boston Sunday at the age of 81, was the oldest active member of the Handel and Haydn society, and until withing five years had not missed a single rehearsal or business meeting since he joined the society in 1823, while he sang regularly up to 1880.

The monument which Cyrus W. Field erected at Tappan, N. Y., on the spot where Major Andre, the British spy, was hung, was partially destroyed by dynamite early last week Friday morning, this being the second attempt which has been made to destroy it.

Apropos of the use of oleomargarine as an article of diet, it is interesting to read that its manufacture in St. Louis has been investigated by the board of health, and proof was obtained of the use of fat from horses and dogs.

A three-years-old son of R. B. Farley of Springfield was fatally burned on Monday, his clothes taking fire from a bonfire which he was watching. He died in a few hours.

Two steamers collided off Cape Finisterre, Spain, last Saturday night, and both sank. The number of lives lost is uncertain, but exceeds 30.

FIRES.—An incendiary fire at Hopkinton early Tuesday morning, burned over half the business portion of the town, destroying the town hall, library, post office, Orthodox church, ex-Gov. Claflin's large shoe shops, and several other large boot manufactories. The loss is about $500,000, and hundreds of men are thrown out of work. The fire is said to have begun with a loud explosion in the town hall.——A large building containing several firms of manufacturing jewelers was burned at North Attleboro Wednesday morning, with three houses, causing a loss of $200,000.

The management of the Connecticut State Board of Education by B. G. Northrop is being overhauled, in consequence of a recommendation in a recent report by him that school books be purchased from two firms of booksellers. Other dealers made war against him, and it seems that his clerk has been taking commissions for pushing the sale of certain books, and that Mr. Northrop has known of it.

The United States Supreme Court has affirmed a decision of the lower court to the effect that a man may have the delirium tremens, and yet not be a drunkard to such an extent as to impair the claim of his heirs for the payment of his life insurance policy.

IN THE WHOLE HISTORY OF MEDICINE

No preparation has ever performed such marvellous cures, or maintained so wide a reputation, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which is recognized as the world's remedy for all diseases of the throat and lungs. Its long-continued series of wonderful cures in all climates has made it universally known as a safe and reliable agent to employ. Against ordinary colds, which are the forerunners of more serious disorders, it acts speedily and surely, always relieving suffering, and often saving life. The protection it affords, by its timely use in throat and chest disorders, makes it an invaluable remedy to be kept always on hand in every home. No person can afford to be without it, and those who have once used it never will. From their knowledge of its composition and operation, physicians use the CHERRY PECTORAL extensively in their practice, and clergymen recommend it. It is absolutely certain in its healing effects, and will always cure where cures are possible.

For sale by all druggists.

WORTH SENDING FOR.

Dr. J H. SCHENCK, of Philadelphia, has just published a book on "DISEASES OF THE LUNGS AND HOW THEY CAN BE CURED," which is offered FREE, postpaid, to all applicants. It contains valuable information for all who suppose themselves afflicted with, or liable to, any diseases of the throat or lungs. Address J. H. SCHENCK & SON, 600 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa. P. O. A SPRING DEFENCE

HOW TO REPEL THE ASSAULTS OF ILL HEALTH—DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" MEANS SOMETHING FOR YOU.

The months of March, April and May are the three successive arches of a bridge which connect the season of ice and sleet with that of leaves and roses. No less in respect of health than of outward natural phenomenon is this true. Spring is a trying season for invalids, and particularly for those who either suffer, or are liable to suffer, from Biliousness, Kidney Complaints and Constipation of the Bowels, and for women who are chronically subject to any of the long catalogue of physical ailments to which their delicate sex is heir. Indications of disease in Spring should be heeded at once. A fatal attack may easily result from neglect or a disordered condition of the bowels. The ounce of prevention may be had where tons of cure—or attempted cure—may be unavailing. Are you vexed or troubled in Spring with indigestion, torpid liver, want of appetite, constipation, or a feverish state of the skin? If so, take without an hour's unnecessary delay, Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." No medicine is so harmless and yet so quick and positive in its action. It is Nature's own idea, condensed and made tangible by human skill. Do not leave home when going upon a journey without a bottle in your valise. You cannot possibly put one dollar in any other shape where it can render you so essential service. The "Favorite Remedy" is almost instantaneous in its action, but does not tear you to pieces with its violence nor nauseate you with disgust. It frees the liver from bile and sets the machinery of your body into normal and healthy operation. Remember: Dr. D. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. Ask your druggist for it and take nothing else. Price One Dollar a bottle. 4w2

A HUMAN BAROMETER.

THE REAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE HUMAN BODY AND THE WEATHER SCIENTIFICALLY EXPLAINED.

Scientific American.

One of the most valuable developments of modern science along the line of human necessity is the National Weather Bureau at Washington. Experience has shown that eighty-six per cent of the predictions of the signal service are accurate; and these predictions are unquestionably of the greatest advantage to the seaman, the agriculturist and the entire commercial world. The service has proven its necessity by its usefulness, for in past times the facilities for foretelling atmospheric changes were meagre indeed. The only indications our fathers had of coming changes in the weather were aching limbs, twinging joints or painful corns. These "indications," though crude, were usually correct, and hence naturally suggest the inquiry as to the relation between the human system and the weather. The body is unquestionably an excellent barometer. It foretells changes in the atmosphere long before they occur, and this fact has been taken advantage of by physicians who, when all other agencies fail, prescribe a change of air, hoping thus the body may find an atmospheric condition better suited to its needs. And yet the real relation between the human body and the weather has never been fully understood, nor has there ever been, until now, a correct explanation of what rheumatism (which seems in league with the atmosphere) really is. It was originally thought by many to be a trouble in the joints, and as such was treated in the most strange, not to say, ridiculous manner. This theory became dispelled when the same trouble attacked the muscles, and the feeling then prevailed that it was purely a muscular disorder. But this idea was found to be too narrow, and now it is universally conceded that rheumatism is a blood disease. And what a terrible disease it is. It often comes without warning and prostrates the system with agony. Again its beginning is gradual, and its growth slow. In its acute form it manifests itself in every conceivable shape and always accompanied by intense pain. One time it is inflammatory, another neuralgic. Sometimes it assumes the form of gout, and again that of pleurisy or lumbago; but in whatever manner it appears it is terribly painful and always to be dreaded. The pain and annoyance of rheumatism are increased by its great danger for it is liable to attack the brain or heart at any moment, thereby causing instant death. Indeed, nearly every case of heart disease with all its dreadful suddenness which has ever occurred, can be traced more or less directly to rheumatic causes. In its chronic form it stiffens the joints, contracts the muscles, undermines the health and ruins the life. It frequently attacks men and women who are apparently in perfect health. Indeed, it is as greatly to be dreaded as any possible form of physical woe.

But, however severe its effects may be, the exact cause of this blood trouble has been an undecided question, and it is only within the past year that any decision upon the subject has been reached. In order to fully determine what the cause of rheumatic disorders really was, certain authorities sent letters of inquiries from Washington to the leading practicing physicians of the land, and these inquiries were responded to quite generally, thus furnishing data of great value and science to mankind. The views held by the doctors are of a varied nature, but so overwhelming a proportion hold to one belief as to leave but little doubt that it is the correct one. This, briefly stated, is that uric acid in the blood causes rheumatism, and that it is only by removing this poisonous acid that rheumatic or neuralgic troubles in all their terrible forms can be cured. This being true, the important question arises: "How does this poisonous uric acid get into the blood, and how can it best be removed?" Uric acid is a waste material of the body which the kidneys should carry out, but because they are weakened they cannot throw it from the system. Restore the kidneys and you restore the power that will force the uric acid from the system and thus banish the rheumatic agonies which it causes. This is reason; it is science. No one whose kidneys are in a perfect condition was ever troubled with rheumatism, and no rheumatic sufferer, however slight the pain may be, has perfect kidneys. The conclusion of this truth is inevitable: perfect kidneys mean freedom from rheumatism.

When rheumatism has manifested itself in any special part of the body, attempts have usually been made to treat that part of the body. As a result, the pain has departed, but the disease has remained, lying subtly concealed and ready to break out at some unexpected moment. Checking the pain in any single locality only scatters the disease through the system, when, if the seat of the disorder, which are the kidneys, were reached, a complete cure would be the result. The way, therefore, to expel this rank and poisonous acid before it assumes an inflammatory or chronic form is by keeping the kidneys in absolute health. This is no easy thing to do, and no means has, until within the past few years, been known which would successfully reach and affect these great organs. At last, however, scientists have discovered that the leaves of a tropical plant, previously but little known to science and unknown to medicine, possessed marvelous qualities adapted for the kidneys. These leaves have been skillfully combined in the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It is, up to the present time, the only known preparation that acts so directly upon the kidneys as to effectually cure the various dangerous forms of kidney disease, and hence remove all uric acid from the blood. As a result, the cures it has been the means of performing are really very remarkable. Indeed, there are thousands of persons in America to-day who owe their restoration to health and entire freedom from rheumatism to this simple yet powerful remedy, which is known universally, manufactured in Rochester, N. Y., and sold in every drug store in the land.

From the doctors in the various cities of the United States who have certified over their own signatures to the scientific statements that uric acic in the blood is the cause of rheumatism, are a large number of Boston physicians, among them being Dr. A. P. Lighthill, Dr. John B. Foley, Dr. Fred. J. Garbit, Dr. M. L. Chamberlain, Dr. Albert N. Blodgett, Dr. John C. Sharp, Dr. Charles W. Stevens, Dr. Henry W. Bradford, Dr. Timothy H. Smith, Dr. Charles M. Newell, Dr. William A. Dunn, Dr. J. F. Perry, Dr. John Burke, Dr. Michael F. Gavin, Dr. Aaron Young, Dr. Elisha S. Rowland, Dr. Otis Gray Randall, Dr. Stephen C. Martin, Dr. George F. Bigelow, Dr. O. W. Dow, Dr. Morris P. Wheeler, Dr. Robert W. Newell, Dr. Franklin E. Patch, Dr. Darius Wilson, Dr. William F. Cornell, Dr. Henry Sohl, Dr. Nathaniel Downes, Dr. William K. Ripley, Dr. George C. Shattuck, Dr. William Ingalls, Dr. J. P. Oliver, Dr. Joseph F. Gould, Dr. Wilson Atwood, Dr. A. Fernald, Dr. Francis H. Brown, and Dr. Hamilton Osgood.

The theory of the doctors as above explained finds its confirmation in the fact that when the kidneys have been cured, rheumatism is completely removed. This is not, of course, always accomplished instantly, for in a disease so subtle, the cure is often very slow, but under no other plan can any hope of permanent relief ever be found. There are hundreds of cases on record during the present Winter of persons afflicted with rheumatic troubles of the worst order who have been entirely cured by following the theory above stated and using the remedy mentioned. Many of these persons had the very worst possible symptoms. Vague aches in different portions of the body were followed by agonies the most intense in some particular spot. Acute and throbbing pains succeeded each other and the coursing poisonous acid inflamed all the veins. Troubles which began with slight disorders increased to derangements the most serious. It is sad to think that all this suffering was endured when it could have been so easily relieved. Acting upon the theory and using the remedy above mentioned the kidneys could have been restored to their usual vigor, the uric poison expelled from the system, the inflammation removed and the pain entirely banished.

These are some of the real and scientific facts regarding rheumatism, attested by the highest authority and they are, beyond question, the only correct ones ever brought forth. We are aware they are advanced ideas, but ten years hence they will be the accepted belief and practice of the world. If people suffer from rheumatic troubles in the future and with these plain truths before them, they certainly can blame no one but themselves.

Some time ago a man came to a Baltimore lawyer's office in a state of great excitement, and asked him to commence proceedings for divorce. Mr. Dobbin heard him through and then said, "I think I have something that will suit your case. Sit still, and I will read it to you." The man remained seated, all ear, supposing he was to listen to Blackstone or Kent, when Mr. Dobbin began to read "Betsy and I are Out." By the time he had ended the man's eyes were full of tears. "I believe I will go home," he said. And he and his wife lived happily ever since.

Never Mind What "They" Say.

Don't worry nor fret
About what people think,
Of your ways or your means,
Of your food or your drink.
If you know you are doing
Your best every day,
With the right on your side,
Never mind what "they" say.

Lay out in the morning
Your plans for each hour,
And never forget
That old time is a power.
This also remember
'Mong truths old and new,
The world is too busy
To think much of you.

Then garner the minutes
That make up the hours,
And pluck in your pilgrimage
Honor's bright flowers,
Should grumblers assure you
Your course will not pay,
With conscience at rest,
Never mind what "they" say.

Then let us, forgetting
The insensate throng
That jostles us daily
While marching along,
Press onward and upward,
And make no delay—
And though people talk,
Never mind what "they" say.

GOSSIP.

What is gossip but the patent sign of vulgarity in heart and mind? Intellect that never rises beyond the small, mean facts of personal history, fluidity which cannot keep to itself what has been told even in confidence, and that goes about swelling molehills into mountains, can claim no respect, make out no case for itself against the decree of gross, vile, stupid vulgarity recorded against it. It is as thoroughly vulgar as is curiosity; and between prying into things with which we have no concern, and retailing gossip which is no business of ours to handle at all, there is not a hair's breadth to choose. Each is equally the sign of utter and entire vulgarity; and if one is the bull's-eye, the other is the gold. But both are faults to be found growing as rank as weeds by the wayside, and it would be hard to count upon one's fingers among our largest circle of acquaintance those who are absolutely free from the vice of gossip and the vulgarity of curiosity. So, too, intensely vulgar is that habit of talking people over indulged in by some who yet have all the outward seeming of thorough breeding. There are houses where one goes where the rule is to discuss, not always amiably, all those guests, misnamed friends, who have just left after dinner is over or the soiree has come to an end. Just as there are people who make it a rule to discuss, also by no means amiably, the host and hostess who have this moment entertained them, all the arrangements made in their honor, and all the guests who have been invited to visit them. There is no shame felt by these queer 'friends,' these now hosts and now guests, because there is no sense of kindness received or hospitality displayed. The thing is only a social bargain, a quid pro quo involving no delicacy, because devoid of all sincerity. It is a mere social form like saying 'Dear Sir' to a man for whom you have no regard, and signing an insolent letter 'Your obedient servant,' or a false one 'Yours faithfully.' So many dinners for so many, and then the account is squared. What never does come quite square is the amount of ill-nature that serves as the chasse cafe when all is done, and the guests fall foul of the hostess and the hostess sneers at the guests. It is only one step lower in the scale than the other act of vulgarity—criticising you to your face—in which so many people indulge. It is not the least well-bred of the two who accepts the annoyance quietly, and forbears to retaliate with the same weapons or different ones. Indeed, quietness and gentleness and the dignity which can bear unprovoked assaults without apparent annoyance, yet without craven submission, count among the very antitheses of vulgarity. Would that we had more of such good breeding in the world! As good grain chokes out the rampant weeds, so would tempers of that kind choke out the vulgar peevishness which 'shows a spirit' at every turn, as well as that still more vulgar insolence which provokes it.—The Queen.

There was a 'surprise party' last Saturday night in which the members of the party were the ones who were particularly surprised. Miss Esther G. is a popular and charming young lady of St. Clair street, and a party in her honor and for her pleasant surprise was gotten up by some friends. An enterprising young gentleman who was not invited, but who is quick at expedients, invited the young lady to accompany him to the theatre. He called for her at 7:30 o'clock, and a half hour later the company appeared. Of course they failed to find Miss G. at home, and three and a half hours of a dreary, monotonous wait ensued, and by the time the recipient of the 'surprise' arrived, Sunday was so close at hand that the festivities were brief. Thus did the young man who was left in the cold freeze out his adversaries.—Cleveland Herald.

"How do you manage," said a lady to her friend, "to appear so happy all the time?" "I always have Parker's Ginger Tonic handy," was the reply, "and thus keep myself and family in good health. When I am well I always feel good natured." See other column. a

A PLEASANT LETTER.

IT RINGS OF A GRATEFUL HEART AND GIVES HONOR WHERE HONOR IS DUE.

Mr. William W. Chadwick, of Hatchville, Conn., writes under date of June 14, 1880, to Dr. Kennedy, to say that the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" has cured him of Gall Stone, from which he had experienced anything but comfort for a long time. Mr. Chadwick felt wholly cured when he wrote, and says: "I have had no pain for six months, and have also regained my flesh and can stand a fair day's work. I recommend 'Kennedy's Favorite Remedy' to any one suffering from a deranged liver." Grateful patients are common. Dr. Kennedy is daily in receipt of letters from them, expressing similar sentiments. These letters are spontaneous and put in all varieties of phraseology, but invariably setting forth one thing—the value of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for many forms of disease. It may be just the thing you have been looking for. Is your liver disordered? Have you derangement of the kidneys or bladder, associated with constipation of the bowels? If so, you want "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy." Dr. Kennedy practices medicine and surgery in all their branches. Write and state your case frankly. Letters promptly answered. HAVE SIGNED OR ENDORSED THE FOLLOWING REMARKABLE DOCUMENT:

Messrs. SEABURY & JOHNSON, Manufacturing Chemists, 21 Platt St., New York:

Gentlemen.—For the past few years we have sold various brands of Porous Plasters.—Physicians and the public prefer BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER to all others. We consider them one of the very few reliable household remedies worthy of confidence. They are superior to all other Porous Plasters or Liniments for external use.

BENSON'S CAPCINE PLASTER is a genuine Pharmaceutical product, of the highest order of merit, and so recognized by physicians and druggists.

When other remedies fail, get a Benson's Capcine Plaster.

You will be disappointed if you use cheap Plasters, Liniments, Pads or Electrical Magnetic toys. 4 2w5

The Two Roads.

One summer day, long, long ago,
We, wandering side by side,
Came where, upon the country road,
Our paths must needs divide.

Your way led through the valley green,
Past meadow, brook, and mill;
Mine left these peaceful scenes behind
And climbed the rugged hill.

Shadowed and still, and cool, your road
On toward the busy town;
Mine, dusty, and hot, and barren lay,
Up, up, 'mid pastures brown.

And well we knew that, far or near,
Those roads would never meet,
For one kept to the mountain side,
One joined the village street.

But each led to a father's house,
So gladly on we pressed,
Content to know that just ahead
Were welcome, peace, and rest.

Years have rolled on, and, parted now
By sea and land, we stray;
Far distant are the country roads
We trod that summer day.

Fond love and sheltering care have kept
Your life-path smooth and clear;
I've climbed the weary "mountain road,"
'Mid pastures brown and sere.

But fainting, striving, toiling on,
One thought is passing sweet;
We're coming to our father's house,
Though here no more we meet.

RUTH'S PROFESSOR.

Hillsboro people were very musical. They took short trips to Boston very often to attend concerts and opera, and when the city teachers came out to Hillsboro they were always sure of a good class.

Professor Bahr held a two weeks' convention, and intended to wind up with an entertainment at the first church (no matter what the denomination was), in which all the leading singers were to take parts.

Now there ought to be harmony among musicians,—but there isn't always. There wasn't in Hillsboro, just at present. Miss Lucy Slemmons had been the leading soprano for many years. Not because she deserved to be, but because, like a good many other people in this conceited little world, she had assumed the place herself and wouldn't be put down.

Professor Bahr, with his quiet, German manner and his sharp, far-seeing German eye, saw through Miss Slemmons directly, and bore with her arrogant ways very patiently all through the convention.

It was true that several times when he wanted a difficult passage interpreted, he called sweet, brown-eyed Ruthie Gordon to the piano to sing it, and never seemed to notice that Miss Slemmons sulked the rest of the evening and would not sing at all. Still he gave her quite a place and attention enough to satisfy any reasonable woman. But Miss Lucy wasn't reasonable, and wouldn't be satisfied. She was mad enough to tear Ruthie's pretty brown hair all out; but she meant totally to eclipse her on the night of the grand concert, and so now she could afford to smile and be gracious.

"I do hope to goodness Professor Bahr will put Ruth in first soprano, and leave Lu Slemmons clear out," said the leading alto, when they were discussing probabilities on rehearsal for that night.

"So say I, Miss Clement," remarked the best basso.

"Don't believe he'll venture. The Slemmonses are hard to put down," remarked the tenor.

"Strong she may be—sweet she isn't," said the basso; "and I think I know what Professor Bahr will do."

"Well, we shall soon see," said Miss Clement, as they were called to order.

What Professor Bahr did do was to assign Miss Slemmons two or three parts, but not the best ones. When he came to them he said in his odd way:

"Mees Gordon, you vill sing de aria in 'Angels Ever Bright and Fair,' and you vill sing 'Who's at My Window;' Mr. Braun vill play the accompaniment. Mees Slemmons, you vill sing the solo in the next chorus, and de second soprano in de 'Greeting.'"

Miss Slemmons bridled, and her black eyes snapped.

"I'll do no such thing!" she said. "I've been used to the leading parts."

Professor Bahr fixed her with his quiet gaze.

"Who is de leader of dis class?" he asked.

"I suppose you are!" retorted Miss Lucy, insolently.

"Den you vill obey my orders or you vill leave de class; it matters not to me," said the professor.

Ruth, who sat silent and blushing, tried to speak, to say she did not care for the parts assigned her, but the professor marched grimly on to the next row, and gave her no chance, while Miss Lucy, who had no idea of being put clear out, subsided. But inwardly she was furious, and watched for a chance to revenge herself on Ruth, and the professor too.

After the rehearsal was over, Ruth went up to the piano where Professor Bahr was arranging his books, and said:

"Professor, please let Miss Slemmons sing my parts, won't you? I don't care about them."

"What, you naughty, too? No, I vill not let Mees Slemmons sing dem. May I see you home, Mees Gordon?"

"If you please," said Ruth, blushing hotly, and retreating very quickly for her cloak and books. It wasn't the first time Professor Bahr had walked home with Ruth Gordon or paid her little attentions.

But as they passed Miss Slemmons, she smiled oddly. Perhaps her revenge was not far off.

They rehearsed nightly the week of the concert, and for two or three nights Miss Slemmons was very friendly and cordial to Miss Gordon, praised her singing, and behaved wonderfully well. Wednesday night she came very early, and had a little chat with Ruth about a certain piece they were drilling upon, and was very kind and pleasant. Presently she said:

"Ruthie, I'm an old friend, you know. May I venture the least little bit of advice?"

"Why, certainly," said Ruth.

"Then I wouldn't, if I were you, let Professor Bahr walk home with me so much. Of course there's no harm in it, but when a man has a wife, you know it—"

Ruthie turned white, then scarlet, and said, huskily:

'A wife! Professor Bahr is not married!'

'Why, didn't you know it, Ruthie? I supposed every one knew it. He was married five years ago in Boston. It's a positive fact, and I can prove it.'

But Ruth had recovered herself now.

'It doesn't matter to me at all,' she said proudly. 'Of course he meant no harm by mere politeness. I thank you for your caution, Lucy. I shall not invite gossip.'

She walked away, and Miss Lucy smiled again. Her work was well done, she thought. She wondered if Ruth would be so distressed she could not sing. But no indeed! Never had Ruth sang clearer or sweeter. Professor Bahr was proud of her. He meant to tell her so after rehearsal, but when he looked for her she was gone. And he walked home with a clouded brow.

Ruthie, hastily bidding good night to the friends who were with her, ran home and flew up to her chamber to give vent, alone, to the shame and agony which was wringing her heart. She could not doubt what she had heard. Lucy said everybody knew it, and it could be proved. And, that being true, Professor Bahr was—why, he was a villain! that was all. But he shouldn't break her heart. Thank goodness, after the concert he would go away, and she need never see him any more; and until then she could treat him so he would never guess she cared.

She met him the next day and was very coldly polite; and at rehearsal she brought her father with her, and left before it was fairly over.

Professor Bahr met her again on the day before the concert, but she was still cold. He meant to speak to her, but she slipped away from him again. 'She does not sing one note till I know vat dish means!' growled the professor as he strode away.

He was not able to spare a moment to go to her, but fortune favored him. The singers were to meet in the small library back of the main room where the stage had been erected for the performers. Professor Bahr was there first, running over a list of pieces to be given as encores. In a moment Ruth came in, leaving her escort at the door. She would gladly have retreated, but it was too late. Professor Bahr called her and asked her some questions regarding her first solo. Answering him, she threw off her cloak and hood, wishing some one else would come in. The professor stood and looked silently at her for a moment. Her costume was a cardinal satin skirt, with white satin polonaise, looped at one side with cardinal ribbon, a second cluster of ribbons falling from her left shoulder; rich, soft lace-puffings filled the full neck and fell to the long, white gloves which hid the whiteness of her dimpled arms, while a slender cluster of cardinal flowers rested in her brown braids. The bloom of youth and beauty lit her cheeks, lips and soft, bright eyes, and it was no wonder the stern German heart was moved as the professor looked at her. One instant, then he strode to her side.

'Mees Gordon, tell me why it is you haf run away from me?'

'I—have I?' stammered Ruthie, flushing hotly.

'You know you haf! I haf not deceived you. I haf not lied to you. I will know what I haf done dat you treat me so.'

His look and tone compelled obedience. In spite of herself Ruth answered.

'Why did you not tell me you had a wife?'

'Because I have not any.'

When Professor Bahr was strongly excited he dropped the slight accent which clung to him.

'Miss Slemmons told me you were married in Boston five years ago, and she could prove it, for she knew well,' said Ruthie, clearly.

A strange light came into the professor's face.

'Ah, is that all? That is quite true what she told you, but why did she not tell you that my wife died in less than one year? she knows that well, too. I supposed you knew I was—and am—a widower.'

'Oh, no, I—' but Ruthie broke down there.

Some way Professor Bahr had the little white-gloved hand fast in his.

'I shall always be unless you promise to be my wife and go to Boston with me. You know I love you. I have enough to keep you in comfort. My little liebchen, say yes.'

'Yes,' whispered Ruth. 'O, let me go. Some one is coming!'

She snatched away her hands, and when the group of singers, who had arrived, came in, Ruthie was very busy with her music, and Professor Bahr was tuning his violin industriously.

But Ruthie's face was so bright and happy, and she sang so gloriously, that Miss Slemmons saw her little plot had in some way failed, and was ready to bite herself with vexation. But she couldn't afford to spoil her own voice, therefore she controlled herself.

The concert was a grand success, and pretty Ruth Gordon the star of the occasion. And after it was over, Professor Bahr walked up to Ruth, right by Miss Slemmons's side, drew her hand through his arm and walked away home with her, as happy as a king.

LAND-LOCKED SALMON.

Both the United States and the New York State fish commissions have been very much interested lately in the artificial propagation of land-locked salmon. This is a peculiar variety of the fish, and by many it is preferred to the salt water salmon. When the salt water fish get so far inland that they cannot get back to their natural element, they gradually adapt themselves to their new surroundings, and thrive quite as well in fresh as in salt water. The flesh is considered more delicate than that of the salt water salmon, but in outward appearance there is little or no difference between the two varieties, with the exception of fine black spots which appear on the gill covers, and are said to be peculiar to the land-locked salmon. The United States fish commissioners have succeeded in propagating these fish at Orland, Me., and the New York commissioners have met with equal success at Caledonia. The eggs are deposited in large jars filled with water. Some time ago some of these fry were deposited in Woodhull lake. Last winter about 20 of these fish were caught through holes in the ice and found to be in excellent condition. They were fully 18 inches long and weighed about a pound or more.

The Great West gives an instance of a town in Minnesota which licensed a saloon for $10, which sold a man a few drinks, who committed murder, and the trial cost the tax-payers of the county over $9000. However "we only license the traffic for the revenue it brings."—Temperance Ballot.

A little Livingston county, (N. Y.) girl anxiously asked, the other day, "Ma, if a bear should swallow me, would he go to heaven, too?"

The swell youth now bangs his hair. That is because his father did not sufficiently bang his heir.

FLORIDA ORANGES.

Oranges grow in the sun. All Florida is a bed of white sand, enriched by phosphates. These phosphates are in the shape of decayed animal matter. The sand is specked with shells, the occupants of which have died and gone to enrich the soil. So an orange grove is set out in a sand bed. Fifty trees are set to the acre, which gives each tree about thirty-five feet. Late orange raisers are setting thirty-five trees to the acre. The tree commences to bear when eight years old, and keeps increasing, so far as any one knows, forever. The age of an orange tree is not known. They continue to bear for no one knows how long. I saw trees forty years old. They were forty feet high, eighteen inches through, and bore 10,000 oranges. Col. Hart of Palatka told me that he had sold $200 worth of oranges in one season from one of those fine old trees. An orange grove has to be cultivated constantly. It is harrowed and cow peas are turned under to fertilize the soil. I believe there are now orange trees enough in Florida, when fully grown, to supply the world with oranges. Oranges commence ripening in December, and ripen all along till March. It is a delightful crop for a farmer to raise, because he has plenty of time to harvest it.

This is the way they harvest oranges: The oranges are cut off the trees with shears, and sorted by rolling them down a right-angled triangle open at the bottom. The little ones go through the opening first; and the very largest ones roll clear to the end of the trough. Then they are rolled up in paper, boxed up, and sent to New York—freight fifty cents a box. A box holds from 100 to 150 oranges. A tree will bear from 200 to 8000 oranges. Trees pay from $5 to $200 apiece annually. A tree paying $200 of course would be a phenomenal tree, very old and splendidly cared for. Col. Hart told me he realized $175 from one tree. Groves produce from $50 to $500 an acre, according to age and cultivation. An orange grove of twenty acres will sell for $40,000. There is much money made in the cultivation of oranges, but much patience and skill are required. Many Northern men have failed, because they simply set out the trees and then go away and leave them. They have to be constantly attended to. They are not a sure "bonanza;" and really only the patient, skillful and painstaking get rich in their cultivation.

Good sweet oranges in Florida are worth from $2 to $4 per 100. Boys all over Florida peddle small, delicious oranges two for five cents. The small, sour Valenciennes oranges, which sell in Chicago thirteen for twenty-five cents, would not be eaten in Florida. Some groves in Florida, well kept up and well fertilized, produce large, sweet oranges, which sell on the ground for $4 per 100. Such oranges would be sold for $7 in Chicago. The Mandarin orange, a new variety in Florida, is the highest priced. They are worth $6 per hundred in Florida. They are called the kid glove orange, because a lady can peel them without soiling her glove. They grow on small trees, seldom producing over 200 to the tree. The Tanzarin orange is produced by engrafting the Mandarin on to the native orange tree. The fruit is about the same. Both come from dwarf trees. Orange trees and pineapple plants can stand a good frost. Freezing kills them, but a good frost is a benefit. It kills the insects. So the best pineapple groves and orange groves in Florida are along the tropical belt.—Eli Perkins in Chicago Tribune.

MAKING DRUNKEN DESCENDANTS.

Drunkards are made in two ways—by habit or inheritance; the latter is the more hopeless form, because the appetite is more remorseless, more unappeasable—it is in fact a part of the nature of the unfortunate. Three-fourths of the idiotic children in a Massachusetts asylum were born of parents one or both of whom drank liquor. But if the father and mother were strictly temperate, yet, if during the few months previous to the birth of the child the mother uses spirituous liquors for any cause, just in proportion as she does so the child will inherit the appetite for strong drink. But if the mother is strictly temperate during the whole time previous to the child's birth, and yet if while she nurses it she drinks ale or beer, or porter, or spirits, 'to make milk,' or for any other cause, or gives the infant food or drink mixed with liquor, the child will be impregnated with the love of it. Thus it is that the surroundings of the mother during gestation and nursing, impress upon the child its physical and moral character; hence the improvement of the race must come from maternal influence, and hence the hopes of mankind for the amelioration of the condition of society in the future, its improvement in the physical constitution, in mental vigor or moral power, are founded in the proper education of daughters for maternal and domestic duties, and a higher appreciation of their vast responsibilities in the directions above suggested. On the other hand, man comes in for his share in the great work, as a father and husband, by giving his cordial co-operation to the same great end by all the means possible to him in labor, self-denial, and generous sympathies.—Dr. Hall.

A WOMAN'S WIT.—A woman's advice is generally worth having; so, if you are in trouble, tell your mother, or your wife, or your sister, all about it. Be assured that light will flash upon your darkness. Women are too commonly judged verdant in all but purely womanish affairs. No philosophical students of the sex thus judge them. Their intuitions or insight are most subtle, and if they cannot see a cat in the meal there is no cat there. I advise a man to keep none of his affairs from his wife. Many a home has been saved and many a fortune retrieved by a man's confidence in his wife. Woman is far more a seer and a prophet than man if she be given a fair chance. As a general thing the wives confide the minutest of their plans and faults to their husbands. Why not reciprocate, if but for the pleasure of meeting confidence with confidence? The men that succeed best in life are those who make confidants of their wives.—Independent.

Describing the cold weather down east, a man said that it was so cold sometimes that all the fishes froze, and he often used an eel as a walking stick.

It is perfectly astonishing how many things we are utterly unable to do—when we don't try.

The Prudent Merchant.

When vernal zephyrs softly sigh
Among the budding branches;
When geese, bent on a northward fly,
Wamose their winter ranches;
When little birds begin to sing
A matutinal chorus,
And from the earth buds upward spring,
Touched by the wand of Chloris;
When daily the unclouded sun
Glows like a great carbuncle,
And young men with their ulsters run,
To leave them with their "uncle;"
When folks begin to put on clothes
They could not wear in winter,
'Tis then the prudent merchant goes
And interviews the printer,
And acts at once upon the plan
That common sense advises;
He wants to be a wealthy man,
And, therefore, advertises.

HOW TO CROSS-EXAMINE.

Lawyer—'You say you know Mr. Smith?'

Witness—'Yes, sir.'

Lawyer—'You swear you know him?'

Witness—'Yes, sir.'

Lawyer—'You mean that you are acquainted with him?'

Witness—'Yes, sir, acquainted with him.'

Lawyer—'Oh, you don't know him; you are merely acquainted with him. Remember that you are on oath, sir. Now, be careful. You don't mean to tell the court that you know all about Mr. Smith, everything that he ever did?'

Witness—'No, I suppose—'

Lawyer—'Never mind what you suppose. Please answer my question. Do you, or do you not, know everything that Mr. Smith ever did?'

Witness—'No, I—'

Lawyer—'That'll do, sir. No, you do not. Very good. So you are not acquainted with all his acts?'

Witness—'Of course—'

Lawyer—'Stop there. Are you or are you not.'

Witness—'No.'

Lawyer—'That is to say, you are not so well acquainted with him as you thought you were?'

Witness—'Possibly not.'

Lawyer—'Just so. Now we begin to understand each other. If you don.t know anything about Mr. Smith's acts when you are not with him, you can't swear that you know him, can you?'

Witness—'If you put it that way—'

Lawyer—'Come, sir, don't seek to evade my question. I'll put it to you again. When you say you know Mr. Smith, you don't mean to say you know everything he does?'

Witness—'No, sir; of course not.'

Lawyer—'Just so; of course not. Then you were not quite correct when you said you knew Mr. Smith?'

Witness—'No, sir.'

Lawyer—'In point of fact, you don't know Mr. Smith?'

Witness—'No, sir.'

Lawyer—'Ah, I thought so. That'll do sir. You can stand down.'

TRY AGAIN.

A gentleman was once standing by a little brook, watching its bounding, gurgling waters. In the midst of his musings, he noticed scores of little minnows, making their way up the stream, and in the direction of a shoal which was a foot or more high, and over which the clear, sparkling waters were leaping. They halted a moment or two as if to survey the surroundings.

'What now?' inquired the gentleman; 'can these little fellows continue their journey any further?'

He soon saw that they wanted to go further up the stream, and were only resting and looking out the best course to pursue in order to continue their journey to the unexplored little lakelet that lay just above the shoal. All at once they arranged themselves like a little column of soldiers and darted up the foaming little shoal, but the rapid current dashed them back in confusion. A moment's rest, and they are again in the sprayey waters with like results.

For an hour or more they repeated their efforts, each time gaining some little advantage. At last, after scores and scores of trials, they bounded over the shoal, into the beautiful lakelet, seemingly the happiest little folks in the world.

'Well,' said the gentleman, 'here is my lesson. I'll never again give up trying, when I undertake anything. I did not see how those little people of the brook could possibly scale the shoal—it seemed impossible, but they were determined to cross it. This was their purpose, and they never ceased trying until they were sporting in the waters above it. I shall never give up again.'

A WEATHER HINT.—When you wish to know what the weather is to be go out and select the smallest cloud you see. Keep your eyes upon it, and if it decreases and disappears it shows a state of the air which is sure to be followed by fine weather; but if it increases in size take your great coat with you, if you are going from home, for falling weather is not far off. The reason is this: When the air is becoming charged with electricity you will see every cloud attracting all lesser ones toward it until it gathers into a shower; and on the contrary, when the fluid is passing off, or diffusing itself, then a large cloud will be seen breaking into pieces and dissolving.

In a dining-room at Pawtucket hangs a framed motto, beautifully worked in worsteds, reading as follows:

"What is home without a baby?"

Upon the opposite wall hangs another, executed with equal skill, reading:

"The Lord will provide."

'It's a terrible stroke,' said a sympathizing friend to a bereaved mother after the funeral; 'but your poor boy will be happier in the bright world to which he has gone.' 'I don't know about that,' returned the mourner: 'there ain't no birds' nests to rob there.'—Brooklyn Eagle.

A BEAUTY HERB.

There is a plant much in use among the women of eastern Europe in order to enhance and regain their charms, says the Washington Herald. Its properties have been known to Turkish women ever since the introduction of coffee into Europe. It is a little herb which grows at the foot of the mountains of Lebanon. A spoonful of it in a breakfast cupful of boiling water forms a delicious infusion, which may be drunk with milk and sugar like ordinary tea, but is far more pleasant to the taste. It assuredly has the virtue of retarding the ravages of age on all those who drink it daily. Dr. Paul Lucas, physician to Louis XIV., mentions it in his travels. He states that, having been called upon to attend the widow of Hassan Pasha, he was surprised to see her waited upon by two young women, of apparently 25 or 30 years of age, whereas he knew that it was customary for her to be waited upon by old women only. On expressing his surprise, he was told that both those young ladies were over 60 years of age, and that they owed their youthful appearance to the abundance of Serkys. Dr. Lucas carried some of it back to France and gave it to Ninon de l'Enclos, which explains the mysterious secret of her extraordinary youthful appearance when old. There is said to be a great run on this article in Paris just now, for the doctors have discovered that it purifies the blood, and thus preserves the skin fair and transparent as in early youth. It also makes the flesh firm, and it is particularly conducive to a full bust. In Turkey, where it costs but little, it is often mixed with the waters of the bath.

Since the remarkable discovery by M. Pasteur that sheep and other animals can be protected from splenic fever by inoculation, the practice of so treating animals has become common in France. The vaccine matter is carried in sealed tubes, and a graduated syringe attatched to a hollow needle forms the operating instrument. Sheep are inoculated in the middle of the thigh, the operator pushing the needle beneath the skin, and at the same time depressing the piston of the syringe to the first graduated mark. With a man to hold the animal, and another to operate, 150 sheep can, it is said, be treated in an hour. Oxen and horses receive double the quantity of vaccine matter, and the needle is applied to the shoulder or neck.

A remarkable discovery has been made accidentally in Dakota. It is a new fuel, an oil saturated rock as inflammable as the best cannel coal. Some men were blasting a ledge, when a piece of the rock fell into a fire near by and was quickly in a blaze. A pile of three bushels of the rock was set on fire and burned freely. This petroleum rock is soon to be tested on the Milwaukee railroad as fuel for locomotives. A piece of the rock about as big as a hickory nut was tried in a retort recently by a Yankton scientist, and found to contain three drops of petroleum. The inflammable property of the shale comes from this oil. It is said that the same material abounds along the Missouri river.

Sharon in this State has long been celebrated for the longevity of its inhabitants. The mortality list for last year shows the ages of the deceased to have been, respectively, 86, 83, 83, 83, 78, 77, 76, 76, 75, 74, 73, 72, 68, 62, 60, 57 and 23. Seven infants, under 7 months of age, most of them 'farm babies' from Boston, also died during the year. The average age of all but the seven infants was 70 years, 7 months and 9 days, and only 25 persons died out of a population of over 1500. Can any other town in New England show as good a record?

He read in a newspaper paragraph the statement that 'The child is father to the man,' and straightway went and asked his mother if that was true. 'Yes, my son,' she answered, 'it may seem a little strange to you, but it's true.' Abolish the feather duster. Use a cloth—wipe away the dust. Do you know just what you are doing when you brush away dust? You disseminate in the air, and consequently introduce into your own interior, into your tissues and respiratory organs, all sorts of eggs, spores, epidemic germs and murderous vibriones which dust contains.

A lady in town painted a plaque in the most exquisite manner and expressed it to a friend. Soon after a note of acknowledgment came, in which the lady stated that 'It is altogether too nice to use every day, so I only use it for a bread-plate when we have company.'—Rochester Express.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1882.

By an almost unanimous vote the House at Washington on Tuesday refused to concur in the Senate attempt to restore the franking privilege. They would like to have it, oh, yes; but they don't quite dare.

Occasional evidences of progress show themselves in the star route cases. Judge Wylie on Monday fully sustained the indictments against the ring, and every avenue of escape seems closed. The trials will take place directly.

John F. Slater, a wealthy manufacturer of Norwich, Ct., has started a noble philanthropy, by placing in the hands of ten trustees one million dollars, the income of which is to be used in educating the freedmen of the South, and their posterity. Ex-President Hayes is to be president of the board.

Guiteau's sister, Mrs. Scoville, has filed a petition at Chicago to be made conservator of his person and property, representing him as insane. Guiteau thereupon responds sharply, and calls both the Scovilles nuisances. But why in the world is this condemned murderer allowed to air himself in public after this fashion?

The House at Boston has voted to dump $250,000 more into the Hoosac Tunnel; also to pay Walter Shanly $45,495 for extra work in putting through the big hole. Here goes about $300,000, and there's "always more to follow." If the State would give away this hole outright, it would be the best thing it has done these many years—enough sight better than selling its Boston & Albany stock.

Vice President Arthur did all in his power to help his friend Conkling in his rebellion against President Garfield, for appointing a collector at New York who was distasteful to Conkling. President Arthur, however, does not hesitate to follow his predecessor's example, by nominating a collector at Boston who was opposed by both senators from this State, and almost the entire delegation in Congress. It does make a wonderful difference, generally, as to whose ox is gored.

The stockholders of the Boston & Albany Railroad had a lively meeting at Boston Wednesday, and so much opposition to the proposed purchase of the State stock was developed, and the crowd and confusion became so great, that the meeting was adjourned for two weeks to a larger hall. The officers of the road believe it will be a great benefit to get rid of the State directors, but a great many stockholders cannot see it in that light, though it is probable that the change will be made, when it comes to a vote.

There seems to be considerable perplexity in the Mormon camp in consequence of the passage of the Edmunds anti-polygamy bill, and the leaders hardly know what course to pursue. One report says they propose to scatter their wives, and retain control of the territory by electing monogamous Mormons to the offices; while another story is that John Taylor tells the people to live as their religion dictates and mind their own business, and God will protect them. If the government takes decisive steps to enforce the law, as it should, we shall soon know what they will do; but if the law is left to enforce itself, there will be little change among the polygamists.

One or two Boston banks propose to require of all their employes a solemn obligation that during their connection with the institution they will not speculate in stocks of any description, under penalty of a prompt dismissal for the first offence. When we consider the alarming number of defalcations during the past few years, which have had their origin, almost without exception, in speculation, it is strange that some action of this kind has not been taken before. When a bank officer begins to speculate, he steps at once upon dangerous ground; and where hundreds have fallen in the past, it certainly is not safe to assume that a man, even of the strictest probity, may not fall in the future.

The Baptist ministers of Boston and vicinity, at their weekly meeting on Monday, took occasion to protest against the present insincere observance of Fast Day, and adopted a memorial to the Governor stating that the day is no longer kept by the people as a time of penitence and self restraint, but as an occasion of rest and enjoyment—an insincerity that must be displeasing to God and dangerous to public morals; that in their judgment the civil authorities should proclaim a fast only in seasons of great and general solemnity, when it will be observed; and that if there must be a public holiday at this period of the year it should be appointed as a day of joy. A good many people will say amen to this. While it would be a benefit to the people, without doubt, to leave their ordinary vocations once a year and give themselves sincerely to fasting and prayer, it is folly to proclaim a fast regularly which is sure to be turned into a feast instead.

William H. Vanderbilt has just purchased on Fifth avenue, New York, a lot of land 100 feet front by 100 feet in depth, for which he has paid the sum of $400,000. He will erect upon it two houses for his daughters.

Editor Phelps, of the Springfield Homestead, is held in $200 to appear before the grand jury in May, for libel in publishing a picture of Edward McMahon as the "local Oscar Wilde."

For the first time since 1865, the revenues of the post office department for the past quarter have exceeded the expenditures, by over half a million dollars.

Isaac Plumley has returned from a trip to Florida, and talks of putting up a new house on his farm over the river.

J. F. Holbrook returned from New York last week with another driving horse, which gives indications of considerable speed.

The second installment of California excursionists passed through Palmer Thursday afternoon, occupying four sleeping cars.

The regular quarterly meeting of the trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank will be held next Monday afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

E. J. Wood has secured as clerk H. W. Hitchcock of Ware, who is well qualified by many years' experience for the position.

Preparations are being made by the ladies of the Congregational church for their usual May breakfast, two weeks from next Monday.

Adjourned town meeting next Monday, at 10 a. m., when the special committees appointed at the last meeting will probably report.

The overseers of the poor advertise for proposals from the physicians in town for medical attendance upon town paupers for the coming year.

There is some probability that Mrs. Leavitt, the well-known temperance lecturer, will speak in one or two of our churches to-morrow on temperance.

Selectman McMaster is at work on the highways with the scraper, which, drawn by six horses, does quick and excellent work in the way of turnpiking.

Mrs. L. E. Strong proposes to sell her South Main street residence, preparatory to building a fine new house on the farm opposite the agricultural park.

The old outside doors at the post office, whose narrow panes of glass were some time ago covered with boards, have been replaced by new ones, with large lights, making a decided improvement.

Madison & Lyman, who have the contract for building the tenement houses for the new wire mills, advertise in another column their readiness to take contracts for building and all kinds of wood work.

When the summer time table on the Boston & Albany Railroad goes into effect, it is understood that the time of the fast evening express between Boston and New York will be shortened up 30 minutes.

A broken draw-bar on a baggage car delayed the modoc train half an hour or so at this station, Tuesday morning. The baggage was transferred to another car, and the disabled one was left behind.

The Improvement Association is waking up from its winter's rest, and a meeting of the executive committee was held at the district court room last evening, to talk over plans for the spring work.

E. Calkins, L. M. Tenney, R. C. Newell and Alfred Heath have been drawn as jurors for the approaching term of the supreme court at Springfield. There are two murder cases to be tried at this term.

The usual large delegation from Palmer and vicinity attended the special meeting of the stockholders of the Boston and Albany Railroad at Boston, Wednesday, and an adjourned meeting to be held the 26th inst. will give them another free ride.

E. E. Hart has resigned his position in Holden's store, and removed to Bay State Village, near Northampton, where he has bought out the grocery and dry goods store of E. J. Towne. George English will probably succeed to Mr. Hart's position here.

"Slow and sure" seems to be the motto of the railroad companies in regard to the new union depot—"slow" at any rate; "sure" we hope. The authorities do not divulge their plans, whatever they may be, but it looks as though no action would be taken this season.

The Boston & Albany Railroad began on Monday the use of a new method of signaling at South Framingham, which allows trains to cross the Old Colony tracks without stopping. The railroad commissioners have given permission to try the system a month, and if it proves satisfactory and safe it will be continued.

S. S. Taft, agent of the Continental Insurance Co. of New York, last Saturday paid J. W. Weeks $345.50, in settlement of his loss on hay, grain and livery material by Thursday's fire; and on Monday Mr. Taft promptly paid Alfred Wallace of Monson $386.25 for loss on barn and contents, burned Sunday morning, and insured in the same company.

The Palmer Dramatic Club are trying to perfect arrangements with the Mrs. Partington Comedy Co. to come to Palmer and present their entertainment at Wales Hall in about two weeks. Two members of the club who have seen the play speak very highly of it, say the company is first-class in every respect and the play one of the best they ever witnessed, and they want very much to have our people see it.

Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Andrews, who have been supervisors at the State Primary School for the past eight years, have resigned their positions, and will soon remove to Mr. Andrews's old home at Johnson, Vt., where he will engage in mercantile and farming business. The positions which they have filled so efficiently at the school will be taken by R. R. Field and wife, of Wellesley.

The Tockwotton House has passed into the possession of the new landlord, Mr. Stone, who is making extensive alterations and repairs in the interior arrangements on the office floor, and is painting and papering throughout, while he also purposes to build a 2-story balcony on the front of the house. Mr. Turner, the retiring landlord, has moved into J. M. Converse's house across the river.

Landlord Weeks, of the Weeks House, is now occupying Col. Stoughton's and Mr. Aspinwall's barns for his livery business. He is having plans drawn for a new barn, which will be placed further away from the hotel, partly in the rear of the horse sheds back of the Baptist church, and facing to the south. In giving Mr. Weeks's loss last week, the types made us say $4000, instead of $2400 as we wrote it.

At the district court last week Friday Thos. Callahan paid $5 and William Allen $6.85 for drunkenness, and John Lynch $13.40 for disturbing the peace. On Wednesday Callahan was up again on the same charge, and paid $8.85. On Thursday similar complaints were heard against Hugh Hopkins, who paid $5.80, John Benson and Dennis Mahoney, who had no funds, and so went to the house of correction. Maurice Milligan paid $10.25 for an assault.

There has been a sharp advance in the price of beef within the past month, both at wholesale and retail. A couple of weeks ago the price of round steak went up from 14 to 16 cents, and loin 20 to 22, and now another advance has been made to 18 and 25 cents respectively. Our marketmen say they can hardly make themselves good at this price, owing to the heavy advance of wholesale rates. The foreign demand for beef has drawn heavily on the supply, and there is not likely to be any drop in present rates much before mid-summer.

The school committee have made arrangements with Prof. Chas. M. Carter of the Massachusetts Normal Art School, Boston, to deliver a course of lectures on "Drawing," at the high school. The first lecture of the course will be delivered next Wednesday, at 1.30 p. m. The exercises of all the public schools in town will be omitted for the afternoon, so that the teachers and advanced pupils may avail themselves of the opportunity of attending. Prof. Carter is remunerated by the State Board of Education, under whose auspices he lectures.

THORNDIKE.

The young people of this village spent an evening very pleasantly at Mr. B. F. Clark's, Wednesday.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. Lester Williams of West Springfield is expected to preach again at the Baptist church to-morrow.

Andrew Dumas's little boy James was playing on a pile of stones the other day, when one of them rolled over and on to him, injuring him so severely that he soon died.

BONDSVILLE.

The new hotel over the river was opened last Saturday.

Shea and Moriarity have put two awnings on the front of their block.

We have a new physician, Dr. Bailey, from Baltimore, Md., who intends to merit a share of patronage. He has opened an office in the house occupied by Henry Stone.

The Boston Duck Cornet Band gave Merrick Whitney a serenade one evening last week. They also gave an open air concert Saturday evening, which was much enjoyed.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The school at East Wilbraham will commence next Monday.

Dr. A. O. Squier is about to go West for a while, and his office at this place will be closed after Monday next.

John Kennedy, a miller in the employ of Cutler & Co., for 7 years, has left to engage in the tanning business at Medway.

The ladies of Grace Chapel had a very pleasant and successful baked bean supper Wednesday evening, at which they cleared about $21.

Mrs. L. O. Houghton, who has lived over Gates's store for several years, is breaking up and storing her goods. C. S. Fuller will move into the tenement.

WARREN.

C. E. Shepard has taken the Warren Hotel.

A tin shop is to be opened in Skipper's block.

Joseph Ramsdell will have an auction next Thursday.

A large number went to Boston Wednesday, on the stockholders' excursion.

Aunt Polly Basset's singing school Monday and Tuesday evenings was well attended.

Rev. R. R. Riddell of Wakefield, who was a Union spy in the war of the Rebellion, will deliver the address in the town hall here, on Memorial day.

Easter Sunday was observed at the Congregational and Methodist churches. The Congregational church was very handsomely decorated with choice flowers, and in the evening the Sabbath school had an Easter concert.

A convention of the Mass. Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be held in the town hall next Thursday. There will be several papers on temperance subjects, and in the evening Mrs. Mary A. Livermore will deliver a lecture.

BRIMFIELD.

Charles A. Brown has been drawn as juror for the April term of the supreme court.

The young people of the Second Congregational church gave an entertainment at the town hall on Tuesday evening, presenting the drama "Esmeralda," in a very creditable manner, which was well appreciated by the audience.

The house, carriage house, wood shed and hog house of Ansel Holbrook, three miles northwest of Brimfield Center, was burned Sunday afternoon. A part of the household furniture was saved. Loss estimated at $1200 to $1500. Insured. Mr. Holbrook has commenced to rebuild.

At the adjourned town meeting on Monday, the town reconsidered its former action, and voted to choose three overseers of the poor, and Henry F. Brown, Thomas J. Morgan and Edward Bliss were chosen. The following appropriations were made: Repair of highways and tools, $1200; bridges, $150; snow paths, $150; schools, $1600; repair of school houses, $100; paupers, $1100; officers' salaries, $500; miscellaneous expenses, $500; unusual, $500; discount on taxes, $300; town debt and interest, $500; total, $6600. It was voted to appropriate the dog fund to the public library, for the purchase of books; also that the road commissioners be requested to expend at least one-half of the appropriation for repair of highways before the first of July, and that after the first of September they make only such repairs as are necessary for the safety of travelers. The compensation of the collector was fixed at $60.

MONSON.

Frank H. King declines being an assessor.

Rev. H. Lummis will supply at the M. E. church to-morrow.

If the Village Improvement society should get a street sprinkler this season on Main street, what a blessing it would be!

Huldah M. Bliss was appointed administratrix of the estate of Hiram Bliss of this town, at a special session of the probate court at Springfield last Saturday.

The stockholders of the Boston & Albany Railroad were out on Wednesday in full force to attend the meeting at Boston, and don't seem to be very sorry about the adjournment.

It has been practically demonstrated that the discount on taxes brings prompt payment, and although opposed one year ago, the opponents now confess it was for the best interests of the town.

The Congregational parish at its annual meeting on Monday voted to raise the salary of the pastor $100, and chose the following officers: Prudential committee, C. W. Holmes, Jr., S. F. Cushman, E. F. Morris; clerk, Chas. H. McMaster; treasurer, Charles R. Dudley; auditor, E. F. Morris. The parish has a debt of about $600.

W. A. Deichman is receiving pupils who are desirous of learning the German language, and those who have availed themselves of his tutorage in this branch have made rapid progress. It would seem as if the study of German might be more beneficial in a business point of view than Latin or Greek, especially to persons intending to go west, where the German population is so largely represented.

Alfred Wallace's barn was destroyed by an incendiary fire last Sunday morning, together with a valuable colt and seven head of cattle. Insured in the Continental Insurance Co. of New York, who, through their agent, S. S. Taft of Palmer, promptly settled the loss on Monday morning, paying $386. The many friends of Mr. Wallace generously contributed $500 on Tuesday, to enable him to again replace the barn and stock.

Ike and Mrs. Partington had a full house at Central Hall last Wednesday evening, and burst after burst of laughter at the comicalities and "xsintrisitys" seemed to denote that the audience appreciated the talent representing the deacon, judge, Mrs. Partington, Ike and all the actors. A clerk in one of our stores was so overcome at the emotion of Mrs. P., when the deacon "popped the question," that he has shown "several symptons" since the entertainment, as well as a utterly utter sympathetic fellow feeling at the time.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The pay roll of the Otis Company for March will be a little over $35,000.

V. Guild has thoroughly renovated the store occupied by A. Bryson, as well as added a new front, giving some of the best show windows on the street.

Patrick D. Sullivan, janitor of the firemen's hall and engine house, has been appointed special police, to keep order in and about the building.

S. L. Gibbs has been in town the past week visiting his old friends. He has been in Hartford the past year, and is now going to New Hartford, to engage in the stove and hardware business.

Rev. C. L. Woodworth preached at the East Congregational church Sunday morning in the interest of the American Missionary Association, giving an account of the needs of the colored people in the South. In the evening Rev. Mr. Jones gave an interesting account of his experience with the Mormons.

The Clipper base ball club of Ware defeated the Warren boys on Fast Day by a score of 14 to 5, six innings. The game was then stopped on account of the storm. It is expected that the Clippers will play the Gilbertville boys in about two weeks. They are also trying to arrange a game with the Stars, of the Hitchcock Free High School, of Brimfield.

The first alarm of fire struck by the new bell on the engine house was last Saturday afternoon, and was caused by a little child of John Bushman pouring out a quantity of kerosene and then setting it on fire. The fire was quickly extinguished, but in doing it Mr. Bushman was quite severely burned. The child escaped without harm.

The town meeting, adjourned from the 20th of March, was held Monday afternoon. J. H. Storrs was elected assessor in place of William C. Eaton, who resigned. Thomas Tobin was elected constable. It was voted to raise Tax Collector Billings's salary from $150 to $200. The vote to raise $5000 toward the town debt was reconsidered, and the original article laid upon the table. J. W. Brakenridge, one of the assessors, resigned. Adjourned to next Monday, at 2 o'clock.

The Ware Musical Society met on Thursday evening for the last rehearsal and sociable of this season. The time was taken up with singing, and a bountiful collation, furnished by the ladies, after which the officers for the next season were chosen, as follows: Executive committee, H. H. Warner, W. J. Gates, C. Julia, John Kennedy, Mrs. H. O. Draper, Mrs. O. W. Roberts, Miss Etta Hitchcock. Musical committee, Edward N. Anderson, Geo. G. Hall, Mrs. L. B. Bond, Mrs. J. H. Osgood; secretary and treasurer, Miss Nellie Bullard. The society adjourned until the executive committee again call them together some time next fall.

The body of Mrs. Ellen Maguire, who disappeared so mysteriously December 21, was found upon the upper dam, soon after noon on Wednesday. The body was taken to the tomb, where Medical Examiner D. W. Miner, assisted by Dr. W. W. Miner, made an examination. There were no bruises or cuts found, and the clothing was no more disarranged than could be expected from her being in the water for nearly four months. Somehow about the body there were fastened a quantity of stones, but not sufficient to keep the body from floating. There being some suspicious circumstances connected with the case, the district attorney has been notified, and an inquest will be held.

The good work of temperance still goes on. In view of the many reports which have been circulated in town, and out, in reference to the injudicious sale of intoxicating liquors by druggists who are members of the East Congregational church, a meeting of the church was held on Fast Day, when a committee was appointed to draft resolutions upon this subject. The meeting adjourned to Monday evening of this week, when the following report of the committee was, with but one dissenting vote, unanimously accepted and adopted, all three of the druggists and others interested being present and giving their assent:

"Your committee recommend the following:

Resolved—That this church asks of those of its members in any way concerned in the sale of intoxicating liquors, to assent to the following or to such parts of it as are applicable to the case of each:

1. We will only take a druggist's license, and strictly observe its provisions.

2. We will neither sell nor allow to be sold on our premises any intoxicating liquors except upon a physician's prescription, or by a personal examination of those who apply for it, by which we are convinced that it is needed as a medicine, for which no other remedy could properly be substituted.

3. As a druggist, not a physician, I will sell intoxicating liquors only upon the written prescription of a regular physician.

4. We will not as owners or agents lease any building for the sale of intoxicating liquors, except upon the conditions above specified."

Choung-Chi-Lang, a Chinese giant, arrived in New York last Sunday with his wife. Choung is 35 years old, 8 feet 2 inches tall in his stockings, and weighs over 500 pounds. His feet are very small, only about 7 inches long, but his hands are about as large again as those of ordinary men, and he has a terrible grip. His wife is only 5 feet tall, and weighs 115 pounds. He will exhibit himself through the country.

The First National Bank of Portland, Me., was the first national bank established in the country, and its charter expires with this month. Congress having taken no action yet to enable banks to continue in business by a renewal of their present franchise, the directors of this bank have obtained a new charter, and will go through the form of starting over again.

President Arthur has just had two rifles finished up in the most elegant manner, and exquisitely ornamented, as gifts to the Sultan of Muscat and the Rajah of Taal Luban—the former in return for the gift of a large collection of native curiosities, and the latter as a reward for great kindness shown to the crew of an American bark wrecked on his shores.

Secretary B. G. Northrop, of the Connecticut Board of Education, has got to step down and out. At least that is what the Legislative committee which has been examining him recommends. He has paid too little attention to his official duties, and too much to outside matters, they think, besides being somewhat loose in his financial management.

The recent redistricting of Mississippi is said to be the worst gerrymander ever perpetrated, and it is causing widespread dissatisfaction in the Democratic ranks. One district has 70,000 more people than the one next to it. The blunder is likely to lead to a serious split in the party, and may result in giving the Republicans several congressmen.

The estimated total length of all the submarine telegraph cables in the world is 62,100 miles, and their money value is computed at $200,000,000. According to the estimates of a French statistician the total length of all the telegraph wires at present laid is sufficient to reach forty-six times around the world.

The falling off of orders for locomotives at Paterson, N. J., and the threatened discharge of many mechanics, is causing uneasiness there. It is said that orders for at least 150 locomotives have been countermanded at the various shops. There are indications of a lull in the railroad building excitement.

Judge May of Boston refused last Saturday to grant a warrant for the arrest of a fellow found assaulting a woman at the hour of 1 a. m., taking the rather singular ground that a woman has no business to be out unattended at such an hour.

FOOD FOR YOUNG AND OLD.—Food and medicine for young and old, prepared without fermentation, from Canadian Barley Malt, Hops, Quinine, Bark, etc. Malt Bitters are warranted more nourishing, strengthening, vitalizing and purifying, by reason of their richness in bone and muscle producing material than all other forms of malt or medicine, while free from the objections urged against malt liquors. a

WILL YOU SUFFER with dyspepsia and Liver Complaint? Shiloh's Vitalizer is guaranteed to cure you. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

SHILOH'S VITALIZER is what you need for constipation, loss of appetite, dizziness, and all symptoms of dyspepsia. Price 10 and 75 cents per bottle. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it. Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

NOTHING SHORT OF UNMISTAKABLE BENEFITS

Conferred upon tens of thousands of sufferers could originate and maintain the reputation which AYER'S SARSAPARILLA enjoys. It is a compound of the best vegetable alteratives, with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron,—all powerful, blood-making, blood-cleansing and life-sustaining—and is the most effectual of all remedies for scrofulous, mercurial, or blood disorders. Uniformly successful and certain, it produces rapid and complete cures of Scrofula, Sores, Boils, Humors, Pimples, Eruptions, Skin Diseases and all disorders arising from impurity of the blood. By its invigorating effects it always relieves and often cures Liver Complaints, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, and is a potent renewer of waning vitality. For purifying the blood it has no equal. It tones up the system, restores and preserves the health, and imparts vigor and energy. For forty years it has been in extensive use, and is to-day the most available medicine for the suffering sick.

PRESENTIMENTS.

AN INVESTIGATION OF THE CAUSES OF THOSE DARK FOREBODINGS WHICH MAKE POWERFUL MEN WEAK.

Golden Rule.

Much apprehension has been occasioned throughout America from the announcement made by Professor Proctor that the return in nineteen years of the great comet of last summer will cause the destruction of the earth. But while people are becoming so strangely exercised over this announcement, an event of far more serious importance, which is taking place to-day, seems to be almost wholly overlooked. The nature of this most vital subject can be best explained by relating the following experiences:

Bishop E. O. Haven, known to the entire land, was unaccountably awakened one night out of a sound sleep, and lay awake until morning. His mind seemed unusually active, and he not only reviewed his past life, which had been an eventful one, but laid extensive plans for the future. He did not feel especially ill, but could not account for the unusual activity of his brain, nor for the restlessness which seemed to possess him. In the morning he ate but little, but was apparently well in other respects. In a few days, however, he began to feel restless and morbid, although he tried earnestly to overcome the feeling which had taken possession of him. But try as he would the shadow of some evil seemed to follow him, and he was conscious of a gradual sinking and wasting away of all his physical facilities. He had been an earnest and diligent worker, and in his zeal frequently over-taxed his strength, and being absorbed in his duties failed to observe the common symptoms with which he was afflicted, thus permitting the work of destruction to go on unheeded. But the end finally came in a most peremptory manner. Shortly before his death he wrote a letter—the last one he ever indited—in which he speaks as follows: "A belief that death is near affects different minds differently, but probably all who are in a fair condition of physical and mental strength instinctively shrink from it with an undefinable dread and horror. A dying man is no more able of himself to foresee his own destiny or the destiny of those he leaves than he was before he began to die."

The recent sad and sudden death of Hon. Clarkson N. Potter is one of the most serious warnings ever given in the long list of innumerable cases of fatal neglect. It is not sufficient to say that many other brilliant men, including Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wood, Wilson and Carpenter, were swept away by the same fatal trouble. The question is, were these men sufficiently careful of their health, and could they have been saved? The Albany Argus, in speaking of Mr. Potter's sudden illness and death, says:
